Look, Ma—Cavities

As if we didn't have enough problems, there is always someone like Dr. Doran D. Zinner who makes life more complicated.

He is a University of Miami dentist-microbiologist who says that tooth decay is a very contagious disease and has little or nothing to do with number of candy bars you eat or the number of dental cavities your parents had.

"For many years we thought of tooth decay as hereditary," he said. "But now we know that if an individual does not have a certain type of bacteria in his mouth, he will not get cavities."

Zinner and four colleagues have been studying this abysmal problem for four years and they have reached the conclusion that decay bacteria can be transmitted only by direct contact.

The implications involved here might not throw the world into turmoil, but they certainly have the potential to affect our way of life. The fact that hits an exposed nerve is that the most effective way these bacteria can be "transmitted by direct contact" is by kissing, but Zinner admits, "This is not going to stop kissing."

We most surely agree and predict that no disease in history will be knowingly spread with such pleasure. In fact, a whole new approach to identifying boy-girl relationships could arise from this.

No longer will a girl say, "I have his pin."
She will proudly declare, "I have his cavities."

Trite Questions, Trite Answers

Winston-Salem Journal

Right now, President Johnson's National Crime Commission is supposed to be examining some fundamental questions about the nation's crime problem. But an article in a recent New York Times Sunday Magazine suggests that the commission is not even asking the right questions, let alone any very fundamental ones.

Two of the questions President Johnson asked the commission to answer were:

— Why is drug addiction increasing among young people?

— Why does organized crime continue to expand?

The author of the article, William M. McCord, a professor at Rice University, says that these questions are the wrong ones. For example, drug addiction is not increasing among young people; in 1915, the year after opiate addiction was declared illegal, scientists estimated that 215,000 Americans were addicts; by 1960, the Federal Bureau of Narcotics reported that there were only 45,391 known addicts in America.

Mr. McCord also suggests that if we put organized crime in historical perspective, we have to agree that whether there is more organized crime today than ever before is strictly debatable.

He observes: "New York's 'Bowery Boys' and the 'Dead Rabbits' of the 1860's the gangs of the Far West in the 1870s and Chicago's 'Mike McDonald Democrats' of the 1880s testify that organized crime has been an enduring, even a glamorized, element in American culture 100 years."

This is not to suggest that Mr. McCord takes a light view of the problem of crime, or that we do here. America, he says, is the most criminal nation in the world. "On a per capita basis, Americans commit about twice as many assaults as Frenchmen, triple the number of rapes as Italians and five times as many murders as Englishmen."

But what is apparent is that President Johnson's commission, like others before it, is asking trite but largely untrue questions. Like the FBI's Uniform Crime Statistics report, the commission's mandate is unintentionally misleading; it lacks perspective, and therefore the real relevance that we need to combat crime.

One thing is certain about crime: If we insist on pat questions, it is not likely that we will get much beyond pat answers.

Songs, Signs Attack LBJ

WASHINGTON — Leaders of Saturday's Viet Nam march failed to persuade left wingers not to carry extremist signs calling for the immediate withdrawal of American troops from Viet Nam.

The signs, along with Viet Cong flags, showed up anyway after Sanford Gottlieb, the protest's official coordinator, found he couldn't get radical groups like Youth Against War and Fascism to avoid parading these embarrassments in front of the TV cameras.

Even in a crowd of 25,000, ultra-leftist placards were conspicuous.

Some of the more emotional signs proclaimed:

— "Stop the Bombing!"
— "Bring the GI's Home Now!"
— "No More War — Never Again!"
— "Make Love — Not War!" (This is already a classic placard among the Viet Nam demonstrators.)
— "Don't Forget It — Americans Are Dying Too."

Perhaps the biggest farce was a dirty-faced man parading in what looked like an American Legion uniform. Several hundred persons identifying themselves as veterans attended. Like the clergymen present, they were organized into special march units.

And to really guarantee an aura of respectability, many marchers carried American flags. The mass demonstration might as well have been an American Legion convention rather than a gathering largely dominated by pacifists eager to avoid dying for "Old Glory."

But there was other entertainment, including a procession of black-robed figures carrying skulls across the stage of the Sylvan Theater while a protester moked President Johnson. The imitation LBJ solemnly intoned: "I am impressed by a classroom of healthy children, but guns and battle ships are also good . . . Often force is necessary." He yelled himself hoarse.

Ronnie Dugger, editor of The Texas Observer, piously assured the audience that he spoke "not for burners of draft cards, and not for those who want the Viet Cong to win (boos from some of the crowd)."

Dr. Benjamin Spock, the baby doctor who claims to have established himself as a foreign affairs expert, announced the sending of a "peace" telegram "To Pope Pius."

"He's obviously not a Catholic," somebody in the crowd acidly commented. The present pontiff is Pope Paul.

The pediatrician called the Viet Nam fighting "a war which has earned us the scorn of people everywhere." He labeled the Saigon government a "puppet dictatorship."

Spock said the Johnson administration "has become a victim of its own propaganda and intimidation."

Norman Thomas, whose main profession seems to be running for president (he did it six times on the Socialist ticket), said the government has forced "our boys . . . to kill, kill, kill . . . And we call this saving liberty.

"I'd rather see America save her soul than her face," he said. In saying these words, Thomas came close to tears.

Joseph M. Duffey, assistant professor of English at Notre Dame University, blasted American action of Viet Nam, but drew boos from certain members of the audience by criticizing "the inhumanity of the National Liberation Front (the Viet Cong)."

Rep. George Brown (D-Calif.) urged free elections throughout Viet Nam, as well as the creation of a peace force to promote Vietnamese neutrality.

Mrs. Martin Luther King, wife of the civil rights leader, associated the U. S. bombing of the Viet Cong with the terrorism of Alabama racists.

After Mrs. King's speech, folksingers crooned: "I ain't going to study war no more" — as if they were ROTC members protesting their military drills. "Everybody's got a right, yeh everybody's got a right," they sang.

Carl Oglesby, president of Students for a Democratic Society, called the Viet Cong's insurrection "a revolution as honest as they come." He related the recent Los Angeles racial riots to the struggle against American "imperialism" and pleaded for acceptance of minority opinion.

Near the end of the rally a youth sneaked onto the stage and shouted into the microphones: "Before we leave, we must not assume that the (Johnson) administration's foreign policy completely lacks rationality."

The dissenter was booed, and dragged off the stage by the protest leaders, who thought they had achieved a consensus.

Big Mo Welcome

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It has come to our attention that Craige dormitory, sometimes known as Maverick House, has become a Residence College. We at Morrison College wish to make it known that we both sanction and welcome this occurrence; as a matter of fact, we are very happy to welcome our little friends across the street to the ranks of the college men. Furthermore, we are glad to see that the leaders of Craige have finally done the right thing — to follow in the footsteps of "Big Mo."

Liberal Comment

Students Need Freedom

By TERRY FOWLER

A desire for the liberalization of the Campus Code has been manifested this fall by the report of the Ad Hoc Judiciary Committee appointed by Paul Dickson. When proposals to change rules that so directly affect the life of everyone are put forward in this manner, the basic rationale behind those rules should be reexamined.

There are at least two possible rationales that could be used to justify women's rules regarding curfews, signing out, and so on. One set of reasons involves the argument that it is proper for a young lady to be in by a certain hour, period. The Carolina gentlewoman should exercise a certain measure of moderation in her search for the Good Life.

A second rationale is that it is practical, for instance, to keep track of students (male as well as female, it might be added), or to have residence halls reasonably impregnable from unpredictable invasions of the opposite sex.

The first rationale, it should be stated flatly, grows out of parental rules. Home situations, however, vary widely. Parents who have kept offspring on strict rules and then send them away to college might be dismayed if that college did not have some rules that continued to restrict activity until the youngster is old enough to know better. When some people go to college they suddenly find themselves far more free; others subjct to the same rules have a gayer time at home.

The practical rationale grows out of living in a college community. The rules are concerned with making a particular institution work, rather than with making it work in a different way. It is assumed that to a certain degree the men and women come from a society at large bringing their own rules for conduct with them and adapt them when necessary to the particular community. It is further assumed that norms are largely internalized; they no longer need overt pressure for conformity.

In essence, of course, the rationale of parentally inspired rules is also practical. Morals are essential to any kind of organized society. One example of their practicality is that pre-marital sex is morally banned because the children likely to appear are deprived of a stable family environment. The inertia of such norms is powerful enough to have overcome attempts at rational use of contraceptives In any case, rules that have proved practical are imposed on children because at that time they don't know any better. They would be incapable of seeing the essential practicality for society and therefore for themselves of not lying, stealing, being sexually promiscuous, or cheating on exams The child does not see the alternatives to moral behavior.

The adult, however, is usually conscious of the choice he is making. I say usually because occasionally moral rules can be so powerful that they can preclude choice for an individual. Human experience though, is too diverse for moral precepts to give us unambiguous guides for behavior More than one rule will apply to any given situation, or no rules at all. Adults should learn to see alternatives.

Now, if parents and those presently responsible for redefining the Campus Code have any respect for the individual, they should, with grave consideration of the consequences, give young men and women the opportunity to make choices, to learn that few (if any) rules are universally valid

A woman governed by a curfew must go at one o'clock. Her choice is made for her. A woman with no curfew who tells her date she must be in by one may be unthinkingly following the dictates of her parents, she may want more sleep, or she may want to get away from a crummy date. At the age of 18 or 19 people should be learning to make choice between social life and studies, between deep emotional attachments and less disturbing relationships.

Many people try to escape the constant tension between conflicting rules that characterizes any intelligent man. Those who see communism and anti-communism as black and white, or those who see premarital sex or abstention as black and white — these people are taking the easy way out. The substance of their particular position makes little difference to their ultimate desire — psychological peace of mind.

If rules concerning social life at the university do not give the men and women the chance to face difficult alternatives themselves, then it will have failed in its function of providing society with responsible citizens, who will themselves be making rules one day, presented with situations where no rules or conflicting rules apply.

Craige Needs Investigating

Editor, The DailyTar Heel:

"Craige has won," was the cry from my friend across the hall as he read the Nov 20 DTH. That Craige could win the prize for the Best Dormitory Float, I find highly amusing since they missed the end of the Dook Parade by almost twenty minutes. I feel as do most people at Ehringhaus that this is an injustice. Like most people, I had always thought that the judging was done at South Building, the last stop on the parade route. And I had always believed that the prize was given for parade participation and showmanship as well as construction. How, therefore, could the crumbling blob of wire and paper, which had fallen apart three times and be over a half hour late reaching South Building possibly win. The only logical conclusion that comes to mind is that Craige might have been given the award before the parade ever began or, even yet, before their float was ever finished.

It seems that once again exceptions are being made for this group as they have been in the past. But what then can one expect when they are allowed to show movies of a disputable nature with the consent of South Building as they did last year; or lease beach cottages while still spending more than they are allotted by the MRC as they have done this year. With the present crackdown on dorm activities, how can such actions as these be so flagrantly overlooked. While committees are investigating I most heartily suggest that they look in Craige.

Needed: A Way Out

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I was interested to note in last Wednesday's DTH that it took the combined weight of eight student intellects to devise a Thanksgiving message to our soldiers in Viet Nam. I wonder what this portends for our ability to figure a way out of this mess once and if we turn out thoughts from buoyant euphemisms.

Men's, Women's Councils Hear 5 Cases; All Guilty

The Men's Honor Council tried two students on Nov. 23 for Honor Code offenses. Sentences of two semesters suspension and indefinite probation were given.

The Women's Honor Council tried a student on Nov. 22 on a charge of drinking to excess and being unable to conduct herself in a ladylike manner. She pleaded guilty and was given an official reprimand.

At the Men's Council trial a boy was convicted of forging checks at Y-Court totaling $350 between Oct. 19 and Nov. 19. He was apprehended Nov. 19 after trying to cash his third spurious $30 check that day.

The council said he devised a plan of pasting his ID picture on another student's stolen ID card, forging that student's signature, fabricating a non-existent bank and cashing the check.

Excessive costs of dating, buying clothes and operating a car were reasons given for the offense. The student pleaded guilty and was found guilty. He was placed on two semesters suspension.

The second boy pleaded guilty to misrepresenting the truth in a class report to his instructor. He had been given an assignment to write a report on a classroom observation. Failing to make the observation, he wrote the report anyway. He received indefinite probation.

The Women's Council heard two other cases the week before vacation. Both coeds were campused and placed on indefinite probation.

One girl was punished for failing to return to her dormitory on a Friday night. The other girl also failed to return to her dorm, remaining in Chapel Hill after hours. Both girls pleaded guilty.

Carolyn Kizer Reads Poetry Wednesday Nite

Poet Carolyn Kizer will present a poetry reading Wednesday, Dec. 1 in 08 Peabody Hall under the sponsorship of the UNC English Department.

The 7:30 p.m. reading is the first of two the English Department will present this year as a member of the North Carolina Poetry Circuit.

Miss Kizer is the founder and editor of "Poetry Northwest" and has published two volumes of poetry: "The Ungrateful Garden" and "Knock Upon Silence."

In addition, her poems have appeared in over 25 magazines, including The New Yorker, Atlantic and The Paris Review.

Her latest publication, "Knock Upon Silence," includes 21 selections translated from the Chinese poet Tu Fu. Copies of the book will be available for purchase and autographing at a tea following the reading.

Dr. Forrest Reed, former editor of Epoch magazine, will introduce Miss Kizer.

Poet William Dickey will be presented at a reading in the spring.

If communications were good enough you could stay in the sack all day

Moving your body around is highly inefficient.

If communications were perfect, you would never have to. Of course, you would still have to get exercise. But that's your problem.

We want to make it easier for you to contact people, learn, get information, attend lectures, and hold meetings.

We developed Picturephone* service so you can see as well as talk when you call. And be seen, too. We introduced Tele-Lecture service (two-way amplified phone calls) to let you hear lecturers in distant locations. And so you could ask them questions no matter how far away they were.

Right now, many students can dial from their dormitories to a language lab. Soon a student will be able to dial into a computer thousands of miles away to get information for his courses.

Depending on the nature of the information, he might get his answer back audibly, printed on a teletypewriter, as a video image, or a facsimile print.

Some of these services are available now. Others are being tested.

For the next week or so, better get a move on.

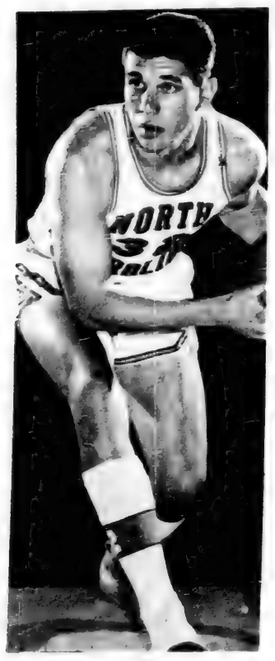
Pat Stith

DTH Sports Editor

Dean Smith, the man who will direct North Carolina's basketball fortunes this winter, sat in his office yesterday wishing it were Wednesday.

"We're ready," he said. "We'd like to play Clemson tonight. Our defense had not come along but over the last three weeks we've emphasized that phase of the game and now it's just a question of waiting. We're ready to go."

Smith's lineup is set. He'll go with 6-8 Bob Bennett at center, last year's number two scorer, Bob Lewis, and Larry Miller in the wings and Johnny Yokley and Tom Gauntlett in the backcourt.



Larry Miller

Bennett and Yokley are seniors, Gauntlett and Lewis, juniors and Miller, a sophomore.

Smith had decided prior to the opening practice that he would find five starters and go with them. He said that he would not juggle his first five through the first half of the season, as he did last year.

When subs are needed tomorrow he'll probably call on Jimmy Smithwick or Mark Mirken (6-6), putting one of them in at Lewis' spot and moving him to the backcourt in place of Gauntlett.

Smith is optimistic about his team's chances — "at this point in the season I think we can win them all" — but he is also realistic.

"If the kids keep coming along we can be as strong as we were last year," he said, "but the way the conference is this year I don't know if that's going to be good enough."

Carolina won 15 of 24 last season, including the last seven regular season games. Big wins came over nationally ranked Duke (two), N. C. State and Vanderbilt.

Duke, the ACC's regular season champ, is ranked third in the nation by the AP and fifth by UPI this year. Clemson and Maryland both have all five starters back. N. C. State, winner over Duke in the ACC tourney, replaces its lone graduating starter with a sub who won MVP honors in the tournament.

It'll be a hot time in the old ACC this winter, no doubt about it. And the Tar Heels will start out in the thick of it — in a steamhouse called Clemson Field House.

It's the Tigers' basketball version of the Valley of Death. No bigger than a matchbox, it holds just 3,500. They sit right down in the player's laps and yell like their tickets to future games depended on it.

UNC's opening practices in the poorly lighted Tin Can will be a blessing. Because besides being hot and close quartered and noisy, Clemson's home court is dark.

It'll be a good ball game. Clemson's junior team, all veterans now, is the best Tiger squad ever. Carolina has a good club, but one that lacks in height.

Smith said yesterday that win or lose his club will be interesting to watch because they'll be playing together and playing all out.

North Carolina's Danny Talbott—the ACC's best.

Talbott Is ACC Player Of Year

Tar Heel quarterback Danny Talbott was named ACC player of the year Monday by the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Association in the closest vote in the history of the Association.

Talbott edged end J. R. Wilburn of South Carolina and defensive back Tony Golmont of North Carolina State. Talbott received 20 votes, Wilburn 18, Golmont 16.

Talbott, 6 - 0, 185 - pound Rocky Mount native, passed for 1084 yards on 103 completions in 217 attempts. Three of those completions went for touchdowns. The longest was a 22-yard strike to end Charlie Carr in the victory over Maryland.

In addition to his aerial show, Talbott rushed for 397 yards in 96 carries for an average of 4.1 per carry.

Talbott's biggest offensive production came in the Tar Heel's 47-35 loss to Georgia. Talbott passed and ran for 318 yards breaking a Charlie Justice offensive mark set in 1948.

Talbott also broke another Tar Heel passing mark. His 217 passing attempts easily broke the old record of 185 set in 1962 by Junior Edge. In addition, Talbott's 103 completions ties the record in that department also set by Junior Edge in 1962.

Talbott just missed breaking another Charlie Justice mark — most points scored in a season. His 70-point total just missed the Justice mark of 72 points set in 1946.

It must also be noted that Talbott's career passing total of 1327 yards puts him in contention for the Tar Heel passing crown of 2,666 yards set by Jack Cummings (1957-57).

State star Golmont, a 6-2, 185 - pounder from Beaver Falls, Pa., was the leader in a strong N. C. State defense that intercepted 20 passes as the Wolfpack won its last five games for a 6-4 record. Golmont, who was drafted by the St. Louis Cardinals of the NFL, had seven interceptions for the season.

Other players receiving votes were: backs Hugh Mauldin of Clemson; John Pincavage, Bob Davis and Tom Hodges of Virginia; Jay Calabrese, Scotty Glacken and Bob Matheson of Duke; Shelby Mansfield of N. C. State and Joe Carazo of Wake Forest.

Soccer Co-Captains

Co-captains for the 1966 edition of the UNC soccer team will be fullback Jim Hammer and goalie Bob Johnson.

Trials Completed— Barnes Picks Crew

North Carolina wrestlers have completed a series of trials for starting positions. Coach Barnes has come out with the following outfit.

A new split in wrestling weight groups, creating positions at both 145 and 152 pounds, has enabled both Captain Roy Hagerty and Lane Verlenden into the lineup. Previously, Hagerty and Verlenden had to compete in the same position. Now, Hagerty will wrestle at 145 pounds and Verlenden at 152.

Jay Jacobson has earned the starting spot at 160 pounds, while Mark Manship will go at 167. At 177 is Fred Prieston and John Mundy will wrestle at heavy weight.

The team will open its season this Saturday with a double header.

Coach Barnes said that he likes to start off with a double header so that he can form two full teams and look at everybody.

"Boys in combat behave differently than in practice. In combat, some are better, some are worse," he said.

Coach Barnes says he is encouraged by this year's team. Both depth and experience found in eight returning lettermen will add better balance to the squad.

Further support is contributed by six other wrestlers who did not receive varsity letters last year, as well as by members of the 1964 freshmen wrestling team.

Hoop Tickets On Sale For Opener

Tickets for Saturday evening's basketball home-opener with William & Mary are on sale at the ticket office in Carmichael Auditorium. Ticket windows open at 8:30 a.m.

Student, staff, and some date tickets are available for the 8 p.m. contest.

Bleacher seats will not be available for Saturday's game. However, over 6,500 seats are available for the contest.

TRULY DISTINGUISHED CHRISTMAS GIFTS

In all North Carolina, there are probably no more than ten or fifteen people who could savor the full delight of any one of these books, but if one of those collectors happens to be on your Christmas list, no other gift you can buy at any price will bring so much pleasure. Nowhere else can you find a gift so unique, so certain to be treasured through a lifetime.

As you look through these titles, remember — there is only one copy of each title, and not even the old Intimate, with all its resources, could find another.

Rare North Carolina Books

BARTRAM — Travels through North and South Carolina (London, 1792). A nice copy of this classic, in an old three-quarter leather binding, with professionally reinforced hinges. $100.00

CONNOR — North Carolina, Rebuilding an Ancient Commonwealth. (4 volumes, New York and Chicago, 1929). A solid, handsome set of this staple North Carolina history. $85.00

IREDELL—Laws of the State of North Carolina (Edenton, 1791). Full leather binding, but the old backstrap has been replaced recently. $250.00

MARTIN — Francois Xavier Martin was one of the earliest North Carolina printers, and for our money, one of the best. In addition to his skill as a printer, he was a member of the North Carolina bar, and the author of a history of North Carolina, and another of Louisiana.

We are fortunate to be able to offer not one, but three examples of his rare imprint. Each has been treasured and kept in good repair, and each is bound in a very handsome, three-quarter leather binding.

for only $8.41

WOLFE, Thomas — Of Time and the River (1st edition, New York, 1955). A very good copy of the first edition, but lacks the dust jacket. $35.00

(Wolfe) — 1920 Yackety Yack! The very scarce annual for Wolfe's senior year at U.N.C. Many photographs and much comment. Worn copy. $45.00

Books About the South

BURK — The History of Virginia (Petersburg, 1804-1816). Four volume set, in an old leather binding, but the hinges are weak. $125.00

THE SOUTH IN THE BUILDING OF THE NATION — A very handsome 12-volume set, bound in three-quarter leather. The contributors to this milestone in Southern History read like a roster of the South's finest talent.

The 12 vol. set — $50.00

THE LIBRARY OF SOUTHERN LITERATURE (16 volumes, Atlanta, nd but c 1909). Edited by Edwin Anderson Alderman and Joel Chandler Harris, this set is a goldmine for the student of our part of the country. The set we offer here, in three-quarter leather binding, is the best and handsomest one we have ever seen. $60.00

The American Frontier

DOMENECH — Seven Years' Residence in the Deserts of North America (2 volume set, London, 1860). The map in this set is slightly torn, but all present; the color plates are out of this world, handsome and fine; the binding shows some wear, but is the best you're likely to see. Altogether a good gift. $55.00

PETERS — The Life and Adventures of Kit Carson (New York, 1858). A first edition, with the old original binding skillfully reinforced. $28.00

One Wonderful Gift for the Collector of

DICKENS

We have one set of the hard-to-find, and very handsome GADSHILL EDITION, consisting of 24 volumes of the works, plus the life of Dickens, by John Forster, in 2 matching volumes. Condition is excellent.

$120.00 for the set

Railroads to the Pacific

We have three volumes of the monumental reports on the explorations that preceeded the building of the transconinental railroad, as follows:

BIGELOW and others: Botanical Report — Covers trees, cataceae, mosses, and general botanical collections, with many fine plates. Binding shows wear, but is still sturdy. $15.00

BAIRD — Birds (Washington, 1858). An exhaustive listing and description of Western birds. Unfortunately, the volume with plates is lacking. $8.00

REPORTS FOR CALIFORNIA AND OREGON (Washington, 1857). Contains general narrative of the expedition, Geological Reports, Botanical report, and Zoological Report. Copious and outstanding illustrations, both in color and in black and white. $15.00

Other Suggestions

AMERICA ON STONE, by Harry T. Peters (New York, 1931). Big, important, here is a listing of more than 100 American lithographers of the early days, illustrated with black and white and color reproductions. A landmark in its field, our copy is very good, and still in the original dust jacket. $40.00

AMERICAN FURNITURE, by Joseph Downs. (New York, 1952). Description and pictures of the Queen Anne and Chippendale furniture in Winterthur. An excellent copy, still in dust jacket. $12.50

FATHERS AND SONS — by Ivan Turgen. (Limited Editions Club, 1951). Illustrations by Fritz Eichenberg, and signed by him. A nice copy. $18.50

MEMOIRS OF CASANOVA — In French. (Paris, 1924) A very handsome 12-volume set, in three-quarter brown leather. The perfect gift for a sprightly scholar. $85.00

N. C. Accreditation Status Report Due Today From SASC

RICHMOND, Va (AP) — A report on the status of North Carolina's public colleges and university accreditation, now that the state's controversial Speaker Ban Law has been drastically amended, is due today in Richmond.

The Commission on Education of the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities is to hear a report on the North Carolina matter from the association's executive council at a closed door meeting in the morning.

A spokesman indicated after the executive council met Sunday that accreditation would not be withdrawn from the 11 Tar Heel colleges and the four branches of the Consolidate University of North Carolina.

Before the Speaker Ban Law was amended, officials of the association has threatened withdrawal of accreditation, claiming the statute amounted to political interference in the education system.

The Speaker Ban Law, as enacted in 1963, banned Communists and persons who pleaded the Fifth Amendment in security cases from speaking on campuses of state-supported colleges and the University.

A special session of the General Assembly, called by Gov. Dan Moore, amended the law two weeks ago to return to trustees of the schools the decision on which speakers will be acceptable.

Only the week before, boards of trustees of all the schools involved adopted a uniform speakers policy, which says Communists should be invited to speak only "in the interest of education" and the number of Communist visits should be limited.

The speaker policy and amendment of the controversial law were recommended by a blue ribbon study commission appointed by Gov. Moore.

The commission held a series of public hearings in August and September and numerous closed door sessions before making the recommendations public Nov. 5.

At the public hearings, officials of the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities protested the Speaker Ban Law and said its existence could lead to a withdrawal of accrediation.

Watts Hill Jr. of Durham, chairman of the North Carolina Board of Higher Education met with the association's executive council Sunday and said afterwards he believed the schools will "meet the accreditation standards and prove satisfactory."

Blackwell Resigns His Finance Post

Hugh Blackwell, Chairman of the Finance Committee of Student Legislature, announced his resignation from the chairmanship in a recent letter to SL speaker Brit Gordon.

Blackwell, a powerful figure in the legislature for nearly three years, led the fight against the passage of campus radio legislation last spring.

He cited growing responsibilities and his desire to "let another member of the committee gain the experience of being chairman" in his letter of resignation.

Blackwell said he will remain in legislature and will seek an appointment to the Finance Committee so that he might "advise" committee members for the duration of his term.

The letter will be read to SL Thursday night.

Howard D. Henry, Director of Graham Memorial Student Union and a Colonel in the Air Force Reserve has been selected by the Department of the Air Force to participate in a special 16-day tour to observe Air Force operations in Europe.

Colonel Henry and thirteen other Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard officers will report to Washington, D.C., Dec. 3 and leave the following morning to visit major headquarters and representative Air Force bases in France, Germany and Great Britain.

The tour will include briefings at NATO Headquarters, Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe, United States Air Forces in Europe, and at fighter, reconnaissance, missile and transport bases.

Freshmen Cagers Open At Clemson

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's Tar Babies, a team which represents perhaps the best potential basketball assemblage ever at UNC, opens its 16-game schedule "down yonder" tonight against the Clemson Frosh. The 6 p.m. scrap will be a preliminary to the 8 o'clock Tar Heel - Tiger varsity game.

"We know very little about Clemson's freshmen," Coach Larry Brown said yesterday, "except that they were beaten pretty badly (104-55) by the varsity. But their program is on the rise, and they have another Mahaffey (Richie) who scored 17 points in their varsity scrimmage."

Confidently, Brown says "We're ready."

Then he proceeds with caution, saying that it always takes game competition to show a team's real worth. He is worried about foul disqualification, which benched his two big boys (6-11 Rusty Clark and 6-8 Bill Bunting) in the heat of battle in the second scrimmage game.

The frosh attack will center around the frontcourt strength of Clark and Bunting, who averaged 18 and 19 points respectively against the varsity.

Rowe: I Had To Take Ride

MONTGOMERY, Ala., (AP) —A red-haired former bartender testified today that he was ordered by a Ku Klux Klan superior officer to accompany three other Klansmen on a journey which led to the slaying of civil rights worker Viola Gregg Liuzzo.

Gary Thomas Rowe Jr., 32, who said he was paid by the FBI to join the Klan and get information for the government, was the key witness in the civil rights conspiracy trial of three Klan members — Collie Leroy Wilkins Jr., 22, of Fairfield, Ala.; Eugene Thomas, 42, and William Orville Eaton, 41, both of Bessemer, Ala. The three are being tried simultaneously.

The Klansmen are charged with violating the constitutional rights of American citizens, including Mrs. Liuzzo during the historic civil rights march from Selma to Montgomery last spring.

Rowe, talking in a calm voice, almost hushed at times, told for the third time his story of a 25-mile chase which he said ended with the killing of the Detroit housewife who had come to Alabama to help Negroes in their struggle for voting rights. The slain woman was the wife of a teamsters union official, Anthony Liuzzo.

The witness, who said he was a member of the United Klans of America, headed by Robert M. Shelton, described the hooded organization as one whose primary purpose was preservation of white supremacy "by whatever means necessary, whether by bullets or ballots."

He told the jury of 12 white men that he received a telephone call on the morning of March 25, ordering him to accompany Wilkins, Thomas and Eaton to Montgomery. That was the day the Selma to Montgomery march came to an end at the state capitol and the day on which Mrs. Liuzzo met her death, along U. S. 80 in nearby Lowndes County.

Pennario Will Give Piano Recital In Memorial Hall

Leonard Pennario, perhaps America's most noted pianist, will play in Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, Dcember 2.

Pennario, whose list of triumphs is unmatched by his contemporaries and equalled by only a few elder statesmen of music, is currently in his twentieth season of concertizing throughout the United States and Europe. His appearance here is being sponsored by Graham Memorial and the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Pennario went to a Paderewski recital when he was seven years old and decided then and there to go and do likewise. From the time of his professional debut with the Dallas Symphony at the age of 12 to the present, Pennario's career has been marked by phenomenal successes and, rarer still among the ranks of child prodigies, constant artistic growth.

In describing such a career, which has included repeated performances (always sold out) with every major orchestra in the U.S. and abroad, glowing press notices, and the most ardent popular acclaim, it is difficult to pick out the highlights.

In Pennario's own estimation, however, the very best moments have been two: his collaboration with Heifitz and Piatigorsky in the live performance and recording of great works from the trio repertory, and a 1963 appearance with the London Philharmonic.

The reaction of the London Times to that performance summarized well the maturity which the 40-year old virtuoso had attained. "He is an extraordinarily refined artist with fingers as agile and a mind as subtle as those of the very greatest pianists memory can recall."

Pennario performs with a flair which has made him the people's, as well as the critics, choice. His recordings, first made by Capitol, now by RCA Victor, consistently place at the top of best-selling classical music lists.

Seminars Abroad

The University YM-YWCA is again sponsoring its "Seminars Abroad' summer tour program in Europe and will begin accepting applications at the Y today.

Anne Queen, YM - YWCA head, said, "We have a fascinating itinerary planned for this summer."

"We are very pleased that we will have personal contacts in all but ten countries we visit."

The program was started by the Y nine years ago. The group will spend 61 days in Europe.

The tour will depart from New York, and group flights will take participants to Madrid, from where they will begin a 'great circle tour' through Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Czechoslovakia, France, Holland. Denmark and ending in London. Cities visited will include Rome, Paris, Berlin, and Geneva.

Approximate cost of the 2-month tour will be about $1300 and travel will be by air, bus, gondola, and barge.

Federal Court Rules Election Ban On State

Career Program Limited To 100

"Careers for Carolina," a one - day program designed to acquaint interested students with career opportunities in local, state and federal government, will be limited to the first 100 students who sign up at the GM information desk.

Coordinator Jim Brame announced Tuesday that the program will be held Dec. 10 in the Institute of Government's Knapp Building. Government officials will speak at four discussion panels.

Included among the speakers are Chancellor Paul Sharp, Institute Director John Sanders, George Aull Jr., city manager of Greensboro, new N. C. Prisons Director V. L. Bounds and Charles Woods, to the director of the federal Bureau of the Budget.

Brame said space limitations would allow the program to accommodate only 100-110 students. "We also hope that students interested enough to attend will be exempt from classes," he added. The program will run from 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m.

Included is a luncheon at Chase. Cost will be $1.50.

Following registration at 9 a.m., Brame, Student Body President Paul Dickson and Sanders will welcome guests. Ed Rankin, director of the N. C. Department of Administration, will speak at 10:20 on "The Challenge of Public Service."

A 10:50 meeting will feature governmental roles on the city and county, state and federal levels. Aull, former city manager of Durham, will speak on the city and county role, with Sanders and Woods discussing the state and federal roles, respectively.

Two concurrent panels will be held at 2 p.m. One will deal with public administration and will feature the following speakers: city and county — Donald Hayman, assistant director of the Institute; state — Claude Cald-Caldwell, personnel director of the State of North Carolina; and federal — Charles Woods of the Budget Bureau.

The second, highlighting education, will feature Chancellor Sharp discussing higher education. Assistant Durham County Schools Superintendent Zane Eargle will talk on public schools, and Raymond Stone, president of Southern Pines Community College, will discuss special education programs.

The final two concurrent sessions will begin at 3:40 p.m. and will center on social services and specialties.

Dorothy Kiester, social work consultant with the Institute of Government, will open the social services panel. The Assistant Dean of the UNC School of Public Health, Dr. William Flash, will discuss public health, and Bounds will talk on corrections.

Brame said each panel would be followed by a question and answer period, with a summary report from each panel at 5 p.m.

The "Careers for Carolina" program was first held in 1963, but was cancelled last year.

The program is sponsored by the UNC student government in cooperation with the Institute of Government.

Realignment Must Be On Population Basis

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Federal Court said here yesterday that — with one exception — no congressional or legislative primaries or elections may be held in North Carolina until after reapportionment of the General Assembly and congressional districts.

North Carolina must realign its legisalture and 11 congressional districts strictly on the basis of population, the court said.

But the order by a three-judge panel will permit the state to conduct a special primary Dec. 18 and a special general election Jan. 22 to fill the congressional vacancy left by the death of Rep. Herbert C. Bonner in the First District.

The state was warned that if the legislature does not act on reapportionment by Jan. 31, 1966, the court itself will fashion a scheme of apportionment which will permit the 1966 primaries and elections to proceed on a just and equitable basis."

Sources said Gov. Dan Moore probably would call a special session of the legislature by Jan. 10.

The governor himself declined comment on the decision "until I have time to study it completely."

The ruling will affect both the North Carolina Senate and the State House of Representatives.

Currently, the Senate is based primarily on population, the House partly on population, partly on geography.

The U. S. District court said there were some sharp variances in the present Senate alignment which must be corrected and the House of Representatives must be established strictly along population lines.

Under North Carolina law, each of the 100 counties has one representative, regardless of population, with an additional 20 House members divided among the most populous counties.

The court said the proportional representation per district should be 414,196 persons.

The opinion then added:

"We note, however, that six of the 11 districts vary from the average by more than 10 per cent of the average.

The decision came on a case brought by Renn Drum Jr., a Winston-Salem attorney.

Legislative leaders said many plans for reapportionment and congressional redistricting would be offered and it might take a month or more to finish the job.

The court order said the current legislative alignment "denied to the plaintiff and others of his class equal protection of the laws in contraven-

Radio Gets More Support

The signatures of 100 Morrison Hall residents were added to the petition for the establishment of a board of directors for campus radio last Tuesday night, according to petition organizer John Stupak.

Stupak said he could not give a reasonable estimate of the number of names now signed to the various petitions spread all over the campus.

Stupak's committee of four radio supporters will return to Morrison tonight to collect more names for the petition.

"The turnout at Morrison last week was good in spite of the large number of stu- who had already left for the Thanksgiving holiday," Stupak said. "We hope to collect at least 400 more names tonight to put us close to our goal of 1250."

"If we are successful in Morrison tongiht," he said, "we will also try to collect more signatures in Ehringhaus Hall.

Televisions Selling Cheap

New York, (AP) — A 19-inch portable television set, the ad said, for $8.98. Just clip out the coupon and bring it to the store.

When the 48th Street discount firm opened for business at 9:30 a.m. yesterday, 500 persons burst through the doors waving coupons.

The clerks tried to explain that the price in the advertisement was a typographical error — it should have read $88.98. The bargain - Hunters wouldn't listen.

While trying to think of some way out, the store sold 50 sets at $8.98. Then the management called a halt. Infuriated shoppers promptly started "picking up everything in the store," an official said.

Carolyn Kizer To Read Poetry Tonite In Peabody

A woman who has been termed "a first-rate poet. . . and scandously beautiful" will appear here tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Peabody Hall.

The poet, Carolyn Kizer will present a reading of her poems. Her appearance is sponsored by the UNC English Department and the N.C. Poetry Circuit.

After the reading, tea and coffee will be served and copies of Miss Kizer's book "Knock Upon Silence" will be available for purchase and autographing.

The founder and editor of "Poetry Northwest," a journal published at the University of Washington and with such well-known writers on its board as Louise Bogan, Stanley Kunitz and Leonie Adams, Miss Kizer has also published another volume of poetry, "The Ungrateful Garden."

Miss Kizer's work has appeared in "The New Yorker," "The Kenyon Review," "Atlantic," "Poetry," "The Hudson Review," "The Paris Review," "Prairie Schooner" and at least twenty more magazines.

Critics have said of her poetry that it is "highly feminine," has "witty urbanity" and "warmth as well as wit."

Dr. Charles Wright of the Department of English is chairman of arrangements for Miss Kizer's appearance.

RADIO CLASSICS

Radio Classics, featuring old-time radio comedies from the 1940's, will be presented at 8 p.m. Monday at Swain Hall in the classroom auditorium.

Orlons Coming To Armory Saturday Night

The Motown sound is returning to UNC Saturday night in the form of the Orlons, the vocal group who recorded the million seller "South Street."

Motown a recording company in Chicago, has put such names as the Supremes and the Orlons before the public in the past five years.

The Orlons will perform as part of a dance and show in the Naval Armory from 9-1 a.m. sponsored by Morehead Residence College (lower quad).

Tickets are now on sale at the GM information desk for $2.50. The dance will begin immediately after the first home basketball game with William and Mary.

The Orlons will be backed up by the Jokers Seven. Tickets will cost $3 at the door.

"We know very little about Clemson's freshmen," Coach Larry Brown said yesterday, "except that they were beaten pretty badly (104-55) by the varsity. But their program is on the rise, and they have another Mahaffey (Richie) who scored 17 points in their varsity scrimmage."

Confidently, Brown says "We're ready."

Then he proceeds with caution, saying that it always takes game competition to show a team's real worth. He is worried about foul disqualification, which benched his two big boys (6-11 Rusty Clark and 6-8 Bill Bunting) in the heat of battle in the second scrimmage game.

The frosh attack will center around the frontcourt strength of Clark and Bunting, who averaged 18 and 19 points respectively against the varsity.

Career Program Limited To 100

"Careers for Carolina," a one - day program designed to acquaint interested students with career opportunities in local, state and federal government, will be limited to the first 100 students who sign up at the GM information desk.

Coordinator Jim Brame announced Tuesday that the program will be held Dec. 10 in the Institute of Government's Knapp Building. Government officials will speak at four discussion panels.

Included among the speakers are Chancellor Paul Sharp, Institute Director John Sanders, George Aull Jr., city manager of Greensboro, new N. C. Prisons Director V. L. Bounds and Charles Woods, to the director of the federal Bureau of the Budget.

Brame said space limitations would allow the program to accommodate only 100-110 students. "We also hope that students interested enough to attend will be exempt from classes," he added. The program will run from 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m.

Included is a luncheon at Chase. Cost will be $1.50.

Following registration at 9 a.m., Brame, Student Body President Paul Dickson and Sanders will welcome guests. Ed Rankin, director of the N. C. Department of Administration, will speak at 10:20 on "The Challenge of Public Service."

A 10:50 meeting will feature governmental roles on the city and county, state and federal levels. Aull, former city manager of Durham, will speak on the city and county role, with Sanders and Woods discussing the state and federal roles, respectively.

Two concurrent panels will be held at 2 p.m. One will deal with public administration and will feature the following speakers: city and county — Donald Hayman, assistant director of the Institute; state — Claude Cald-Caldwell, personnel director of the State of North Carolina; and federal — Charles Woods of the Budget Bureau.

The second, highlighting education, will feature Chancellor Sharp discussing higher education. Assistant Durham County Schools Superintendent Zane Eargle will talk on public schools, and Raymond Stone, president of Southern Pines Community College, will discuss special education programs.

The final two concurrent sessions will begin at 3:40 p.m. and will center on social services and specialties.

Dorothy Kiester, social work consultant with the Institute of Government, will open the social services panel. The Assistant Dean of the UNC School of Public Health, Dr. William Flash, will discuss public health, and Bounds will talk on corrections.

Brame said each panel would be followed by a question and answer period, with a summary report from each panel at 5 p.m.

The "Careers for Carolina" program was first held in 1963, but was cancelled last year.

The program is sponsored by the UNC student government in cooperation with the Institute of Government.

Realignment Must Be On Population Basis

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Federal Court said here yesterday that — with one exception — no congressional or legislative primaries or elections may be held in North Carolina until after reapportionment of the General Assembly and congressional districts.

North Carolina must realign iis legisalture and 11 congressional districts strictly on the basis of population, the court said.

But the order by a three-judge panel will permit the state to conduct a special primary Dec. 18 and a special general election Jan. 22 to fill the congressional vacancy left by the death of Rep. Herbert C. Bonner in the First District.

The state was warned that if the legislature does not act on reapportionment by Jan. 31, 1966, the court itself will fashion a scheme of apportionment which will permit the 1966 primaries and elections to proceed on a just and equitable basis."

Sources said Gov. Dan Moore probably would call a special session of the legislature by Jan. 10.

The governor himself declined comment on the decision "until I have time to study it completely."

The ruling will affect both the North Carolina Senate and the State House of Representatives.

Currently, the Senate is based primarily on population, the House partly on population, partly on geography.

The U. S. District court said there were some sharp variances in the present Senate alignment which must be corrected and the House of Representatives must be established strictly along population lines.

Under North Carolina law, each of the 100 counties has one representative, regardless of population, with an additional 20 House members divided among the most populous counties.

The court said the proportional representation per district should be 414,196 persons.

The opinion then added:

"We note, however, that six of the 11 districts vary from the average by more than 10 per cent of the average.

The decision came on a case brought by Renn Drum Jr., a Winston-Salem attorney.

Legislative leaders said many plans for reapportionment and congressional redistricting would be offered and it might take a month or more to finish the job.

The court order said the current legislative alignment "denied to the plaintiff and others of his class equal protection of the laws in contraven-

Rowe: I Had To Take Ride

MONTGOMERY, Ala., (AP) —A red-haired former bartender testified today that he was ordered by a Ku Klux Klan superior officer to accompany three other Klansmen on a journey which led to the slaying of civil rights worker Viola Gregg Liuzzo.

Gary Thomas Rowe Jr., 32, who said he was paid by the FBI to join the Klan and get information for the government, was the key witness in the civil rights conspiracy trial of three Klan members — Collie Leroy Wilkins Jr., 22, of Fairfield, Ala.; Eugene Thomas, 42, and William Orville Eaton, 41, both of Bessemer, Ala. The three are being tried simultaneously.

The Klansmen are charged with violating the constitutional rights of American citizens, including Mrs. Liuzzo during the historic civil rights march from Selma to Montgomery last spring.

Rowe, talking in a calm voice, almost hushed at times, told for the third time his story of a 25-mile chase which he said ended with the killing of the Detroit housewife who had come to Alabama to help Negroes in their struggle for voting rights. The slain woman was the wife of a teamsters union official, Anthony Liuzzo.

The witness, who said he was a member of the United Klans of America, headed by Robert M. Shelton, described the hooded organization as one whose primary purpose was preservation of white supremacy "by whatever means necessary, whether by bullets or ballots."

He told the jury of 12 white men that he received a telephone call on the morning of March 25, ordering him to accompany Wilkins, Thomas and Eaton to Montgomery. That was the day the Selma to Montgomery march came to an end at the state capitol and the day on which Mrs. Liuzzo met her death, along U. S. 80 in nearby Lowndes County.

Radio Gets More Support

The signatures of 100 Morrison Hall residents were added to the petition for the establishment of a board of directors for campus radio last Tuesday night, according to petition organizer John Stupak.

Stupak said he could not give a reasonable estimate of the number of names now signed to the various petitions spread all over the campus.

Stupak's committee of four radio supporters will return to Morrison tonight to collect more names for the petition.

"The turnout at Morrison last week was good in spite of the large number of stu- who had already left for the Thanksgiving holiday," Stupak said. "We hope to collect at least 400 more names tonight to put us close to our goal of 1250."

"If we are successful in Morrison tongiht," he said, "we will also try to collect more signatures in Ehringhaus Hall.

Pennario Will Give Piano Recital In Memorial Hall

Leonard Pennario, perhaps America's most noted pianist, will play in Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, Dcember 2.

Pennario, whose list of triumphs is unmatched by his contemporaries and equalled by only a few elder statesmen of music, is currently in his twentieth season of concertizing throughout the United States and Europe. His appearance here is being sponsored by Graham Memorial and the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Pennario went to a Paderewski recital when he was seven years old and decided then and there to go and do likewise. From the time of his professional debut with the Dallas Symphony at the age of 12 to the present, Pennario's career has been marked by phenomenal successes and, rarer still among the ranks of child prodigies, constant artistic growth.

In describing such a career, which has included repeated performances (always sold out) with every major orchestra in the U.S. and abroad, glowing press notices, and the most ardent popular acclaim, it is difficult to pick out the highlights.

In Pennario's own estimation, however, the very best moments have been two: his collaboration with Heifitz and Piatigorsky in the live performance and recording of great works from the trio repertory, and a 1963 appearance with the London Philharmonic.

The reaction of the London Times to that performance summarized well the maturity which the 40-year old virtuoso had attained. "He is an extraordinarily refined artist with fingers as agile and a mind as subtle as those of the very greatest pianists memory can recall."

Pennario performs with a flair which has made him the people's, as well as the critics, choice. His recordings, first made by Capitol, now by RCA Victor, consistently place at the top of best-selling classical music lists.

Seminars Abroad

The University YM-YWCA is again sponsoring its "Seminars Abroad' summer tour program in Europe and will begin accepting applications at the Y today.

Anne Queen, YM - YWCA head, said, "We have a fascinating itinerary planned for this summer."

"We are very pleased that we will have personal contacts in all but ten countries we visit."

The program was started by the Y nine years ago. The group will spend 61 days in Europe.

The tour will depart from New York, and group flights will take participants to Madrid, from where they will begin a 'great circle tour' through Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Czechoslovakia, France, Holland, Denmark and ending in London. Cities visited will include Rome, Paris, Berlin, and Geneva.

Approximate cost of the 2-month tour will be about $1300 and travel will be by air, bus, gondola, and barge.

Televisions Selling Cheap

New York, (AP) — A 19-inch portable television set, the ad said, for $8.98. Just clip out the coupon and bring it to the store.

When the 48th Street discount firm opened for business at 9:30 a.m. yesterday, 500 persons burst through the doors waving coupons.

The clerks tried to explain that the price in the advertisement was a typographical error — it should have read $88.98. The bargain - Hunters wouldn't listen.

While trying to think of some way out, the store sold 50 sets at $8.98. Then the management called a halt. Infuriated shoppers promptly started "picking up everything in the store," an official said.

Carolyn Kizer To Read Poetry Tonite In Peabody

A woman who has been termed "a first-rate poet. . . and scandously beautiful" will appear here tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Peabody Hall.

The poet, Carolyn Kizer will present a reading of her poems. Her appearance is sponsored by the UNC English Department and the N.C. Poetry Circuit.

After the reading, tea and coffee will be served and copies of Miss Kizer's book "Knock Upon Silence" will be available for purchase and autographing.

The founder and editor of "Poetry Northwest," a journal published at the University of Washington and with such well-known writers on its board as Louise Bogan, Stanley Kunitz and Leonie Adams, Miss Kizer has also published another volume of poetry, "The Ungrateful Garden."

Miss Kizer's work has appeared in "The New Yorker," "The Kenyon Review," "Atlantic," "Poetry," "The Hudson Review," "The Paris Review," "Prairie Schooner" and at least twenty more magazines.

Critics have said of her poetry that it is "highly feminine," has "witty urbanity" and "warmth as well as wit."

Dr. Charles Wright of the Department of English is chairman of arrangements for Miss Kizer's appearance.

RADIO CLASSICS

Radio Classics, featuring old-time radio comedies from the 1940's, will be presented at 8 p.m. Monday at Swain Hall in the classroom auditorium.

Orlons Coming To Armory Saturday Night

The Motown sound is returning to UNC Saturday night in the form of the Orlons, the vocal group who recorded the million seller "South Street."

Motown a recording company in Chicago, has put such names as the Supremes and the Orlons before the public in the past five years.

The Orlons will perform as part of a dance and show in the Naval Armory from 9-1 a.m. sponsored by Morehead Residence College (lower quad).

Tickets are now on sale at the GM information desk for $2.50. The dance will begin immediately after the first home basketball game with William and Mary.

The Orlons will be backed up by the Jokers Seven. Tickets will cost $3 at the door.

'Tis The Season To Be...

Christmas is almost here.

It has been "almost here" for a number of weeks. Ask any merchant. When he took down his Halloween displays he replaced them with tokens of "Christmas spirit."

There seems to be sort of an unofficial contest in North Carolina — and, undoubtedly, other states — to see which city can best demonstrate its civic pride by being first to cover itself with Yuletide decorations. What a great honor it is to be able to say, "I'm from Podunk. We had our Christmas lights up two weeks before your town even started."

We have made no state-wide survey to find this year's winner, but certainly Durham is near the top of the list.

Another category of the competition is to see which town can create the gaudiest spectacle with its tinsel streamers and plastic stars and candles and Santas and thousands of colored lights.

Perhaps these cover-the-town decorations are just the most obvious manifestation of the commercialization of a religious holiday which is approaching blasphemy in its crassness.

Adults say, "Christmas is for kids." Apparently this means it is the time to load the good little boys and girls with loot. It is for kids, sure enough, but the grownups spend as many millions on one another as they do on the little ones.

To a college student, Christmas is a time to go home. While there, he either lounges around, occasionally worrying about forth-coming exams, or he gets a temporary job to earn some cash — to buy Christmas presents.

Tell someone that Christmas is just a few weeks away. More often than not, the response will be a groan of sadness. He groans because he sees the season as just a time when shoppers battle one another in every store, when he cannot afford to buy the things he wants to give, when cheerful spirits come mostly from bottles, when raucous music like "I Saw Momma Kissin' Santa Claus" fills the air and when nobody gives him the new sweater he wanted.

Some consider Christmas as a time for parties, some consider the holiday as the origin of the word implies, as a "holy day." The realistic approach probably lies somewhere in between.

We leave the proper method of celebration up to the individual, and for that reason strongly protest the annual attempts to stuff commercialized good cheer down each and every throat.

Guarding The Border

The borderline between East and West Berlin has probably been the scene of more murders per square yard than any other piece of real estate in the world.

The normally trigger-happy East German guards really outdid themselves Sunday, though, and will certainly merit commendation from their superiors for preventing another daring escape to the West.

The escapee had been chained near the border, in East Berlin. Somehow he broke loose and ran toward Neukoelln, a section of West Berlin. Four East German guards machinegunned him to death.

Letters To The Editor

Riches Won't Raise Dead

Editor, the Daily Tar Heel:

On behalf of SPU, SDS, and the Women's International League, I would like to thank each of the persons involved with last month's International Days of Peace soup-fast. The time of the workers and generosity of the participants were responsible for making the project successful both in terms of fund raising and of presenting a moral dilemma which all Americans must confront. $229.05 was raised and forwarded to C.A.R.E. through Norman Cousins. The fact that this money was raised by a fast and not by a mere collection was a small demonstration of our feeling that Americans are in no position to be philanthropic towards the Vietnamese. We are instead in a position of bearing guilt and responsibility. Donations for the reconstruction of Cam Ne could not be a gift from any of us, but only a miniscule restitution. For let us not forget that the misery and destruction wreaked by American arms on Cam Ne and on many similar villages will not ever be masked by our piety and our riches, which can't buy back the dead. Those who support the American war in Vietnam must do so with an awareness that inescapably involved in our hypotheses about international relations are the lives of millions of innocent people like those massacred in Cam Ne. If we can still conscientiously assent to our intervention in Vietnam we must support this stand and its implications with more than a handful of semantic opiates. It won't do, for example, to contend that we're fighting to preserve the non-existent "freedom," of a member of the non-existent "free" world. It won't do because such a contention would be scorned by those who have struggled in many ways for many years to attain freedom from the quasi-fascist Saigon government which we support and are responsible for. Is it possible to justify the destruction of Cam Ne by a logical and de-mythologized argument? Haven't our bombs fallen further than our eyes could ever see?

Liberalism Revived

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

All North Carolinians can be justifiably proud of the action that the General Assembly took recently because now there can be no questions about students transferring credits from our state supported schools, no questions about faculty recruitment, no questions about receiving private and federal grants, no questions about athletic participation in post season NCAA events, no questions about the Research Triangle being gutted, no questions about losing National Merit scholars and professors, and no questions about our graduates getting second rate jobs.

No longer is freedom of inquiry stifled at our schools; no longer is the discovery and teaching of democracy threatened, no longer do external forces that seek to indoctrinate and create an atmostphere of idealogical conformity in American democracy control; no longer are certain doctrines made more attractive; no longer exist; no longer is thought control practiced, no longer are the schools threatened with medicority no longer is a finger of suspicion pointed at the faculty, administration, and trustess no longer will we produce gullible innocents instead of tough minded realists no longer are North Carolina's fears pandered to and no longer will the citadels of glory fall and the funeral pall of omnipotent death eclipse the guiding light of the free and active mind.

The deadly invisible walls erected against freedom have fallen, the truest supporters of Americanism and militant men who love freedom have triumphed over a misinformed public. The truth may once again be spoken and the noble traditions of liberalism that North Carolina has had for 300 years can go on because, oh great joy of joys, Communists can once more speak on our campuses!

Toronto Exchange

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Canadian members of the Toronto Exchange enjoyed a highly successful weekend at UNC, and we want to thank our Tar Heel counterparts deeply. Particularly we congratulate the Co-Chairmen, Sylvia Wall and Hubert Wooten, for the imaginative and well-run programme they presented. We felt ourselves not only informed but also challenged on a variety of topics.

Our praise extends also to your entire campus, staff and students alike, who consistently went out of their way to welcome and talk with us. Up here, "Southern Hospitality" is a cliche to most people, but to the members of our Exchange it is a constant reminder of the ties of friendship between our two universities.

Booze Ends Dating Problem

I went to the Rendezvous Room Friday night to hear Nancy Rhoades sing. I had to sit in a window to hear her, but it was worth it.

Toward the end of her concert, Nancy sang "Alberta, Let Your Hair Hang Low." She had sung about the first five words when I heard an excited yelp at the back of the room.

I looked back to see Alberta the St. Bernard staggering up the aisle. She was obviously crocked. I guess I should have stopped her, but by the time I thought about it she was up on the stage.

Alberta broke into a drunken jerk. She spread out all four feet for balance, lowered her head and just kind of shagged her rear and whipped her shoulders with the music.

Nancy didn't even break her song. After everybody got through laughing they started clapping and stomping their feet. Alberta lay her head back on her shoulder. Her eyelids dragged open, and her eyes looked glazed. Only the whites were showing, but they were red.

I couldn't stand it any longer I jumped off the window onto a girl's pocketbook and twisted my ankle. She called me an idiot, but I kept on hopping up to the stage. I caught Alberta by the collar and everybody started hissing.

Alberta gave a groan and collapsed. People started throwing things and yelling at me to quit choking the dog, but I didn't pay 'em no mind. I hopped, stomped and pulled until I got Alberta out of the room.

Alberta was out cold. I was too exhausted from hauling her to go any farther, so I pulled her against a wall and sat down. I took off my sock and looked at my ankle; it was blue.

I whimpered, cursed at Alberta— who was lying on her back and breathing through her mouth — and got five drinks from the machine. After straining the drinks through my fingers I poured all the ice in my sock and put it against my ankle.

The concert was over soon and everybody came out. Alberta awoke suddenly, sat up, and snarled at anybody who tried to pat her. I kept my head down and my ankle out of the way until the crowd had gone.

Alberta had about sobered up. She looked at me and seemed surprised. "What're you doing here? Whatsa matter with your ankle?"

Her question took my mind off my ankle long enough for me to get furious. "I broke it hauling you off the stage in there, where you were doing the hooch Remember?"

She groaned and closed her eyes.

"I wouldn't want to pry," I said brutally, "but would you mind telling me why you were stoned out of your skull?"

Alberta half opened her eyes. "I was lonesome", she said. "It's the Duke weekend and I didn't have a date."

A surge of compassion drowned my anger.

"I see," I said. "I'm sorry, baby. I don't blame you."

She lay down again. "You know," she mused, "I've never dated a Carolina dog since I've been here. I just pray one of them will ask me, but they never do. It's not that I'm that bad. I just don't know anybody."

"I know how it is, baby," I said sympathetically. "When you don't know anybody and you don't have connections, you are just out of everything."

"So you have to get drunk", she sobbed.

"That's about the size of it. But, come on now," I soothed. "Let's get you home You'll feel better in the morning."

It took us a pretty long time to get up to Morrison. My shoe hurt my ankle, so I had to hop most of the way.

When we finally made it, I took Alberta on the elevator up to the eighth floor. There's a boy there who gives her the food his mother sends him.

I tucked Alberta in next to a radiator in the lobby. She was still crying a little I told her I'd make her a promise if she'd stop. She stopped, and I made the promise.

I promised her I'd ask you something. Now that you've passed the social fee referendum so you can have sister dorms and mixers and all sorts of good things, please take thought of our less fortunate canine friends.

Won't you ask your SL representative to suggest a new one cent referendum for a Mutt 'n Mongrel Mixer? Have a heart Be a sport.

Help our frustrated dogs.

Kemp And 'Peace Weeds'

Those who know the proprietor of Chez Kemp Ltd., 205 E. Franklin St., know better than to defy him. Certain tobacco dealers don't know Kemp. They wouldn't let him sell imported cigarettes. Kemp now sells every imported brand available.

"I got interested in them because of the Gauloises (pronounced Goal-waz)," he said. "They were sold all around, but I couldn't get them for retail. For three months I tried to get them and got sorer and sorer." They are a Philip Morris product made in Richmond for the French tobacco monopoly.

"So I went to Washington. I said, 'I'll find out how they got their cigarettes.' I bought some from a little tobacco shop across from the foreign embassy quarters and got importers' addresses. Then I wrote 15 or 20 letters to distributors setting up arrangements whereby I could stock all the brands possible to obtain in this country—80 brands, 15 or 20 of them British.

"You know tobacco products are one of the few commodities unrestricted to and from Iron Curtain countries. Tobacco's still the peace weed, it all goes back to the peace pipe."

With that he brings out a new Russian cigarette, Sputnik, commemorating the space age. It has more filter than tobacco, but burns slowly and lasts as long as or longer than American cigarettes.

Another Soviet Union "weed" is the elegant Tponka, hand-made for the aristocracy. "This one goes back to the czars even," Kemp said. Its seasonal box currently features Santa and reindeer.

"Japanese, on the other hand, smoke very mild, tiny cigarettes," Kemp explains, "because they are such chain smokers. They rarely finish one because they feel benevolent. They take four or five drags and throw it down for the three or four urchins that follow them waiting to grab butts. They pick it up, don't smoke it, but dunk it in a pouch They save both paper and tobacco. Then at the end of the day, they sell their collection to tobacco shops to be reused."

"Have you tried the new Sobranie? Kemp asked. This series of Russian Imperial cigarettes is made in England "That's my sales technique," he said. And he always offers samples.

Sobranie Black and Gold (black paper wrappers with gold mouthpieces) is "the most popular evening cigarette in the world, especially big on the Riviera and Adriatic Sea," he continued. "Grace Kelly introduced it into Monaco. It was handmade and designed to honor her wedding."

The French Gauloises has proved his very best seller, then the British Senior Service, then any of the Sobranies

He can tell by taste where a tobacco is grown. "Rhodesia grows some of the finest tobacco in the world," he said. "Ours is a better blending tobacco, though And bright leaf Virginia tobacco is probably the most desirable for cigarettes."

He's pleased with sales and believes the area's cosmopolitan atmosphere accounts for the wave of popularity "especially from a scientific standpoint. Invariably scientists smoke because of their intense concentration," he said.

The decision was signed by Judge J. Sencer Bell of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court, Edwin M. Stanley of the U. S. Middle District Court and Algernon L. Butler of the U. S. Eastern District Court.

JOHN BROWN'S BODY HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

The Graham Memorial Drama Committee will present "The Wingate Saga," a formal reading of "John Brown's Body," Book 4.

The reading, set for Friday night at 8 p.m., will be held in the G.M. Lounge. It will also be presented on educational television and at N. C. State University on December 9.

The Wingate Saga stars four veteran actors: Virginia Cornue, who appeared in various Carolina productions; Doug Barger, Playmaker costume designer, who appeared recently in the Yeats plays here on campus; Edward Kenestrick, acting head of The Department of Dramatic Arts at North Carolina College in Durham; and Laurel Dykstra, active in all fields of campus drama.

Dolphins Host VMI Today; Earey Sees Poorest Year

BY BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

North Carolina opens its 1965-66 swimming season today with V.M.I. in Chapel Hill. Swimming, normally a bright spot in Carolina athletics, may have the poorest season in the school's history.

Coach Pat Earey sees "the possibility of six losses for the first time ever." The main problem is lack of depth and a poor freshman squad from last year which has not produced replacements for the graduated Harrison Merrill, Davis Roberts and Chip Smith.

The backstroke looks like Carolina's strongest event. Gay Stratten, a sophomore, will be a strong first man. Rick Mercuri, another soph, shows promise as the second man. Junior Jack Hayden will also swim here when needed.

In the butterfly, Earey is counting on a good season from Captain Fred Lipp, who has improved every year.

"He has had difficulty in getting started this year," Earey said, "but came around during Thanksgiving and should be ready to go in another week."

Junior Tom Adams and soph Dan Bissell provide shallow depth at the position. Earey is counting the days until the second semester when Phil Riker will be eligible. Riker was on the Olympic team and is the third or fourth fastest butterfly man in the world.

In the breaststroke, "Mr. Reliable" Rick Forum is the top man. The Eastern Intercollegiate Champion has a "classic stroke, beautiful form and tremendous speed" according to his coach. Senior Joe Lee will back him up.

Steve Hildenbrand and Jack Hayden, both veterans, will make the individual medley relatively strong. They have good potential. A sophomore who may be ready by the end of the year is Lee Domina.

In the distance events, John Sheldon, a senior, will be the first man. A big boy, he has to work hard with his stroke. Junior Allen McDonald has looked good, but lacks initial speed.

The big man on the Carolina squad this year is sprinter Pete Worthen. In the 50 yard freestyle, Earey says Worthen "is as good as anyone in the country. He could be that good in the 100 if he overcomes his problem with the last five or 10 yards. He will be a tough man for the opposition."

Behind Worthen is Russ Sleeper, an experienced junior. Juniors Jim Bernuth, Strud Norfleet, Jay Scattergood and soph Ed Ragland will be backup men in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events.

Diving, a traditional Carolina nemesis, looks weak again. The only hope is Butch Aydelette, a sophomore who is being counted on for a second or third place for a few points.

Earey expects little trouble with V.M.I. and will use the meet to introduce the squad to competition.

In the Atlantic Coast Conference, Carolina rates third behind Maryland and North Carolina State. Strong teams on the schedule include Army, Navy, Florida and Florida State.

Writers On Move

Daily Tar Heel readers will have first-hand coverage of the varsity and freshman basketball double - header with the Clemson Tigers at Clemson.

Both games will be season openers for the Tar Heel clubs. The Tar Heel varsity will face a team rated third in the ACC in pre-season polls.

Pat Stith

DTH Sports Editor

Fans of North Carolina basketball strapped a heavy load on Bob Lewis the first time they laid eyes on him. It was two years ago and Lewis was making his debut as a Tar Heel. He got 51 points and a whole courtful of rebounds.

Bob went on to average 37 points a game that first year, more than any Tar Baby ever and fans pointed with pride and saddled him with a heavy responsibility.

"I am not Billy Cunningham's replacement," he said. "We have a five man team this year and I'm one of those five.

"I am going to go out there and give it all I've got and that's all I can do," he said. "I know what the papers have said and what people may think, but I'm not another Cunningham."

Lewis was dead serious as he talked but you got the impression that he thought the idea of comparing him with Billy was a laugh.

"Cunningham was a pro playing college ball," he said. "He was bigger and stronger than I am—he was better than I am."

He sees himself as Bob Lewis, a guard playing forward who along with center Bob Bennett and sophomore forward Larry Miller, must somehow make up for Cunningham's absence under the boards, and who, along with Miller, must carry the bulk of the scoring load.

Lewis moved up to the varsity last year the most publicized North Carolina sophomore ever. Sports pages played him as Cunningham's rival then.

"It wasn't true," he said. "I was never in competition with Billy. Before the season was over I felt I was playing under a lot of pressure, but it wasn't because of Cunningham.

"It was because sometimes I would go out and play my best and wind up with, say, 14 points. That was new to me. I ask myself, 'What's the matter. What's happened?' "

Now, on the day of North Carolina's opener with Clemson, Bob Lewis says he is under no pressure. Before, it was he and Cunningham — now it's a five man effort.

"If somebody could tell me that I would only average five points a game this year but that we would win them all, I'd be as happy as I could be," he said.

"I don't care how much I score — all I want is for us to win. That's the only thing that counts."

Sports Notes

Thursday, the varsity swimmers travel to Clemson for a 4 p.m. meet with the Tigers.

Saturday, both varsity and freshmen basketball teams open their home schedules. The varsity hits William & Mary while the frosh meet Brevard.

The wrestling team also opens their season. Using a split - squad, one wrestling team will meet Pfeiffer at 2 p.m. in Carmichael. Another team will face St. Andrews on the road.

Hot Clemson Tigers Prowl Heels In Full Court Press, Spoil UNC Opener By 84-74

CLEMSON, S. C. — Clemson used a full court press to rattle North Carolina's Tar Heels here last night and whipped them by ten points 84-74.

It was the opening game of the season.

A capacity crowd of 3,500 which jammed Clemson's tiny field house chanted, "We're Number One — Bring On Duke" as the Buddy Benedict — led Tigers played keep-away through the last four minutes.

The two teams played evenly in the first half and on into the opening minutes of the second period when Clemson came out of the zone which Lewis had riddled for 19 points and into a full-court press.

The lead changed hands 18 times the first half and was tied nine times, but UNC never led in the second half.

Lewis got his 20th and 21st point with 18:42 to go in the second half to tie the score 40-40. But after that Clemson gradually pulled away.

For the next four minutes the two teams swapped baskets until Jim Sutherland hit a jumper and put Clemson out front 52-48.

At that point the Tigers went into a full - court press that completely disrupted the UNC attack.

For more than six minutes Carolina went without a basket and Clemson surged into an overwhelming 63-51 lead with 8:40 to go. Their widest margin was 14 points, 72-58, with 5:26 to go.

Spark Plug of the Tiger attack was 5-8 guard Benedict. He hit only ten points himself, but he would drive down the key and then toss off to Sutherland for Garry Helms for close in jump shots.

North Carolina opened up in the first half looking for the good shot. The Tar Heels worked the ball deliberately and it paid off for them.

They were in command of the game through most of the period and hit on 61 per cent of their shots as opposed to Clemson's 45 per cent.

In the second half Carolina continued to hit well — only they didn't get the shots. For the game UNC hit 28 of 47 shots from the floor — a 60 per cent clip, but Clemson managed to get away seventeen more shots from the floor. The Tigers hit 55 per cent for the game.

The battle on the boards was even, North Carolina got 33 rebounds. Miller had 10 to lead the Tar Heels, tops for the game.

Carolina pack leader Bob Lewis did everything that he was called upon to do. He fired eight for 11 from the floor and 12 for 17 from the free throw line.

Miller was runner-up for the Tar Heels with 17. Bob Bennett had 13 points and no one else managed more than six.

Clemson put five men in double figures. Tiger Randy Mahaffey was a disappointment with only 12 points and seven rebounds.

Committee Advises SACS To Continue Accreditation

Gag Law Changes Are The Reason

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools received a recommendation Wednesday that it continue accreditation of state-supported colleges and universities in North Carolina.

The executive council of the association's Commission on Colleges gave the accrediting a report on recent amendments to North Carolina's Speaker Ban Law.

The association had threatened to withdraw accreditation from North Carolina's public colleges and universities or place them on probation unless the law was changed.

The Commission on College's executive council said drastic changes in the law by a special session of the North Carolina Legislature last month returned to the "individual governing boards the authority and responsibility of determining speaker policy, thereby freeing each board to fulfill its role in protection of intellectual freedom and institutional integrity."

It added:

"It is therefore recommended that the affected state institutions of higher learning in North Carolina continue to be accredited by and hold membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, Inc."

The Speaker Ban Law, passed in 1963, banned communists or persons who pleaded the Fifth Amendment at loyalty hearing from speaking on state-supported campuses.

The executive council conferred in closed meeting Sunday with Watts Hill, Jr. of Durham, chairman of the North Carolina Board of Higher Education.

Hill explained changes in the Speaker Ban Law and expressed hope the association, which opened its 70th annual meeting in Richmond Monday, would take no action against the institutions.

The amendments were passed as recommended by a special blue ribbon commission appointed by Gov. Dan K. Moore to study the controversial law.

The eleven-member commission, headed by Rep. David Britt of Fairmont, held hearings in August and September Gov. Moore called the special legislative session shortly after the commission recommended that speaker control at the institutions affected should be returned to administrations and trustees.

Christmas Decorating Is Sunday

Graham Memorial will hold its annual Christmas Decorating Party Sunday beginning at 1:30 p.m. Decorating will be outside and in all G. M. Rooms.

The theme of the decorating is "Christmas Carols." Hundreds of feet of greenery, dozens of Christmas balls and yards of Christmas lights have been ordered for the decorating. Two huge trees will be decorated outside, and G.M.'s traditional tree and Christmas packages will be in the lounge.

Following the decorations, cider and doughnuts will be served.

The basic decorating group will be the GMAB Committees, but most sororities usually join in each year. Everyone is invited to help.

At 8 p.m. in G.M. Lounge, following the decorating, the Wake Forest Madrigals will sing. This event, too, is free and open to the public.

Moore Raps Court Ruling; Might Call Extra Session

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Dan Moore said Wednesday that the federal court reapportionment decision was "unwarranted and unnecessary" but that he is conferring with legislative leaders to determine when to call a special session of the North Carolina General Assebly.

The governor told his weekly news conference, "We do not feel it would be worthwhile to appeal the reapportionment decision to the Supreme Court."

Moore said, "I share a feeling with many North Carolinians that our present system of representation, while not perfect, has worked well and for the best interest of our people."

However, Moore added, "We are faced with an edict of the court which leaves us no alternative but to do the best we can to comply with the terms."

The three judge federal court panel Tuesday ordered North Carolina to realign its legislature and congressional districts by Jan. 31, 1966.

Moore said, "So far as we have been able to determine, no other state has been given such a task to perform in such a brief period of time."

"This matter is urgent, because if the General Assembly does not act promptly," Moore said, "the election of the next General Assembly and members of Congress could be thrown into a state of confusion.

The governor then said:

"North Carolina has benefited from the view and leadership that has come from small and sparcely populated counties. I believe any new system worked out must be fair to these areas.

Moore also said he would consult immediately with Lt. Bob Scott, president of the State Senate, and House Speaker Pat Taylor, to find a convenient time to convene a special session.

The matter of reapportionment, Moore said, "now becomes one to be dealt with by the General Assembly. I am confident our legislature will meet this challenge as it has met others throughout its long history."

The governor said the overwhelming majority of North Carolinians prefers that any change in the legislative apportionment and congressional alignment " be made by our representatives in the legislature and not oy a federal court."

The three-judge panel said if the legislature fails to carry out the reapportionment order by Jan. 31, the court will step in and do the job.

Moore noted the state must develop a system the courts will approve," even though we yield to this federal domination with a heavy heart."

Above all Moore said, "what the General Assembly does should not be considered simply as a shift of power from the rural to the urban areas, but the working out of a new system which will fairly represent the state.

"Members of the General Assembly," he said, "already have been considering alternatives to our present system. I am sure they will provide a fair and equiable legislative plan on the state and congressional levels."

Gemini 7 Ready For Trip

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Gemini 7 Astronauts Frank Borman and James A. Lovell Jr., underwent a five-hour medical examination yesterday and doctors pronounced them hale, hearty and rarin' to start their two-week space adventure on Saturday.

The astronauts' final major physical check provided baseline data for the most extensive medical survey ever planned on a U. S. man-in-space flight.

Hopefully, the study will answer such questions as: Do bones grow old during long exposure to weightlessness? Can man be protected from developing a "lazy heart" in space? How deep does an astronaut sleep? Can man survive well enough in space to make a 14-day flight to the moon, the longest planned in the Apollo program?

The Gemini 6 astronauts, Navy Capt. Walter M. Schirra Jr. and Air Force Maj Thomas P. Stafford, underwent a less extensive physical today. They will receive a final exam three days be-

Radio Greats Talk Again

By RICHARD COLEMAN

What part of Marilyn Monroe do you remember?

Monday night at 8 p.m., the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures will present the only "preservables" — the voices — of Mae West, Marilyn Monroe, Bob and Ray, Fred Allen, Charlie McCarthy, the Great Gildersleeve and others in a comedy program of past radio greats in auditorium classroom 1, basement of Swain Hall.

This will be the first showing of the newly created "archives" of some 125 tapes of past radio programs — documentaries, comedy, soap operas and many other types.

"Many are just fragments . . . a scattering . . . many much before your time, and some before mine too," says Don Upham, director of operations for RTVMP.

"The collection is mostly due to the files of private individuals — especially Dr. Robert Sharpe of the Department of Romance Languages here. He has an extensive collection. We made copies this last summer."

Unfortunately the archives can't lend out materials or make copies. "We don't have any copyright to this material. These are copies of copies."

Could students come in and make tapes?

"We haven't reached that point yet. It should be that way but we have a physical problem — no one to check out the tapes and no machine to play them.

"It's just started . . . instead of lending the tapes out the programs are being made available to the public with programs such as this Monday's. If people come we'll have more of these in the future."

Nevertheless, though still embryonic, the archives is unique. Although there's a similar one at Michigan State, "I know of no other collection like this in the South."

There has been no financial support from the outside yet, but some collaboration with the broadcasting industry is possible. "They're in touch with us," said Upham.

"The difference between newspapers and broadcasting is that once it's out it disappears. The end product is an instantaneous thing. It just evaporates. It's not like a book you can bind and put on the shelves. With newspapers you can look at old copies and magazines and see how they were."

"It's unfortunate the tape recorder wasn't invented 25 years ago. It didn't really begin until about 1950. There are twenty years of programs that exist only on discs, if at all."

These bulky 16" discs were made by some stations for rebroadcasting programs when they weren't carried the original time slots. Some discs were kept, some copied, but many were discarded since they couldn't be erased.

Monday night will feature the greats that didn't get away.

SP Elects Two Officers

Sandy Hobgood defeated Miriam Dorsey for the policy vice charimanship of the Student Party by a vote of 13 to 11 and Bill Withrow was acchairman at an SP meeting in Gerrard Hall Tuesday night.

Both Hobgood and Miss Dorsey had proposed tightening of the SP membership and fund raising activities.

Hobgood was elected on a second ballot after the first produced a 12 to 12 tie.

Miss Dorsey defeated Carl Johnson for a six month seat on the SP Advisory Board by a vote of 13 to 7.

Both Hurley Thompson and Buddy Farfour were acclaimed full term members of the board.

A legislative vacancy in men's District I was announced.

MYF CHICKEN SUPPER

University Methodist Youth Fellowship will hold a barbecued chicken supper from 6 to 7 Saturday in the church's Fellowship Hall.

Good Riddance To An Era

A political era is being swept out the door by the long-expected federal court order to reapportion both houses of the General Assembly and to equalize congressional districts.

Since colonial days the legislature has been controlled by rural elements because, obviously enough, there were no cities. The first legislators were mostly well-to-do farmers, and that power structure has become so entrenched, mainly through regulation of apportionment, that urban regions have been unable to break the hold.

When one group is outnumbered, there is little it can change in its own favor.

The federal court's ruling points out this situation in North Carolina: A majority of the House of Representatives. is elected by 61 counties containing just 27.1 per cent of the state's population. A House member from Wake County represents 82,059 people; the Tyrrell County member represents 4,520.

The North Carolina Constitution says that the General Assembly must change the senatorial districts after every census so that each district is as nearly equal as possible in population.

Legally, the Assembly has no choice. It must reapportion and redistrict before January 31 or be reapportioned and redistricted by the three-judge federal court.

The job will be painful because some members will probably be shifting themselves right out of a job. But like it or not, power will slip from the underpopulated areas, notably in the East, to the population centers of the Piedmont.

An era will end. And it is about time.

A New Kind Of Kneel-In

The principal of a San Antonio, Texas, high school seems to be spending most of his time these days shortening hair and lengthening dresses.

Homer Smith, principal of John Marshall High School, outlawed long bangs last week. The students protested the haircut rule by boycotting the school cafeteria, but after two days they apparently got hungry enough to start eating there again.

Now a male teacher has complained that the girls' short skirts are classroom distractions. He did not say if they distracted him or his male students, but the principal issued this hem-length ultimatum:

The girls are required to kneel. If the skirt does not reach the floor it is too short.

Of course it is desirable for students and teachers to keep their mind on their school work, but there seems to be an unanswered question here.

Which is more distracting — the short skirts or the spectacle of all those girls kneeling around the principal's office?

Drugstore Education

Is there any student, glassy-eyed from staring at the textbook before him, who has not at some time wished for "instant knowledge?" Why can't somebody invent a little pill which, when swallowed, will send facts flooding through the bloodstream toward a vacant brain?

It sounds absurd of course, but so did the idea of television not so many years ago.

Scientists at the University of California at Los Angeles might be on the verge of becoming the saviors of all harried college students because they have conducted experiments which indicate knowledge can be transferred from one animal to another by injection.

They trained hamsters to do a particular thing, then injected a chemical from the hamsters' brains into the bodies of untrained rats. The rats were then able to carry out to some degree the actions taught only to the hamsters.

The process is still highly experimental, but perhaps the day is not far distant when needle marks on a young man's arm will not mean he is a dope addict or a coed's reference to "the pill" will have no connection with contraceptives.

Letter To The Editor

Otelia Breaks Rules

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I intended to write a letter of praise on Otelia Connor's last letter in the DTH. In that one she made pretty good sense about the dating places we should have here, up to the point about the churches.

For once I could read one of her letters and say, "Very good, Mrs. Connor." Note that I said for once!

She, however, seems to have this "thing" (to use a current local expression) about politeness and manners. So, perhaps she should take a good close look at herself and her own manners.

I realize that most people tend to overlook many things that the elder generation does, and chalk it up to eccentricity. But really, just how far are we supposed to bend backwards for her.

In her letter published in the November 18 issue of the DTH, she mentioned her surprise that the professor 'didn't knock 'em cold'. What is even more surprising to me, is that someone hasn't done that to her. I'm not sure that I would, but I do know some who wouldn't hesitate.

Now, before she goes and gets all hot under the collar, don't think that I am condoning bad manners or impoliteness. In fact, just the reverse. So much so that I see her manners as some of the worst displayed on this campus.

As children, even, most of us are taught that one of the worst breaches of etiquette is to correct someone in public. Either she was never taught this, she has chosen to forget it, or she feels that she's so far above reproach that it is all right for her to violate these rules of etiquette.

If she was never taught this, I apologize. If she has forgotten it, please take this as a kindly reminder. If she feels, however, that she is above practicing what she preaches, then she has my pity.

I really do not see why the students of UNC should have to put up with this obloquy from a self-styled, self-important, egotistical, inclement person such as she presents herself to be.

Since the opinions that I have expressed are not mine alone, but also those of many of the students I have known well in my four years here, I hope that she will heed them.

By all means, let's try to promote politeness and good manners.

But if she feels this is her own personal discharge in life, then, for her own sake, at least if not for others, please use some finesse. I think she'll make more progress in the long run, if that is truly her aim. If it's not, then she deserves all of the ridicule and disrespect that she is now, and has been, getting.

History Helps

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I'm getting a bit nauseated. The letters to the editor seem to have taken on a tinge of idiocy, particularly when referring to our government's foreign policy. Paraphrasing something I once read: "The mark of a stupid man is his inability (or unwillingness) to learn from history."

Perhaps our beloved brethren, the V.C. (Viet Cong or Vietnik Creeps; take your pick) would like to see the period 1965-1975 follow the pattern set in 1935-1945 and 1915-1925. Most of us learned from those periods that the only time decisions reached at a conference table are honored occurs when one of the conferees has ben smashed.

As to the recurring statement "Americans don't know what war is: they've never had one on their own territory." Perhaps this is so because we've tried to keep them from spreading this far. If we pull out of South Viet Nam, it's quite probably we will soon thereafter pull out of South Korea, the Phillipines, Formosa, Guam, Hawaii, Alaska, Washington, etc., ad nauseum.

To Those Who Wonder

A lot of us here are living in fear
That you over there may think we don't care.
Don't think that the tricks performed by peace-niks
Express what we feel towards those who would deal
A fixed deck of cards. So be on your guards
And don't let us down. Help us keep our town,
Our state and country the home of the free.
We know you are brave, though some to your grave
Will carry the flame that lights freedom's name.
That torch that you bear, so far away there,
It burns also here, this land you hold dear.
Though all of us pray there will come a day
The world will be free from hate, tyranny,
And fear, we hope you, the men dressed in blue,
In khaki or white, continue to fight
And keep our land safe. So please do not chafe
When some silly fool, who fathered a mule,
Continues to shout that we must pull out.
You men in the ranks deserve all our thanks
For braving the worst of the enemy's thirst
To dictate to all. Allow not to fall

Free Press, Justice Conflict In America

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

Press relations with the law is becoming an important question in America today. The issue of fair trial vs. free press has been before the public in increasing quantity since the assassination of President John F. Kennedy in November of 1963.

The bar charges that reporters infringe upon the rights of the accused by writing stories that present the defendant as either a big-time hoodlum or an innocent father of six children and a hard worker.

Both of these presentations would influence a jury and that is wrong.

To print the news is to print fact and the truth behind the fact. The truth about the fact must be the truth--not an opinion about the truth.

However more often than not there is a fine line between these two apparent extremes.

The bar proposes that reporters not mention the previous record of the accused, a confession he may have made or opinions of police officers and attorneys concerning his guilt or innocence.

What do these three proposals mean?

Is it wrong to consider the past record of the accused? What this man has done in the past is a matter of record, a fact. Therefore, by the standards of journalism it belongs in the news. On the other hand, it is clearly written into American common law that each man shall be tried on the merits of the individual case.

Suppose a man is on trial for murder and has a past conviction for armed robbery, is this not an important piece of evidence? Does it influence a jury into thinking that if a man has served time for armed robbery he is probably guilty of murder?

However, suppose this same man is on trial for murder and has a spotless record. He has been an outstanding leader in his community. If this is brought out in a trial, which the defense would most assuredly do, wouldn't it also prejudice a jury?

So we see a conflict in our system. If the past record is bad it cannot be brought out, unless the defendant takes the witness stand. But if the record is good, it will be presented to the jury for consideration.

Confessions are a bit harder to handle. They cannot be introduced in court if they are forced or taken under duress.

Here the reporter must be very careful. He must know the police and its credibility. This also applies to statements by attorneys and others involved in a case.

Our constitution guarantees a free press. With this right, which belongs not to the press, but to all the people, goes a responsibility. This responsibility includes upholding the rights of a defendant.

What it comes down to is the discretion of the reporter and his ability to be fair. What happens in the future depends on public opinion.

The British Press Council has set strict and severe limitations on the press in this area.

In all cases of an arrest and trial the press may only say that police have picked up so and so to talk with him. They cannot say why a man was arrested or in what connection.

Following the arrest no mention of the case can be made until the trial. And then the only thing that can be reported is what occurs during the actual court proceedings.

Ten people saw John Doe shoot a woman in the head six times. They all watched as he cut her into little pieces. Four police officers arrested Doe in this act of murder.

The following day there is this newspaper report:

John Doe of 109 Wellington St., is being held until his trial comes up in a fortnight.

The bar has some legitimate complaints about the press. Reporters do at times infringe on the rights of a person on trial. Something needs to be done about this situation.

Trial by newspaper is wrong, no exceptions withstanding. But journalism by judges is by no means the answers.

Discipline Committee Suggests Reforms, But Nothing Drastic

"You are requested not to wear shorts and slacks in dormitory parlors, on the campus and in the downtown area and in restaurants in Chapel Hill.

"Shorts and slacks are to be worn for active sports only, unless in route to activities which warrant such apparel.

"The penalty for any violation of this rule will be left up to the discretion of the House Council."

Sounds pretty harsh, doesn't it? How about this:

"Woman students will also receive calldowns for soft drink bottles found in the rooms, unmade beds, and food not stored in tins."

And this:

"The president may assign telephone duty to each student in the dormitory. The penalty for not taking phone duty is a Friday night's campus."

And this:

"Attendance at all house meetings will be compulsory. The penalty for an unexcused absence is a Friday night's campus."

And this:

"Freshmen must observe closed study Monday through Thursday from 8 p.m. until 10:30 p.m."

And this:

"There shall be no talking out of dormitory windows. A violation of this is a calldown."

About once every year at the University some embattled coed will get up at a public meeting and speak her mind about the current status of women's rules, but the public little notes nor long remembers what she had to say.

The great discrepancy between the rules of conduct for male students and female ones will be apparent to anyone who reads the 1965-66 edition of "Regulations for Women Students" published by the University.

The University administration usually writes these concessions to Victorianism off as a good means of pacifying parents who fear for the purity of their daughters when away from home.

A small ray of hope was cast into this black picture a few weeks ago when the Student Government Ad-hoc Committee on the Judiciary submitted 30 pages of judicial reform to the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

Even though the report proposes a massive plan for the reorganization of the student courts and takes steps towards ending the "double standard" of penalties when women's closing hours are violated, no recommendations for the elimination or alteration of the above statutes were made.

The committee's recommendations are very moderate and do leave some things to be desired, but committee members know that even these few alterations will meet with opposition from some University administrators.

The report does point out that the committee felt it had to be "realistic" in its proposals for change.

Admittedly girls are not supposed to be as unmindful of their behavior as boys, but the current rules are just a bit ridiculous.

One can only hope that more complete revisions by the faculty and Student Government committeess are forthcoming.

Though the student committee did recognize the impossibility of making all rules equal for both male and female students it also reached the conclusion that "a woman student should be viewed as an individual capable of establishing her own code of conduct."

There are a few administrators who ought to consider this point more carefully.

BY MARY E. STROTHER

When they arrive in Chapel Hill, visiting football and basketball teams must wonder where UNC gets so many pretty girls.

"The answer is simple," says Rick Kramer, organizer of the 24 girls who meet the teams.

"The Carolina Sweethearts, as they're called, were organized last year to act as a welcoming committee for the teams coming to the Tar Heel campus," the president of the Carolina Ahtletic Association continued.

"They will be back on the job again after the Thanksgiving break to welcome the William and Mary basketball team for the first home game in our new Carmichael Gymnasium, Dec. 4.

"Every coach really appreciates it," Kramer added. "They ask questions about organizing similar systems at their own schools. We feel our unique system maintains very good relationships for us with visiting schools."

Meeting The Teams

The procedure for meeting the teams begins with one girl presenting a gift representative of UNC. Then the girls form a receiving line and introduce themselves to every team member.

Most of the Sweethearts feel the program is "great" and in the tradition of "southern hospitality for which UNC is known."

Audrey Wall, elementary education major from Raleigh, feels that "southern hospitality which the Sweethearts display" is the most essential and effective part of the program.

The Alderman Dormitory representative had a list of beauty honors before she came to Carolina as Broughton High School Queen of Hearts and St. Mary's Junior College May Queen.

She is a member of the Student Government Communications committee and the YWCA Hospital Committee at UNC.

Alice Graham, a Raleigh history student, enjoys the Sweetheart program because "it promotes school spirit and gives us a chance to meet visiting players."

Pam Hooper, math education, Winston Salem, thinks the "program is a good idea and well worthwhile, but could be handled more effectively."

She is a varsity cheerleader and has been in the Yack Court and Beat Duke Court.

Good Image

She was secretary of the Freshman Class, a member of the orientation committee, a member of the Attorney General's Staff and is Sweetheart representative from McIver Dorm.

Winborne is also a varsity cheerleader.

Anne (Zacki) Murphy, art education, Hillsborough, feels "it's a warm way in which to welcome visiting teams to the Tar Heel campus. I think they enjoy meeting the girls and getting a sample of what Carolina life is really like."

The 1964 Homecoming queen has a list of many beauty honors including Miss Triangle Pointer (1965), Yack Court, Beat Duke Court, Miss Consolidated University Court, Miss Maverick House (1966) and Miss WKIX (1965).

She spent this past summer in New York working as a professional model. She is a varsity cheerleader.

Welcome

Priscilla Patterson, history, New Bern, enjoys "welcoming the visiting teams to Carolina and making them feel a little more at home."

The senior dean's list student is a member of the Carolina Symposium, a varsity cheerleader and on the Student Government Honors Committee. She was in the 1964 Homecoming Court.

Carole Sandlin, math, Jacksonville, enjoys "having a chance to learn about other schools and their ideas" and feels "our unique system is very effective."

Sally Wiggins, elementary education, Charlotte, feels "getting to meet opposing players and to know the other Sweethearts" makes the program worthwhile.

Lisa Sherman, dramatic arts and international studies, North Caldwell, N. J., thinks the Sweetheart program "exemplifies the 'southern hospitality' expected fo find when I came South to School. I'm sure that the Yankees on the visiting teams are pleased in much the same way I was!"

She is a varsity cheerleader.

Mary Suzanne (Sue) Bennett, nursing, Asheville, "likes being personally involved with the teams that we play. By shaking hands with the boys and talking with them briefly, I feel like we give them a 'human' introduction to Chapel Hill and maybe lower their defenses a little."

Sue represents the Nurses Dorm.

Friendly School

Judy Fleming, education Durham, enjoys "meeting the visiting teams and coaches. I feel that they are quite impressed and they often say so — after all, Carolina's reputation is partly based on friendliness."

Judy is a varsity cheerleader, 1964-65 Sigma Chi Sweetheart at Duke and was in the homecoming court and DeMolay sweetheart in high school.

Rosemary Teague, journalism, Statesville, feels the program is "extremely effective because it shows UNC the friendly place it is and really makes the arriving teams feel at home."

The East Cobb representative is a member of the UNC Press Club and the Graham Memorial Publicity Committee.

Judy Howerton, nursing, Gibsonville, feels the effectiveness of the program could be improved but is satisfied with the warm welcome it gives the teams.

The Alpha Delta Pi representative has been on honor council, an orientation counselor, on Campus Chest, in the Yack Court and is a member of the Order of the Old Lampshades.

She was also May Queen of her high school.

Virginia Caroline Prince, sociology, Fuquay Springs, likes most "being able to meet the girls in the program and the boys on the visiting teams."

The Phi Mu sorority representative is a member of a co-rec carnival committee and was homecoming maid of honor in high school.

Libby Waite, special education (mental retardation), Mt. Airy, is the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority representative. She was in the homecoming court, on the student council and a dean's list student in high school.

Cheerleader

Patricia McMullan Rumley, studio art, Washington, is the Sweetheart representative from Delta Delta Delta sorority. She is a member of the Order of the Old Beanbirds.

Kay Cansler, special education, Winston Salem, is social chairman of Whitehead Dorm and was homecoming sponsor in high school. She is the representative from Whitehead.

The Winston Dorm representative is secretary of the junior class and a member of the Y Hospital Commitee. She was Homecoming queen for Montgomery Bell Academy in high school, and in the May Court at Pine Manor Junior College.

The Carolina Sweetheart alternates are Kappa Delta, Susan Ferebee, New Bern; Chi Omega, Shirley Ryland, Memphis, Tenn.; Delta Delta Delta, Hannah Vaughn, Woodland, N.C.; Kappa Kappa Gamma, Jackie Jennings, Chapel Hill; Alderman, Judy Dudley, Washington, D. C.; East Cobb, Toni Greenwood, Los Angeles, Calif.; West Cobb, Margaret Price, Elkin; McIver, Sally Buie, Biscoe; and Nurses, Mary Anne Smithers, Burlington.

University Orchestra Will Present Concert Tuesday

By SUSAN ZARR

The University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Earl Slocum, will present its 1965 winter concert Tuesday, Dec. 7, at 8 p.m. in Hll Hall.

The featured work of the evening will be Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, the three movements of which will be played by three advanced piano students in the UNC Department of Music: Nell Jones of Rockingham, Michael Kelly of Martinsville, Va., and William Robinson of Whitmire, S. C.

These three undergraduates, all pupils of faculty member William Newman, bring impressive credentials to their performance of this demanding and grandly beautiful work.

Nell Jones, a sophomore who holds the "Miss Richmond County" title, attended the Governor's School in Winston - Salem in 1963 and was chosen to participate in the American Pre-College Program in Paris during 1964. She has appeared several times on WUNC-TV's program, "Performance."

As a freshman, Michael Kelly held the Eric B. Schwartz Scholarship. Now in his junior year, he is the first recipient of the Sidney M. Dowd Scholarship. Kelly has performed for the University's Annual Piano Clinic and appeared last summer on a Hill Hall evening recital.

Senior William Robinson is a particularly experienced performer-scholar. Winner of National Merit and General Motors Scholarships, he is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and is in competition for Woodrow Wilson and Danforth Graduate Fellowships.

Robinson won the 1964 N. C. Federation of Music Clubs auditions and has played here at the University on several occasions.

Providing such an opportunity for budding performers to sink their teeth in the concerto literature is one of the most important functions of a University orchestra, according to conductor Slocum; throughout its 20 seasons under his direction, the UNC group has performed over 25 different concertos in addition to a large repertory of symphonies, overtures, suites and other orchestral compositions.

The University Symphony Orchestra is unusually well-equipped to work with a wide range of fine symphonic literature. Made up of students, faculty and townspeople, the organization can depend on a good-sized resident community of amateur musicians.

In addition to its annual winter and spring concerts, the University Orchestra provides accompaniments for the Chapel Hill Choral Club and the Opera Workshop.

A bandman as well as an orchestral conductor, Earl Slocum has served as president of the American Bandmasters Association and as State Chairman of the College Band Directors National Association.

Among the many other honors which have accrued to him throughout an active career are listings in Who's Who in America, Who's Who in Music and the Biographical Dictionary of American Scholars. As a flutist, Dr. Slocum has played in recital all over the South and in his home state of Michigan.

He is also a skilled arranger with several publications to his credit. Four of the short works to be played after intermission on Dec. 7 are transcriptions made by Dr. Slocum.

The University Symphony Orchestra concert is being sponsored by UNC's Tuesday Evening Series and is open to the public without charge.

Applications Being Taken For Scandinavian Study

The Scandinavian Seminar study program in Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden is now accepting applications for the academic year 1966-67. This opportunity to combine living with learning attracts graduates and other adults but has special appeal for the mature college student who wishes to broaden and intensify his study experience in the Scandinavian country of his choice.

The student stays with a Scandinavian family at the outset, speaking the language daily, and sharing its activities in the community. For the major part of the year he lives and studies at a folkehjskole — a residential school for young adults.

Except during the general Seminar and language courses, he is entirely separated from his fellow American students. At the folkehjskole particular attention is given to the value of the Scandinavian cultural heritage in today's changing world.

After the student has acquired a working knowledge of the language, he is able to devote considerable time to independent study and research in the field of his major interest, which culminates in the presentation of a project paper.

Society Will Hear Dr. John Graham

Dr. John B. Graham, of the UNC Medical School's Department of Pathology, will be the speaker at the Tuesday, Dec. 14, meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society. The meeting will be held in Room 05, Mitchell Hall, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Graham will speak on "Does High Blood Cholesterol Matter?" He has specialized in blood diseases and disorders and has been interested in genetic factors which may influence blood composition and its physiology.

Training Program Teaches Teachers

By WILL BERNARDIN

The Academic Year Institute (AYI) here at UNC is now in its 12th year of re-educating high school science teachers mostly from North Carolina and other Southern states.

Sponsored with almost $275,000 from the National Science Foundation, AYI offers courses in chemistry, biology, physics, and math to 45 teachers a year.

The teachers spend a year in residence at the University, sometimes on a leave of absence from their schools, but more often with no guaranteed job when they are through.

But these AYI teachers aren't by any means at a disadvantage. Almost 75 per cent of them have a Master of Arts in teaching when they leave UNC and have little trouble getting a job, almost always a better one than they had before.

Several school superintendents have said that even if the teacher didn't get his Masters, they would "be interested in pursuing a person with AYI on his application."

During AYI, teachers get a stipend of $3000 for the nine months, plus $450 for each dependent (up to 4), a book and travel allowance, and no charge for tuition. Admission to the program is highly selective, however — only about 6 per cent of the applicants get in.

Dr. Edwin C. Markham, Director of AYI here, explains the goals of the program. "We want to increase the knowledge of these teachers in the subjects they are teaching. Also, we hope they will become familiar with new programs in science, although we don't offer an intensive study of them."

John Goode, a science consultant in the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction in Raleigh, says of the program, "The mere fact that teachers come to the college campus means they gain content, attitudes and better understanding of just what current research lines are."

Goode noted that many of these AYI graduates go into small college teaching, and that this may be an even better investment, since they then teach the next generation of teachers.

The secondary schools in the Charlotte - Mecklenburg school system are quite enthusiastic about their AYI teachers. Dr. Robert Hanes, assistant supervisor there, says, "we are always short of people with the in-depth specialization that the Academic Year Institute gives."

The Charlotte schools consider AYI the best way to prepare for teaching a science course. They encourage their teachers to join the program, and are one of the few school systems that guarantees a job to their teachers when they return.

In one school Dr. Hanes recalls "we didn't have staff qualified to teach earth science, and now some AYI people have come back and given leadership for this program."

Several school officials mentioned AYI as a large help in educating their math teachers in the "new math." Schools all over the country are having many severe difficulties switching their sequences from old to new math. One teacher notes, "it's easier for children than teachers to learn these new concepts; thus AYI's program in Math is extremely helpful to the teachers who haven't had the time to concentrate on this system."

A biology teacher at the Chapel Hill High School, Mrs. Mary Lou Wheeler, went through the program in 1960 in order to brush up on some of the newer concepts in her field, and to get her Masters degree. "When I finished," she says, "I felt that I wasn't an old fogey; the course gave me a new self confidence in the classroom."

Concerning science education in North Carolina, Mrs. Wheeler says, "Something is improving it; and undoubtedly AYI has played its part. Older people like myself are far better teachers than they would have been."

UNC also offers a Summer Institute, sponsored by the National Science Foundation, for high school science teachers. Since the Summer Institute began in 1957, almost 600 teachers have been through it.

VISTA Group Coming Here

UNC students will have an opportunity from Dec. 6 to Dec. 10 to volunteer for service on Indian reservations, among migrant farm workers, in urban slums, and in rural pockets of poverty ranging from Appalachian hollows to Alaskan villages.

Representatives from Volunteers In Service to America (VISTA) will be at the University for a week to outline the program and its role in the war on poverty.

"All skills and abilities are needed to help lift people out of poverty," said Sam Fisk, leader of the VISTA contingent. "We're particularly looking for people who are committed enough to live and work full-time among the poor in this country — people who can listen, understand, and communicate with others, and who can use these abilities to bring about change."

During the week, the VISTA representatives will conduct an information center, meet with students, and show a film on the work of Volunteers in Appalachia. They will be available to speak with individuals and to accept applications from interested students.

UNC will be one of the first campuses visited as VISTA begins its second year of operations. Representatives will speak to students on nearly 300 campuses throughout the nation during the school year.

Fisk pointed out that over 1500 VISTA Volunteers are currently in training or on assignment to poverty areas throughout the country. About 75 per cent of them are between the ages of 18 and 24. "Many are recent college graduates but about half have had between one or three years of college. VISTA has accepted many students who joined after deciding to take a year out of college before graduating," he reported.

Volunteers serve for one year, receiving living expenses and medical care while they live and work among the poor. In addition to an allowance for food, housing, travel, and clothing, they receive $600 at the end of their service.

LEONARD PENNARIO, noted concert pianist, will perform tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall. He has won wide acclaim for his talents at the keyboard. Tickets for UNC students are $.50, and date tickets are $1.

Campus Chest Funds Interviews

The Campus Chest Executive Committee will hold interviews on Monday night, Dec. 6, at 7:30 p.m. in room 206 Y-Court for persons interested in having their groups or organizations receive portions of the funds that the Campus Chest hopes to raise later this year.

The groups or organizations should be such that students or other young people would be the beneficiaries of this money and preferably not groups or organizations who would receive funds from campaigns such as the Community Chest.

However, the Executive Committee is willing to hear all requests. If interested, please call Ellen Lentz (968-9083) or Dave Bruenner (968-9027) to make an appointment.

Gemini Flight Will Test Bone Growth In Space

The double Gemini shot calls for a rendezvous and formation flight of the two space ships 185 miles above the earth — perhaps within inches of each other.

Space agency officials say there is about a 50-50 chance of launching both capsules in the prescribed time to accomplish the rendezvous.

The weatherman predicted that at the planned 2:30 p.m. (EST) launch time Saturday there would be a scattered cloud ceiling above 3,000 feet, winds 9 to 17 miles an hour, seas two to three feet and temperature near 70.

Dr. Charles A. Berry, Gemini flight surgeon, subjected both astronaut teams to long sessions under the stethoscope and on the examining table today and said:

Later, Air Force Lt. Col. Borman and Navy Cmdr. Lovell attended a briefing on the condition of spacecraft and Titan 2 rocket systems and reviewed their complex flight plan which calls for them to circle the globe 206 times in 329 hours 30 minutes.

They also kept close tabs on launch pad preparedness. Liquid oxygen was piped into the power - producing fuel cell system and into the capsule life support system. A three-hour exercise called a precount was conducted during which technicians checked for stray voltage currents and fuel leaks in the spacecraft.

Gemini 7 will be jammed with instruments to gather medical data on Borman and Lovell.

Of major importance will be how much calcium is lost from the bones of the astronauts. This loss is what makes the bones of older people more fragile than that of younger persons. If a space pilot developed "old bones" in orbit, they could be damaged when they shift from weightlessness to re-entry forces several times the pull of gravity.

The four- and eight - day Gemini 4 and 5 flights showed abnormal loss of bone calcium.

The heart does not have to pump so hard in weightlessness. As a result, an astronaut's blood pressure and blood circulation is slowed down. To stimulate their hearts, the Gemini 7 crew will exercise by pulling on a stretchable cord. Lovell will wear pneumatic cuffs on his upper legs in an effort to attain some semblance of normal circulation.

ESP May Be The Reason That Girl Wins Automobiles

DURHAM (AP) — Mary Anne Murray may be blessed with considerable extrasensory perception and might have used it unknowingly to win three automobiles during the past year.

John Freeman, a research associate at the Institute of Parapsychology on the Duke University campus, said today Mary Anne's remarkable performance in raffle contests, "almost rules out luck or coincidence."

Parapsychology, by the way, is a science concerned with investigation of evidence of telepathy and the ability of persons to perceive or acquire knowledge without the use of the recognized senses.

Freeman said it was impossible to make a definite finding unless the 17-year-old Philadelphia girl underwent clinical tests in the Institute of Parapsychology.

"But," the researcher added, "from what I understand of her winnings, I'd say at first look that you must rule out luck and coincidence."

Mary Anne, a student at the Eden Hall Convent of Sacred Heart in Philadelphia has won two Cadillacs, a Mustang, a $200 hand organ, a $100 gift certificate and several smaller prizes during the past year.

Freeman said he doubted if anyone was born just plain lucky, but "everybody has extrasensory perception (ESP) although some have much more than others. It is just like any other ability. Everybody has a little, some have a lot."

It definitely is possible, Freeman continued, for a person to use ESP without even knowing it, and "that could be the case of Miss Murray."

He had one final oversvation: "I would hate to compete against her in a contest."

The Parapsychology Institute is a separate entity from Duke University but is given space on campus. Its members have faculty status although its investigations are separately financed.

RTVMP Department Shows Best Commercials Of 1965

Sick of TV commercials?

The department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures will show a film today at 4 p..m. on "The Best TV Commercials of 1965."

Don Trapp, of the RTVMP department, said the film is preceded by a seven-minute review of public opinion about TV commercials.

The 45-minute show will take place in the Swain Hall auditorium, classroom 1-A.

"The film was put together on behalf of the American Television Commercials Festival," Trapp said. "The festival is keyed to a national competition of commercials, judged by professionals."

The best commercials, he said, are judged by their ability to focus recognition on the sponsor's product. Today's film was made in an attempt to stimulate higher standards of taste in TV commercials.

Examination Will Be Given For Summer Employment

A nationwide competitive examination for temporary summer employment in the Federal Government as an office assistant or a science assistant has been announced by the Civil Service Commission.

Applicants seeking summer employment in grades GS-1 through 4 (at annual salary ranges of $3,507 to $4,641) in such occupations as clerk, stenographer, typist, office machine operator, student assistant, engineering aid, physical science aid, biological aid, and mathematics aid should ask for a copy of Announcement No. 380.

Candidates for the examination should obtain a Civil Service Form 5000-AB. This form is available at many post offices, at U. S. Civil Service Commission offices, and at Boards of U. S. Civil Service Examiners. The completed form should be mailed to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., 20415, before Jan. 3, 1966, to enable the candidate to take the 2 1-2-hour written text which will be given in various cities on a Saturday in late January or early February of 1966.

The test, which is scheduled to be given only once, is designed to measure clerical skills, vocabulary, reading comprehension, abstract reasoning, and table and chart interpretation. Sample questions will be provided in advance.

All citizens will be given equal opportunity to compete in the nationwide examination. Those who pass the test will be permitted to file applications with as many as six Federal agencies or installations: three in the Washington area and three outside of Washington.

Throughout the Nation, the names of applicants who pass the test and send their notices of eligibility to Federal agencies along with their applications for employment will be entered on agency rosters in ranked categories determined by their test scores. For example, those who score 95 and above will be in the top group, those scoring 90 to 94 in the second group, and so on. Consideration will be given first to those in the highest category.

In the metropolitan Washington area, there will be a further breakdown of the names of those who pass the test. In each test - score group, the names of those who live outside the District of Columbia, Virginia, and Maryland will be listed first, and will be given first consideration for available jobs. The purpose of this procedure in the Washington area is to give highly qualified people from all over the Nation the opportunity to gain the experience of working for a headquarters agency in Washington.

The examination for Office and Science Assistant positions will not be used to fill the following positions:

— the so - called blue-collar jobs;

— jobs in post offices, such as clerk-carrier, mail handler, etc. (candidates for postal summer jobs should apply to their local postmaster for the appropriate competitive examination);

— certain positions in the National Park Service and the Forest Service, such as Park Ranger, Forestry Technician, etc.

Further information about Federal summer employment can be found in the Civil Service Commission's pamphlet No. 68, "Summer Vacation Jobs in Federal Agencies," which will be available early in December at most places where application forms are distributed.

Summer Job Exams Given

The YM-YWCA Collegiate Council for the United Nations of the University of North Carolina announce yesterday that the sale of UNICEF Christmas Cards, date calendars, and United Nations postage stamps will begin Friday at the YM-YWCA Building and will continue through Sunday during the International Gift Bazaar.

The 1965 UNICEF cards include designs from England, France,Italy,Denmark, Israel, Senagal, and the U.S.A. which have been donated by world famous artists as their contribution to children in need. Also available will be United Nations stamps and a special mail box for direct cancellationat the United Nations Post Office in New York.

The proceeds realized from the sale will be contributed to UNICEF, The United Nations Children Fund, which assist over 500 long range programs for needy children and mothers in more than 100 countries.

Pharmacy Graduate Cited By Federal Government

The Andrew Craige Award for outstanding accomplishment in advancing professional pharmacy in the federal government has been awarded to a UNC pharmacy graduate.

Capt. Claude V. Timberlake received the award at the 72nd annual meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States in Washington, D. C.

Capt. Timberlake is on duty currently with the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Department of the Navy, in Washington. He is a native of Youngsville in Franklin County, attended Wake Forest College and graduated from the UNC School of Pharmacy in 1939.

Carter Will Lead Faculty Club Music

The meeting, scheduled for Tuesday, Dec. 14 in the Faculty Club, will feature a special Christmas luncheon at 12 noon with the Duke Faculty Club.

Carter said his program, featuring the Varsity Glee Club, would consist of varied contemporary music. There will be musical skits and satires plus music of a serious nature, and a new song, written by a New Bern woman and arranged by Carter, will have its premier.

Wayne Danielson, president of the Faculty Club, said those present could expect a visit from Santa Claus.

AED Initiates

They are William Shaffer Atkins, Jack Rudoph Baker, Walter Dalton Holder Jr., Don Clark Bright, Elwood Lee Montgomery Jr., John Henry Carver Jr., F. M. Simmons Patterson Jr., Paul Alan Ruskins, Fred W. Henderson, and John R. Stutt.

Dr. John Graham, professor of Pathology at the UNC School of Medicine, was guest speaker at the banquet.

JOHN BROWN'S BODY HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

The Graham Memorial Drama Committee will present "The Wingate Saga," a formal reading of "John Brown's Body," Book 4.

The reading, set for Friday night at 8 p.m., will be held in the G.M. Lounge. It will also be presented on educational television and at N. C. State University on December 9.

The Wingate Saga stars four veteran actors: Virginia Cornue, who appeared in various Carolina productions; Doug Barger, Playmaker costume designer, who appeared recently in the Yeats plays here on campus; Edward Kenestrick, acting head of The Department of Dramatic Arts at North Carolina College in Durham; and Laurel Dykstra, active in all fields of campus drama.

What's Up At Carolina

All Campus Calendar items must be submitted in person at the DTH offices in GM by 2 p.m. the day before the desired publication date (by 10 a.m. Saturday for Sunday's DTH). Lost and Found notices will be run on Tuesday and Saturdays only.

Of course the name of Tar Heel quarterback Danny Talbott comes to mind. Final ACC statistics show Talbott the total offensive leader — edging Virginia quarterback Tom Hodges. Talbott passed for 1,080 yards, rushed for 397 to post a total of 1,477 yards. Hodges, who led the offensive chase much of the season, checked in with 1,382 total yards — 1,299 yards of which came through the air.

Talbott ran away with the scoring department. He scored seven touchdowns, kicked 13 extra points and five field goals for a total of 70 points. The closest competitor was Duke sophomore fullback Jay Calabrese with 54 points.

In the pass receiving department, the Tar Heels placed two in the top ten. Wingback Bob Hume placed sixth in the department with 30 receptions for 266 yards.

John Pincavage of Virginia was the pass receiving leader with 45 catches for 572 yards. The 45 receptions were four short of the ACC record of 49.

The Tar Heels placed three men in the rushing top ten. Fullback Tom Lampman placed sixth in the overall standings with 444 yards in 108 carries. Close behind in seventh place was senior Max Chapman with 415 yards in 103 carries.

Of course a familiar figure was ninth in ACC rushing. You guessed it — Danny Talbott claimed the spot with 397 yards in 96 carries.

Three Tar Heel gridders received honorable mention nods on the Associated Press All-America football team.

Turning to basketball, junior Bob Lewis has taken over for Billy Cunningham in more ways than one.

The Washington, D. C., native has inherited the final spot in the pre-game player presentations. Four starters are introduced then out comes Bobby — just like old times.

But Lewis has also inherited the Billy Cunningham "towel-clinging" act. Remember the pre-game player introductions last season? Cunningham's name would be announced and he would take a few reluctant steps, flip his towel to one side, then join the four other starters.

Well, Lewis has the same moves. At least he displayed them in the pre-season scrimmages with the frosh.

* * *

Pre-season predictions for the ACC basketball race are running hot and heavy. The consensus seems to tab Duke the class outfit. The Blue Devils have two of last season's all-ACC performers, Jack Marin and Bob Verga, and second team choice Steve Vacendak.

Picked for second are the Maryland Terps. Coach Bud Millikan has all five starters returning from last season.

Picked for third is defending conference champ N. C. State.

The Tar Heels grabbed the fourth position. In fifth place are the Tigers of Clemson. In sixth is Wake Forest; seventh, Virginia; eighth, South Carolina.

Aycock Heads Mural Action

The alexander Poobahs edged the Joyner Savages, 12-6, on a second-half touchdown by Toby Hill. Mike O'Bryan scored in the first half for the Poobahs while Joe Auten had a TD for Joyner.

Zete I beat ATO Blue I, 20-7, to move up in the fraternity tournament. Jimbo Dempsey, Wallace Weeks and Sam Williams all had TD's while Lanny Harer had a safety.

Dolphins Dunk VMI 76-18, Tigers, Gamecocks Next

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The UNC Dolphins opened the swimming season with an easy 76-18 win over VMI yesterday at Bowman Gray indoor pool.

Carolina swept first place in every event and had only two third places.

In the 50-yard freestyle, Jay Scattergood of UNC came in first with a time of 23.1. McGee of VMI was second, Strud Norfleet of Carolina third and Todd of VMI fourth.

Steve Hildenbrand captured the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:55.9. John Sheldon of Carolina was second. Goodall and Shackelford of VMI were third and fourth.

Pete Worthen had an easy time winning the 500 - yard freestyle in 5:27.1. Sheldon finished second in the event, too, while VMI's Shackelford and Hedquist were third and fourth.

The 100-yard freestyle went to Russ Sleeper with a time of 51.0. Jim Bernuth of UNC was second, Goodall and Todd of VMI brought up the rear.

Lee Domina won the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:14.5. Van Landingham of VMI was second, Meybin of VMI was third. UNC's Rick Forum actually finished first, but was disqualified when he failed to touch the side with both hands.

Tom Adams barely nosed out Hosket of VMI to win the 200-yard butterfly. Hosket appeared to catch Adams in the last 25 - yard stretch, but Adams won with a last surge in a time of 2:18.4. Carolina's Dan Bissell was third.

Rick Mercuri zipped his way to the 200-yard backstroke win with a 2:10.5 time. Jack Hayden of Carolina was second, McGee and Augustine of VMI third and fourth.

Joe Lea won the 200 - yard breaststroke in 2:30.0. Jim Britt of UNC was second, Meybin and Sadler of VMI third and fourth.

In the diving competition, Rob Aydelette of Carolina scored 159.7 points to beat Morin of VMI, who totaled 132.8.

Carolina's 400 - yard medley relay team of Gaye Strat-Lipp and Ed Ragland won in a time of 3:59.1. The 400-yard freestyle relay team of Rick Miller, Ron Miller, Lee Domina and Ed Ragland splashed to a 3:29.9 winning time.

Coach Pat Earey of Carolina said the meet "went exactly as expected." The Dolphins hit the road for a meet with Clemson today and South Carolina on Friday.

Babies Pull Claws Of Tiger Cubs, 86-50

CLEMSON, S. C. — UNC Tar Babies put together a well - integrated offense, a tight defense and wide rebounding edge to charge to an 86-50 rout off Clemson's Tiger Cubs in their season opener here last night.

Heading the scoring for Coach Larry Brown's club in this loosely played match was Dick Grubar and Bill Bunting. Grubar, who flashed some tenacious defensive prowess in addition to his shooting touch, topped all scores for the game with 24-17 in the opening half — while Bunting fired away for 23.

Rusty Clark, who went scoreless in the first half after picking up three quick fouls, barged into the spotlight after the second period tapoff, hitting five straight shots. He fouled out with 17:38 remaining, but, luckily, was not needed. The Frosh had built a 54-26 lead by that time.

Bunting divided his scoring fairly equally between the halves, but his spurt — like Clark's — for ten straight points midway through the final period, was impressive.

Clemson grabbed a 2-0 lead at the game's outset, but Grubar (twice) and Gerald Tuttle connected quickly for Carolina and the Frosh were away and running. The Cubs trailed by only nine, 23-14 with 8:57 left. But then Grubar asserted himself by scoring ten of the next 14 points to run his team's lead to 37-19 with 2:45 left in the half.

Clark, who was forced to the bench twice during the opening half when he got his third and fourth fouls, broke from the starting gate like a man possessed after controlling the second half tapoff.

He tapped in one basket, took a Tuttle pass for a layup, jumped one in from the foul line, swished from the left of the lane and overpowered his defendant for a drive shot before hacking on a rebound for his fifth foul.

There were some catcalls from the stands while the big boy suffered through the first 20 minutes. But he showed them a nice comeback before fouling out.

In a good reserve role, Jim Bostick played a strong game off the board. Joe Brown grossed 11 points and rebounded equally with Bunting, who blocked numerous shots.

Then Paul Camnitz, Bill Adams, and Don Rindfleisch came in to score and round out the well-coordinated team victory.

Grail Tourney Begins

The yearly Grail Mural basketball contest has started today with competition between 128 dormitory, fraternity and town teams.

Team members will play in games lasting 30 minutes and face a stiff single elimination system.

The tournament is primarily a warm-up period for both players and officials who will participate in the regular intramural basketball season.

The contest is expected to last from three to seven days, and a trophy will be awarded the first place team.

Oh, yes. Something else that will help you at G.E. is an understanding of the kind of world we live in, and the kind of world we will live in.

There's a lot happening: The population is continuing to explode. The strain on resources is becoming alarming. At a time when men are being lured by the mysteries of space, we're faced with the task of making life on earth more livable.

There's a lot happening at G.E., too, as our people work in a hundred different areas to help solve the problems of a growing world: Supplying more (and cheaper) electricity with nuclear reactors. Controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams. Providing better street lighting and faster transportation.

This is the most important work in the world today: Helping to shape the world of tomorrow. Do you want to help? Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Berman And Lovell Pass Every Test; Smooth Pre-Launch

(AP) — Passing every test with ease and benefitting from the smoothest pre-launch preparations in the history of U. S. manned space flight, the Gemini 7 astronauts today were anxious to begin their 14-day space adventure tomorrow.

Frank Borman and James A. Lovell Jr., and their backup pilots demonstrated their high spirits by playing food tricks on the dietician who keeps a close watch on their menu.

As Gemini 7 preparations entered the final hours, technicians began readying the Gemini 6 spacecraft for the second launching in America's space doubleheader.

DTH Editor Ernie McCrary took off for Cape Kennedy this morning to view the launching of Gemini 7 which is scheduled for tomorrow.

Jenzano and McCrary will return to Chapel Hill Sunday — if all goes well.

Borman and Lovell are to ride a Titan 2 rocket into the skies at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Nine days later, on Dec. 13, astronauts Walter M. Schirra Jr. and Thomas P. Stafford are to take off in pursuit from the same launching pad in an effort to rendezvous and fly in formation with Gemini 7, perhaps within a few inches.

"We've got a reasonable chance of doing it," Flight Director Chris Kraft said today. "Much will depend on the quick turnaround on pad 19 and the condition of Gemini 7 after nine days in space.

"We've never had pre-launch activities to go so smoothly on a manned flight before," commented a space agency official. "There have been the usual minor technical difficulties, but nothing worrisome."

Borman, Lovell, Schirra and Stafford huddled today with Kraft, Gemini Program Manager Charles Mathews and other officials to review the mission — rocket, spacecraft, weather, worldwide tracking network and recovery forces.

The green light was flashed on all phases.

The dietician, Miss Jeanne Reid of the National Institutes of Health, reported Borman, Lovell and their backups — Edward H. White II and Michael Collins — have been jesting with her over their menu. She has been preparing 99 per cent of their meals and measuring their calcium intake for one of the major medical exams planned on the two-week journey.

She said that yesterday astronaut Donald K. Slayton smuggled a sack of empty oyster shells into the crew quarters at Cape Kennedy, and white and Collins placed them on their plates while she was out of the room. She noted oysters are high in calcium content and would have upset the experiment had they actually been eaten.

She said the Gemini 7 crew had five guests for dinner last night and the guests had peach cobbler dessert — something forbidden to the astronauts. Afterwards, she said, there were remnants of cobbler on the astronauts' plates, "But I'm sure they were just kidding and didn't eat any."

Borman and Lovell today spent hours reviewing the flight plan, while Schirra and Stafford practiced rendezvous maneuvers in a spacecraft simulator.

Berry said Borman and Lovell were primed and anxious to get going on the record flight which is to take them 206 times around the world in 329 hours 30 minutes.

Officials Report That N.C. Klan Will Try To Embarrass Weltner

Speech Scheduled For December 13

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

An Associated Press wire report from Washington yesterday said that Rep. Charles L. Weltner, D-Ga., was informed by Federal officials that North Carolina Ku Klux Klan leaders will do everything possible to embarrass him when he speaks at the Carolina Forum here Dec. 13.

The Federal officials said they have been told that J. Robert Jones, N. C. Grand Dragon, has announced on at least two occasions in public that the Klan will do everything in its power to embarrass and heckel the congressman from Georgia.

Weltner was reportedly given the information last weekend before he left to attend the Asian Development Bank Conference in Manila as a member of the U. S. delegation.

The Congressman is scheduled to be on a panel which will discuss the House Committee on Un-American Activities' investigation of the Klan. Several members of the North Carolina Klan were witnesses at the hearing.

Weltner called for the Congressional investigation of the KKK last February. He was also a member of the subcommittee of HUAC which held hearings in Washington in October and November.

Weltner, a member of a distinguished Georgia family whose members include the first chief justice of the State Supreme Court and a Confederate general, was the only deep South representative to vote for the 1964 Civil Rights Bill.

The panel discussion is being sponsored by the forum and the YMCA Human Relations Committee.

The panel will be made up of Weltner, Floyd McKissick, chairman of the board for C.O.R.E., and Peter B. Young, WRAL television newsman Malcomb B. Seawell, former N. C. attorney general who broke up the Klan in Robeson and Columbus Counties in 1952, has tentatively accepted.

Young, who covers civil rights for the Raleigh TV station, said yesterday, "I hope that the Klan will not heckel and embarrass Congressman Weltner. I, for one, want to hear what Weltner has to say."

Chairman of the Carolina Forum George Nicholson III said yesterday, "Neither the Forum nor the YMCA anticipate any problems. During its history the Forum has sponsored speakers representing all aspects of the political and ideological spectrum. I am more confident that not only the students and faculty, but the people of N. C. will accord Rep. Weltner a cordial welcome."

Second Gift Bazaar Opens

The second annual International Gift Bazaar, sponsored by the YM-YWCA, will be held today, Saturday and Sunday in the YMCA building.

Christmas gifts and handicrafts from around the world will be featured. Native North Carolina pottery will be sold alongside original African wood carvings. Lithographed prints of famous Canadian Eskimo soapstone carvings, drawings by C. B. Gruehl, and Kwakiutl artifacts will all be displayed.

In addition to the handicrafts, unique and inexpensive children's toys will be sold as well as UNICEF Christmas cards and UN stamps which may be cancelled at the UN. A coffee house with coffee from different countries will be open throughout the Bazaar for those shopping

The Bazaar will be open this evening, Saturday during and after the game until midnight, and Sunday afternoon and evening.

Proceeds from the Bazaar will go to the YM-YWCA and to the individual artists exhibiting at the show.

Carrier Enterprise Has Good, Bad Luck

SAIGON, Viet Nam (AP) — The aircraft carrier Enterprise, nuclear - powered pride of the U. S. Navy, hurled jets against Viet Cong targets in her combat debut yesterday. Good and bad luck mingled for this biggest of the world's warships.

But two were lost — one downed by guerrilla fire and the other ditched in the South China Sea after failing in five attempts to land on the 4 1-2-acre flight deck on returning from its assignment. All the four crewmen involved were saved.

Two other American planes, a Navy A4 Skyhawk and an Air Force F105 Thunderchief, were lost in widespread air operations. Communist gunners shot them down during raids on two bridges in North Viet Nam's Red River Valley, one 35 miles and the other 50 miles north of Hanoi.

A spokesman said no parachutes were spotted by other raiders and the two pilots were believed to have been killed. Rturning crewmen said they spotted four surface-to-air (SAM) missiles in flight in the area where the F105 was downed, but none scored hits.

American spokesmen announced U. S. Air Force planes attacked two missile sites 25 and 40 miles northeast of Hanoi Wednesday. Heavy dust and smoke prevented an immediate assessment of the damage.

Guerrillas, for instance, shot at a district headquarters at Bihn Chanh, 10 miles southwest of Saigon. U. S. Army helicopters helped government artillery and mortar squads repulse them. A spokesman said there were no U. S. or Vietnamese casualties and no confirmation any of the Viet Cong were hit.

Loss of the two Enterprise planes recalled the ill-starred first war mission of another big American military element, the Guam-based B52 jet bombers of the U. S. Strategic Air Command.

Of 30 of the eight-engine giants assigned to the initial saturation bombing of a "D" zone jungle area north of Saigon last June 18, two collided and crashed at sea, killing eight crewmen.

The carrier operation was rough in spots and an undercurrent of agitation was evident among personnel of this world's biggest warship, but a senior airman commented:

Rear Adm. Henry Miller of Fairbanks, Alaska, who commands the naval task force built around the Enterprise, said he is confident "The Big E" can break previous carrier records for the number of sorties, single combat fiights.

Miller cited her ability to stay on station longer than standard carriers because her eight nuclear reactors eliminate the need for refueling and the fact there is vast storage space for jet oil.

Officers had predicted the Enterprise would rack up 104 sorties today, against the old record of 131 for a day's operation by a standard carrier against targets in South Viet Nam. But the old record still stood tonight.

The lost planes, bad weather and other factors forced cancellation of 16 projected flights.

Returning from strikes, jet after jet bolted. That is a carrier term for a faulty landing attempt. They had to roar off and circle the 1,123-foot-long floating base for anotner try.

Carts loaded with bombs of up to 1,000 pounds crowded some areas of the enlisted men's mess deck. Including avaiation personnel, the Enterprise carries about 4,600 officers and men.

Viet Cong troop concentrations were among targets of the day. Suspected Communist storage and supply centers also were hit. It was near Song Be, 50 miles north of Saigon, that Viet Cong ground fire downed an Enterprise plane, an F4B Phantom.

Helicopters rescued both crewmen, one injured. They were not immediately identified.

Among ground operations as related by briefing officers:

— A U. S. Marine patrol killed one Viet Cong, captured another and seized three suspects in a sweep just south of the Chu Lai Airstrip, 340 miles northeast of Saigon.

— Vietnamese troops and river boats joined Wednesday in a drive near Co Gong, 30 miles south of Saigon, that led to the death of 14 Viet Cong and capture of four. A large stock of weapons and ammunition was seized. Government casualties were light.

Sugg Gets Medal

Capt. William C. Sugg Jr., USAF, was presented the Air Force Commendation Medal Thursday by Lt. Col. Kenneth W. Slaker Jr., USAF, the Professor of Aerospace Studies at UNC.

Sugg distinguised himself as Internist and Chief of the Air Force Clinic at Bergstrom Air Force Base, Tex., for a two-year period ending this summer.

Sugg was cited for having displayed "outstanding professional competence, conscientiousness and human relations ability in providing superior medical care for the base population" at Bergstrom.

AED Meeting

Three UNC doctors will address an undergraduate and freshman pre-medical and predental orientation program Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Howell Hall.

The meeting is sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Delta, international pre-medical and predental honor society.

Speaking at the orientation session will be Dr. Christopher C. Fordham, III, chairman of the committee on admissions for the Medical School; Dr. Robert J. Shankle, chairman of the committee on admissions for the Dental School; and Dr. William R. Straughn Jr., undergraduate pre - medical and pre-dental adviser and professor of bacteriology with the Medical School.

Robert H. Bilro, president of the Medical School student body will also speak.

UP Elections

The University Party will hold its annual elections for party offices Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The party chairmanship vice-chairmanships and four positions on the UP Executive Committee will be filled.

All candidates must notify chairman Jim Hubbard of their intentions of running within 45 hours of the meeting.

Hubbard urged all members to attend and vote.

Interviews

Interviews will be held today and next week for the Men's and Women's Coordinators of next fall's orientation program.

Bob Wilson, chairman of orientation, urged interested students to call the Student Government offices for appointments. Interviews will be from 3-4 p.m. today, Monday and Wednesday.

Peace Corps Talk

"Culture Shock, Mental Health, and Peace Corps Volunteers," will be discussed by Dr. Charles Arnold of the School of Public Health on December 6 at 8 p.m. in the fourth floor lounge of the Alumni Building.

MRC Dance

A semi - formal Christmas dance sponsored by the Men's Residence Council and the Carolina Woman's Council will be held Friday, December 10 from 9 to 12 p.m. in the Carolina Inn.

Angels, Cadets

The Arnold Air Society and Angel Flight of AFROTC held a joint initiation ceremony at Murphy Hall Wednesday evening.

Dr. John B. Adams of the school of Journalism was the principal speaker.

Board Choice To Be Aired

By The Associated Press

A committee decided Thursday at its organizational meeting to hold a public hearing next March to obtain public views in the methods of selecting University of North Carolina Board of Turstees.

Former Gov. Luther Hodges, chairman of the committee on selection of UNC trustees, said a date for the hearing will be announced later.

The committee was created by the 1965 Legislature to study the selection of university trustees and report back to the 1967 legislative session.

Dr. Grier Martin, president of Davidson College, was elected vice chairman at the initial meeting held at the Institute of Government. Mrs. Naomi Morris of Wilson was chosen secretary.

Openings Still Available In 'Careers For Carolina'

Openings for the "Careers for Carolina" program, which is designed to acquaint students with job opportunities in various levels of government, are still available.

The session will be held in the Institute of Government's Knapp Building, and will run from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, institute Director John Sanders, Greensboro City Manager George Aull, N. C. Prisons Director V. L. Bounds, and Charles Woods of the federal Bureau of the Budget are among the scheduled speakers.

According to coordinator Jim Brame, the program will be limited to the first 100 students to sign up. The only expense of the program will be a luncheon at Chase Cafeteria.

Students attending the day-long session will have the opportunity to question speakers following their presentations.

The program was first held in 1963, and is co-sponsored by the Institute of Government and the UNC Student Government.

DR. J. B. RHINE, head of the Duke Parapsychology Labratory, will speak on extra sensory perception next Thursday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. "ESP — What Can We Make Of It" will be sponsored by the Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

An Unusual Conference

University conferences and seminars are usually a dime a dozen, but the one planned this weekend merits more interest than most.

Student Government is sponsoring the Residence Hall Officers Conference Saturday and Sunday, and it is particularly well-timed. This is the make-or-break period for the residence college system. The recent student approval of immediately increased social fees to finance the venture means that there is no longer time for delay.

As with any new system, unexpected problems will be encountered in the residence colleges, so student leadership must be exceptionally well-prepared. Whether the student is a residence hall or college officer should make no difference in participation in the conference because the problems and goals of halls and colleges are mutual.

Speeches by Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, sociology professor Dr. H. Douglas Sessoms, Student Body President Paul Dickson, former SG president Mike Lawler and Spencer Dormitory President Ellen Allen should provide valuable information. The topics will include the administration's role in residence hall activity, recreation planning, the relationship between Student Government and residence colleges, educational programming and cooperative activities between men's and women's halls.

Don Wilson, who has been making arrangments for the conference, has asked each hall president to bring an interested freshman or sophomore to the meeting so that continuity in leadership can be established. As it is now, too many halls have no resident with sufficient knowledge of the problems involved to take over leadership positions when vacancies occur.

The Saturday session will run from 2:15 to 6 p.m. and Sunday meetings will last from 2 to 5:30 p.m.

The idea is not new. A similar conference was planned last year, but it hardly got past the talking stage. Plans are complete now, however, and considerable good for all campus residents can be accomplished if residence hall and college officers attend with enthusiasm.

Community College Neglect

Greensboro Daily News

Accreditation now seems unlikely to be lost altogether to state-supported higher education because of the speaker ban law. But just because it is available it is by no means automatic for North Carolina's host of new community colleges. That is the most significant item from the Southern Association's meeting at Richmond this week. And it emphasizes anew that North Carolina has dissipated its energies over a mere phase of the accreditation problem.

Two features make the community college vitally important. The Carlyle Commission (on education beyond the high school) saw them as valuable adjuncts to the higher educations system — relieving enrollment pressures on established residential colleges and universities, and putting college training within the reach of boys and girls who can commute to a local center.

Now the federal higher education act — moving toward the desirable national goal of making higher education available to any student whose brains and motivation merit it — has made loans and grants available to lower and middle income families. But these loans and grants may be awarded only to those attending accredited colleges.

Five new community colleges — Sandhills, Central Piedmont, Albemarle, Gaston and Southeastern — are without accreditation. The requirements for getting it can be reduced in the main to two words: faculty and books.

In both areas the problem is bothersome. Many new community colleges lie fairly distant from urban or older educational centers where a pool of qualified instructors, full-time or part-time, could be obtained. Nor can libraries, without considerable expenditures, be collected overnight.

The problems of North Carolina's community colleges, then, underscore not only the frivolity of those who pretend that accreditation doesn't matter. They are also the problems of potential thousands of Tar Heel boys and girls for whom community colleges, with the assistance of federal grants, are the feasible and practical hope for higher education.

Pacifists Need To Visit Viet Nam To See Facts

(Editor's note: The following editorial was written by T-Sgt. Peter G. Gainutsos. editor of The Advisor, newspaper of the Air Force's Second Air Division at Tan Son Nhut Airfield in Viet Nam.)

Time was when a boy went to college to study law, medicine, engineering, or one of the arts. And girls went to get the Mrs. degree. But for too many it is not that way anymore

Today's crop of college cut-ups are no longer content to swallow goldfish, crowd themselves into telephone booths or small foreign cars. They–and we refer to the minority that makes the majority of the voice–now insist on dictating government policies, and are ready to parade, demonstrate, and sit in at the drop of a cause.

The latest gimmick among these intellectual midgets is a campaign to urge all members of the Armed Forces to desert their posts, rather than serve in Viet-Nam.

I have no quarrel with the right of the individual to voice his opinion. However, the hysterical babbling of these bourgeois boors borders on sedition, if not treason. I leave that to the Justice Department. It is a sad day indeed when the words "honor, duty, and country" have come to mean so little.

As a member of the military family, I have spent the better part of my adult life in the Saigons of the world. It never occurred to me to disobey an order, or to question the right of my Government to send me anywhere to protect and preserve its interests.

Like a lot of us here in Viet-Nam, I have had occasion to be at the base theatre during one of the memorial services, and I have seen the slow walking and heard somber music and soft prayers for those to whom rotation dates are no longer important. I muttered my own prayers, as well as giving silent thanks that it was not me inside that box.

As I stood there, I remembered preachings of these mentally retarded adults back home, and my compassion for a dead man turned to shame, and then anger that they dared to ask me to prostitute my profession, ask me to bring dishonor to myself, to my service, and to my country.

It is difficult enough to understand when the supposedly learned citizenry take the rostrum to rant and rave against our Government, and thereby feed the propaganda mills to the north, but to be subjected to the meaningless chatter of these embecilic sloths, whose idea of bravery is to lead a panty raid on a girls' barracks, is more than human dignity can bear.

It has been suggested that they all be drafted into the service and brought to Viet-Nam. I could not agree less. To put these morons in a uniform is to insult the memory of those who never came back from Guadalcanal or Pork Chop Hill, or those who did not survive the bombing of the Brinks Hotel or the American Embassy here.

Instead clean them up, cut their hair, and take away their sweat shirts and sneakers and bring them to Viet-Nam to live among the people. Let them expound their theories about the good, the kind, the misunderstood Viet Cong among the villagers whose homes were destroyed and their meager rice stolen.

Let them talk about war mongering to the widow of a Vietnamese Army private, who earns her fish and rice as a prostitute, or the village woman who lost a hand, one finger at a time, and finally the wrist to these misunderstood Viet Cong because she dared to stand up for what she believed was right.

Draft them into the military? Never! Ours is a proud organization made up of men and women who have ideals and principals and, what's even more important, men and women who have the courage and the will to live up to those beliefs.

They take great pride in themselves, in their uniforms, and in their nation, qualities that the campus "cuties" have yet to acquire. Until they do, they will never "belong." Their voice will be that of the semi-deicated, the fool who will leave behind only a legacy of shame, dishonor and ignorance

Marchers Ignore Cause

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Regarding my recent letter (which, incidentally, was rather chopped up by the editors and-or printers, and from which several key points--for example, the continuing U.S. effort to improve the South Vietnamese government with a view to more freedon for its citizens--were deleted) and the reply of Nancy Thompson, whom I thank for her correction.

I must, indeed, plead guilty to repeating myself and also to confusing my exposition with a misplaced phrase. I would hope, however, that even my critic would accept the sentence in question as it should have read: "The word 'war' is a description of a state of affairs." The misplaced phrase could hardly have been a deliberate "resort" since it obviously obscured the very point I intended to make. Interpretation depends not only upon definitions of words, but upon their implied meanings in a given context. In the case of the foregoing sentence, the intended implication (which I thought obvious) was as follows: ". . . it is impossible to be for or against a state of affairs in the same way in which one may be for or against the cause of a state of affairs.

Let me clarify still further: It is irrational to discuss an event as though it were a cause. And to discuss an event and deliberately ignore its cause is to insult not only one's own intelligence, but the intelligence of one's audience as well.

Yet this is precisely what the "peace marchers" have done. It is simply not enough to say: "I am against the horrors of war." The question is: "How are the horrors of war to be eliminated?"

The "peace marchers" are apparently of the opinion that if we will only close our eyes to aggression it will go away-- or will at least be considerate enough to stop itself at some happily suitable geographic point. If we will just give the aggressors what they are trying to take now by force, they will not want anything more.

All of history, I believe, demonstrates the irrationality of such a view. Indeed, one has only to go back a few short years to the experience of the Second World War to see what pacifism accomplishes. Quite aside from Neville Chamberlain at Munich, how can any historian or political scientist worthy of the title choose to ignore the resounding words of historian-philosopher Oswald Spengler who observed in 1934–seven years before Hawaii was bombed: "..America must not grow weary. The only respect Japan will have is toward a nation virile and strong like itself. To avoid war the United States must maintain an attitude of calm and assured force.."

But the United States did not maintain such an attitude.

Are we now to invite another near disaster for America, are we now to invife another world war because some scholars refuse to learn the lesson taught by history. Surely the lesson is not so difficult to understand: Aggression increases in direct proportion to the lack of response to it.

I might add that I also am interested in both sides of the argument. For that reason I regret that my critic offered no rebuttal to my contentions, but only an evaluation of my semantic skill (which, admittedly, is far from perfect). Perhaps, however, the absence of such rebuttal speaks for itself.

Pravda And DTH

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

Congratulations DTH! You have won the Red Star award. Only a newspaper supported with conscripted money from all, but which caters to the interests of a few can qualify for such a distinguished award. ward.

Secondary requirements are (1) a quality journalism typified by an ignorance of the distinction between presenting an issue and taking a stand on the issue, (2) messing with letters-to-the-editor in such a way as to delete the meat of the argument which would neatly refute the editor's arguments and to leave only an introduction and a conclusion that is out of context and is thus meaningless, and (3) after having done such messing to have the the gall of putting the original author's name at the bottom of the letter without any indication that the letter has been tampered with.

Yes the competition was close, you closest rival being The Pravda, but after reading the editorial page the Tuesday morning of the campus radio referendum and seeing the results of said policy on the final outcome of the referendum, the commissar's decision was final: the DTH gets the Red Star.

If you are going to mess with this letter, too, please be so kind as to use little round things called dots to indicate where you have tampered.

Too Many Gifts

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Several Christmases ago I wrote that it didn't bother a child to see Santa Claus on every street corner. Recently I read a report of a psychologist's talk to parents, in which he spoke against live Santas in the store, probably on the streets also, because, with their loud voices and laughter, th often shocked a child. It is all right to have pictures of Santa displayed, and a Santa in the parade, but let's leave something of the magic of Santa Claus, the spirit of love and giving, to the child's imagination.

Once, when I was teaching first graders, I told the fairy tale of the child who rubbed his magic lantern and a flying blanket appeared, and the child soared into the wild blue yonder. One child, his eyes big with wonder, asked, "WHERE DID he GET his MAGIC?" That was the $64 question then. It was before the day of the air-plane.

It is a temptation, at this happy season, to over-do the giving of too many gifts to the child. I have seen occasions when I thought the gift-giving was exaggerated, but I must plead guilty myself, for my young son, after opening up his gifts one Christmas, exclaimed, "This is too much Christmas!"

It is easy to be carried away by the Christmas spirit. Nobody wants to be a Scrooge. But let's keep it under control. And about Santa Claus. Let's leave something to the child's magical sense of wonder!

Women's Rules

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

My first impression of Terry Fowler's column on women's rules suggested some nightmarish excerpt from a Baptist student-group discussion.

It was hard to figure out. He says at first he's going to reexamine the "basic rationale" behind women's rules. He pokes fun at intuitionist ethics, but seems to want to justify the rules as administratively practical because they keep girls from getting lost and inhibit panty raiders, and he adds that "of course" they are practical "in essence." But it looks as if his thinking bogs down about half way through (where he says "in any case") and he switches tracks to cover up. From then on, all he says, in essence, is that he wants to abolish women's rules because we need to practice making decisions, that under the rules questions of whether, when, where, and with whom to shack up are not sufficiently at our discretion for us to develop into "responsible citizens" capable of handling on our own the morally ambiguous situations we'll be meeting later on in life.

It's a shame Fowler got sidetracked like this, becasse the "basic rationale" he started out to analyse is crucial in deciding whether or not to scrap women's rules, and Fowler seems to have realized this. When it's something like cheating, stealing, or black lies, everyone can see sense in rules. The "basic rationale" is obvious–the harm of cheating, stealing, and black lies is obvious--and no one would be prompted to reexamine the "basic rationale" of the rules against them. The harm of discreet sex, in naked contrast, is not at all obvious. The sense in having rules against it is very hard to perceive, and the "basic rationale" of the existing rules needs very much to be reexamined. Try again, Fowler?

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel.

Vietnam Telegram

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

In the November 19th issue of the DTH, the Vietgram was referred to as "The special Thanksgiving petition supporting U.S. involvement in Vietnam.." Both the originators of the Vietgram and the DTH presented the telegram as a non-political expression of remembrance and gratitude, and it was with this understanding that many who are not in support of U.S. involvement signed the Vietgram. As one of these many, I would like to clarify my position and request that the DTH clarify its article of November 19th.

It will determine how well man withstands the space environment for 14 days, the longest flight now planned in the Apollo - Manned Lunar Landing Program. Gemini 5 astronauts L. Gordon Cooper Jr. and Charles Conard Jr., demonstrated in August that man has no problems during eight days in orbit, the shortest Apollo flight planned.

In a Cape Kennedy hangar, technicians began taking the wraps off the Gemini 6 spacecraft. The capsule has been in "bonded storage" since its original flight date was washed out Oct. 25 when the Agena target satellite with which Schirra and Stafford were to have chased failed to reach orbit.

Electrical connections were checked and 42 pounds of water loaded aboard the craft. It is to be mated with a Titan 2 rocket the day after Borman and Lovell blast off.

Borman, White and Cooper are Air Force lieutenant colonels; Lovell and Conrad are Navy commanders; Collins is an Air Force major, and Slayton is a civilian.

Print Collection Now On Display

A collection of prints by four outstanding print makers is the featured show at The Art Gallery of Chapel Hill from Dec. 6 to Jan. 29. Artists included in the show are Ray French, Dean Meeker, Rudy Pozzatti and Benton Spruance.

French's engravings and metal relief etchings have won over 40 prizes and purchase awards. He has exhibited widely in this country and Europe. His work has been represented in traveling shows circulated by the Museum of Modern Art, the American Federation of Arts and the Society of American Graphic Artists.

A native of Terre Haute, Indiana, French is professor of art at De Pauw University, Greencastle, Indiana.

Meeker received his art training at the Art Institute of Chicago and now teaches at the University of Wisconsin. He has stated that, "As an artist I am indeed interested in subject as a vehicle."

Many of his color prints are concerned with the Hero, Icarus, Genghis Khan, Hannibal. "Ultimately one reshapes these impulses and retells a story that is not mythological or literary, but graphic," he said.

Pozzatti was educated at the University of Colorado and teaches at the University of Indiana in Bloomington. He has received many study grants and traveled extensively. He has recently returned from a six weeks tour of Yugoslavia. A selection of prints made while he was in Belgrade will be included in this show.

Spruance is a resident of Philaselphia, Pa. His prints are widely exhibited and are included in many prominent collections. In this selection of colored lithographs, there is a trptych of studio prints. The subjects of the three prints are the "Studio Stairs," "Studio Press," and "Studio Window." Spruance's prints range in subject matter from Biblical Characters to the abstract.

The prints of these four printmakers not only represent a wide choice of subjects, but also represent the variety of techniques at the disposal of the graphic artist.

Gallery hours are 10:30 to 5, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; Saturday from 12 to 5.

APO Collects Gifts Today

Notre Dame Investigates Possible Food Poisoning

SOUTH BEND, Ind., (AP)—A possible mass food poisoning at the University of Notre Dame was being investigated yesterday by authorities.

More than 150 students complained of illness yesterday and 35 were hospitalized overnight.

"It seems to be easing off a little today," said Dr. George Colip, university physician.

Most of the students became ill after the midday meal in the north and south dining halls, he said.

"But a few students reported they were ill Tuesday night, so we're not certain food poisoning is involved."

Dr. Louis Howe, director of the county health department, said it would be several days before laboratory tests can be completed.

The Rev. Joseph Simons, dean of students, said baked beans and onions served for lunch yesterday appeared to be the prime suspects.

Law Interviews

Professor Walter Wadlington, School of Law, University of Virginia, will visit the campus on Tuesday, Dec. 7, to talk with students interested in attending law school. A group meeting will be scheduled in Room 8, Gardner Hall at 2 p.m. on that date. Interested students should go to 211 Gardner Hall to sign up for the meeting.

Three Escaped Felons Caught

Three felons who escaped from a road gang early Wednesday morning were all back behind bars Wednesday night.

John Gardner, 24, was captured about noon. The other two, Henry H. Garrie, 23, and Earl Calahand, 23, were picked up Wednesday night on N.C. 54 heading toward Raleigh.

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake said, "They threw their coats away when they ran. They were glad to be picked up, they were about frozen.

The three convicts were from the Orange County Prison in Hillsborough.

An Unusual Conference

University conferences and seminars are usually a dime a dozen, but the one planned this weekend merits more interest than most.

Student Government is sponsoring the Residence Hall Officers Conference Saturday and Sunday, and it is particularly well-timed. This is the make-or-break period for the residence college system. The recent student approval of immediately increased social fees to finance the venture means that there is no longer time for delay.

As with any new system, unexpected problems will be encountered in the residence colleges, so student leadership must be exceptionally well-prepared. Whether the student is a residence hall or college officer should make no difference in participation in the conference because the problems and goals of halls and colleges are mutual.

Speeches by Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, sociology professor Dr. H. Douglas Sessoms, Student Body President Paul Dickson, former SG president Mike Lawler and Spencer Dormitory President Ellen Allen should provide valuable information. The topics will include the administration's role in residence hall activity, recreation planning, the relationship between Student Government and residence colleges, educational programming and cooperative activities between men's and women's halls.

Don Wilson, who has been making arrangments for the conference, has asked each hall president to bring an interested freshman or sophomore to the meeting so that continuity in leadership can be established. As it is now, too many halls have no resident with sufficient knowledge of the problems involved to take over leadership positions when vacancies occur.

The Saturday session will run from 2:15 to 6 p.m. and Sunday meetings will last from 2 to 5:30 p.m.

The idea is not new. A similar conference was planned last year, but it hardly got past the talking stage. Plans are complete now, however, and considerable good for all campus residents can be accomplished if residence hall and college officers attend with enthusiasm.

Community College Neglect

Greensboro Daily News

Accreditation now seems unlikely to be lost altogether to state-supported higher education because of the speaker ban law. But just because it is available it is by no means automatic for North Carolina's host of new community colleges. That is the most significant item from the Southern Association's meeting at Richmond this week. And it emphasizes anew that North Carolina has dissipated its energies over a mere phase of the accreditation problem.

Two features make the community college vitally important. The Carlyle Commission (on education beyond the high school) saw them as valuable adjuncts to the higher educations system — relieving enrollment pressures on established residential colleges and universities, and putting college training within the reach of boys and girls who can commute to a local center.

Now the federal higher education act — moving toward the desirable national goal of making higher education available to any student whose brains and motivation merit it — has made loans and grants available to lower and middle income families. But these loans and grants may be awarded only to those attending accredited colleges.

Five new community colleges — Sandhills, Central Piedmont, Albemarle, Gaston and Southeastern — are without accreditation. The requirements for getting it can be reduced in the main to two words: faculty and books.

In both areas the problem is bothersome. Many new community colleges lie fairly distant from urban or older educational centers where a pool of qualified instructors, full-time or part-time, could be obtained. Nor can libraries, without considerable expenditures, be collected overnight.

The problems of North Carolina's community colleges, then, underscore not only the frivolity of those who pretend that accreditation doesn't matter. They are also the problems of potential thousands of Tar Heel boys and girls for whom community colleges, with the assistance of federal grants, are the feasible and practical hope for higher education.

Pacifists Need To Visit Viet Nam To See Facts

(Editor's note: The following editorial was written by T-Sgt. Peter G. Gainutsos, editor of The Advisor, newspaper of the Air Force's Second Air Division at Tan Son Nhut Airfield in Viet Nam.)

Time was when a boy went to college to study law, medicine, engineering, or one of the arts. And girls went to get the Mrs. degree. But for too many it is not that way anymore

Today's crop of college cut-ups are no longer content to swallow goldfish, crowd themselves into telephone booths or small foreign cars. They–and we refer to the minority that makes the majority of the voice–now insist on dictating government policies, and are ready to parade, demonstrate, and sit in at the drop of a cause.

The latest gimmick among these intellectual midgets is a campaign to urge all members of the Armed Forces to desert their posts, rather than serve in Viet-Nam.

I have no quarrel with the right of the individual to voice his opinion. However, the hysterical babbling of these bourgeois boors borders on sedition, if not treason. I leave that to the Justice Department. It is a sad day indeed when the words "honor, duty, and country" have come to mean so little.

As a member of the military family, I have spent the better part of my adult life in the Saigons of the world. It never occurred to me to disobey an order, or to question the right of my Government to send me anywhere to protect and preserve its interests.

Like a lot of us here in Viet-Nam, I have had occasion to be at the base theatre during one of the memorial services, and I have seen the slow walking and heard somber music and soft prayers for those to whom rotation dates are no longer important. I muttered my own prayers, as well as giving silent thanks that it was not me inside that box.

As I stood there, I remembered preachings of these mentally retarded adults back home, and my compassion for a dead man turned to shame, and then anger that they dared to ask me to prostitute my profession, ask me to bring dishonor to myself, to my service, and to my country

It is difficult enough to understand when the supposedly learned citizenry take the rostrum to rant and rave against our Government, and thereby feed the propaganda mills to the north, but to be subjected to the meaningless chatter of these embecilic sloths, whose idea of bravery is to lead a panty raid on a girls' barracks, is more than human dignity can bear.

It has been suggested that they all be drafted into the service and brought to Viet-Nam. I could not agree less. To put these morons in a uniform is to insult the memory of those who never came back from Guadalcanal or Pork Chop Hill, or those who did not survive the bombing of the Brinks Hotel or the American Embassy here.

Instead clean them up, cut their hair, and take away their sweat shirts and sneakers and bring them to Viet-Nam to live among the people. Let them expound their theories about the good, the kind, the misunderstood Viet Cong among the villagers whose homes were destroyed and their meager rice stolen.

Let them talk about war mongering to the widow of a Vietnamese Army private, who earns her fish and rice as a prostitute, or the village woman who lost a hand, one finger at a time, and finally the wrist to these misunderstood Viet Cong because she dared to stand up for what she believed was right.

Draft them into the military? Never! Ours is a proud organization made up of men and women who have ideals and principals and, what's even more important, men and women who have the courage and the will to live up to those beliefs.

They take great pride in themselves, in their uniforms, and in their nation, qualities that the campus "cuties" have yet to acquire. Until they do, they will never "belong." Their voice will be that of the semi-deicated, the fool who will leave behind only a legacy of shame, dishonor and ignorance

Marchers Ignore Cause

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Regarding my recent letter (which, incidentally, was rather chopped up by the editors and-or printers, and from which several key points–for example, the continuing U.S. effort to improve the South Vietnamese government with a view to more freedon for its citizens--were deleted) and the reply of Nancy Thompson, whom I thank for her correction.

I must, indeed, plead guilty to repeating myself and also to confusing my exposition with a misplaced phrase. I would hope, however, that even my critic would accept the sentence in question as it should have read: "The word 'war' is a description of a state of affairs." The misplaced phrase could hardly have been a deliberate "resort" since it obviously obscured the very point I intended to make. Interpretation depends not only upon definitions of words, but upon their implied meanings in a given context. In the case of the foregoing sentence, the intended implication (which I thought obvious) was as follows: ". . . it is impossible to be for or against a state of affairs in the same way in which one may be for or against the cause of a state of affairs.

Let me clarify still further: It is irrational to discuss an event as though it were a cause. And to discuss an event and deliberately ignore its cause is to insult not only one's own intelligence, but the intelligence of one's audience as well.

Yet this is precisely what the "peace marchers" have done. It is simply not enough to say: "I am against the horrors of war." The question is: "How are the horrors of war to be eliminated?"

The "peace marchers" are apparently of the opinion that if we will only close our eyes to aggression it will go away-- or will at least be considerate enough to stop itself at some happily suitable geographic point. If we will just give the aggressors what they are trying to take now by force, they will not want anything more.

All of history, I believe, demonstrates the irrationality of such a view. Indeed, one has only to go back a few short years to the experience of the Second World War to see what pacifism accomplishes. Quite aside from Neville Chamberlain at Munich, how can any historian or political scientist worthy of the title choose to ignore the resounding words of historian-philosopher Oswald Spengler who observed in 1934–seven years before Hawaii was bombed: "..America must not grow weary. The only respect Japan will have is toward a nation virile and strong like itself. To avoid war the United States must maintain an attitude of calm and assured force.."

But the United States did not maintain such an attitude.

Are we now to invite another near disaster for America, are we now to invite another world war because some scholars refuse to learn the lesson taught by history. Surely the lesson is not so difficult to understand: Aggression increases in direct proportion to the lack of response to it.

I might add that I also am interested in both sides of the argument. For that reason I regret that my critic offered no rebuttal to my contentions, but only an evaluation of my semantic skill (which, admittedly, is far from perfect). Perhaps, however, the absence of such rebuttal speaks for itself.

Pravda And DTH

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

Congratulations DTH! You have won the Red Star award. Only a newspaper supported with conscripted money from all, but which caters to the interests of a few can qualify for such a distinguished award. ward.

Secondary requirements are (1) a quality journalism typified by an ignorance of the distinction between presenting an issue and taking a stand on the issue, (2) messing with letters-to-the-editor in such a way as to delete the meat of the argument which would neatly refute the editor's arguments and to leave only an introduction and a conclusion that is out of context and is thus meaningless, and (3) after having done such messing to have the the gall of putting the original author's name at the bottom of the letter without any indication that the letter has been tampered with.

Yes the competition was close, you closest rival being The Pravda, but after reading the editorial page the Tuesday morning of the campus radio referendum and seeing the results of said policy on the final outcome of the referendum, the commissar's decision was final: the DTH gets the Red Star.

If you are going to mess with this letter, too, please be so kind as to use little round things called dots to indicate where you have tampered.

Too Many Gifts

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Several Christmases ago I wrote that it didn't bother a child to see Santa Claus on every street corner. Recently I read a report of a psychologist's talk to parents, in which he spoke against live Santas in the store, probably on the streets also, because, with their loud voices and laughter, th often shocked a child. It is all right to have pictures of Santa displayed, and a Santa in the parade, but let's leave something of the magic of Santa Claus, the spirit of love and giving, to the child's imagination.

Once, when I was teaching first graders, I told the fairy tale of the child who rubbed his magic lantern and a flying blanket appeared, and the child soared into the wild blue yonder. One child, his eyes big with wonder, asked, "WHERE DID he GET his MAGIC?" That was the $64 question then. It was before the day of the air-plane.

It is a temptation, at this happy season, to over-do the giving of too many gifts to the child. I have seen occasions when I thought the gift-giving was exaggerated, but I must plead guilty myself, for my young son, after opening up his gifts one Christmas, exclaimed, "This is too much Christmas!"

It is easy to be carried away by the Christmas spirit. Nobody wants to be a Scrooge. But let's keep it under control. And about Santa Claus. Let's leave something to the child's magical sense of wonder!

Women's Rules

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

My first impression of Terry Fowler's column on women's rules suggested some nightmarish excerpt from a Baptist student-group discussion.

It was hard to figure out. He says at first he's going to reexamine the "basic rationale" behind women's rules. He pokes fun at intuitionist ethics, but seems to want to justify the rules as administratively practical because they keep girls from getting lost and inhibit panty raiders, and he adds that "of course" they are practical "in essence." But it looks as if his thinking bogs down about half way through (where he says "in any case") and he switches tracks to cover up. From then on, all he says, in essence, is that he wants to abolish women's rules because we need to practice making decisions, that under the rules questions of whether, when, where, and with whom to shack up are not sufficiently at our discretion for us to develop into "responsible citizens" capable of handling on our own the morally ambiguous situations we'll be meeting later on in life.

It's a shame Fowler got sidetracked like this, becasse the "basic rationale" he started out to analyse is crucial in deciding whether or not to scrap women's rules, and Fowler seems to have realized this. When it's something like cheating, stealing, or black lies, everyone can see sense in rules. The "basic rationale" is obvious–the harm of cheating, stealing, and black lies is obvious–and no one would be prompted to reexamine the "basic rationale" of the rules against them. The harm of discreet sex, in naked contrast, is not at all obvious. The sense in having rules against it is very hard to perceive, and the "basic rationale" of the existing rules needs very much to be reexamined. Try again. Fowler?

Vietnam Telegram

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

In the November 19th issue of the DTH the Vietgram was referred to as "The special Thanksgiving petition supporting U.S. involvement in Vietnam.." Both the originators of the Vietgram and the DTH presented the telegram as a non-political expression of remembrance and gratitude, and it was with this understanding that many who are not in support of U.S. involvement signed the Vietgram. As one of these many, I would like to clarify my position and request that the DTH clarify its article of November 19th.

The Tar Heels faced the finest Clemson Tiger basketball team in history Wednesday evening. At least that is the opinion of most Tiger faithfuls.

With this fact in mind, the 84-74 Tar Heel loss may not be so decisive.

"Clemson is going to be awfully strong this season," said UNC coach Dean Smith, "and they seem to be even stronger when they are playing at home.

"Of course we are disappointed with the loss," he continued, "but we were pleased with some phases of our game.

"All five of our starters were playing together — especially in the first half. They were passing up the good shots for the better shots.

"Our bench strength was a pleasant surprise, also," he said. "I didn't think we would be deep at all — our first five usually beats the second five so badly in practice.

'But several fellows — Moe, Hassell, Smithwick, and Mirken — came off the bench and gave a good account of themselves.

"I guess the biggest point," he said, "is that we never gave up at any time. We fought them all the way."

But there were some unpleasant matters to consider. The Clemson full-court press led to 29 ball-handling errors by the Tar Heels to only nine for the Tigers.

"We lost our poise against the press in the second half," said Smith. "I didn't think the press would hurt us that much. We have worked on it since practice began and the boys have had little trouble.

"But I guess that is one of the interesting things about the game. Things fall into place one night — then nothing works another night.

"I don't think we'll have that problem all season," he said.

"We experimented quite a lot last season to find the right combination for the tournament," he said. "We had a number of boys I thought were equal.

"But we don't have that depth this season. We have some boys who will grab, scratch, and hustle for that ball, and we should pull some surprises.

"By the end of the season we may be stronger than last year," he said. "Of course everyone else in the league seems to be improved — so we'll have to wait and see."

* * *

"They may have put their offense under wraps in the second half," said Smith. "They were in the Southern Conference finals last season and they're rated co-favorites with West Virginia this season."

Basketball--Clemson Style

People will tell you that it's the sardine can of the South and that it's about as well lighted as the inside of a can of soup.

But don't believe a word of it. It's all an understatement. Every last word.

The gym isn't very big — they say it seats 3,500. But that doesn't count the standees or those guys who perch on the rafters.

Its not completely dark in there. There are 29 light bulbs, not counting the one over the exit, strung out here and there.

Nah, it's not dark on the court. Course it is a bit shady in the upper part of the stands. Like, you need a candle to find your seat.

But the real story of Clemson Field House are the fans who call it home. They came early Wednesday and saw their freshman team get run right out of the place and still they cheered.

When the Tigers rolled on to the court at 7:34 bedlam broke out. No cheerleaders, no band, no nothing but one enormour roar — and more roar.

The rest of it went like this:

7:40 The Tar Heels came out (catcalls).

7:46 Clemson's pep band broke into the Tiger Rag (all hell broke loose).

A blond guy with C-l-e-m-s-o-n lettered in orange across his back picked up a mike and said "Give me a C!" They did. That was the last clear sentence heard all evening.

This guy with the mike reminded you of a blond Hitler. The kind you've seen on the "You Are There" T.V. programs.

You know, Hitler would wave his fists, shout, "Tihgpe kiip lwopx, le leup puxw" or some such something and the crowd of thousands would go ROAR.

The tigers of Clemson went roar too. All evening.

7:54 The Tigers returned (roar).

At this point you couldn't hear your typewriter clicking, you couldn't hear yourself talk, you couldn't even hear yourself think.

Three boys in military uniform stood at parade rest on both sides of the court. They stood solemn faced, eyeing the crowd like all of them were a bunch of pickpockets.

They were there to keep the fans off the floor (laugh). But if they had had to go into action it would have been the modern version of Custer's last stand.

And that's how it was at Clemson Field house night before last. But don't believe a word of it. It's all an understatement.

Oh yes, the Tigers won going away. And the fans — well, they seemed pretty happy about it all.

Gemini 7 Astronauts Are Relaxed Before Blastoff

EDITOR'S NOTE:
Later, he is scheduled to attend official briefings with 24 other college newspaper editors.
His expenses have been assumed entirely by Life Magazine, which invited him to the launching with the cooperation of NASA and the Department of Defense.
He will return the day following the launch.

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Gemini 7 astronauts Frank Borman and James A. Lovell Jr. relaxed Friday on the eve of one of man's greatest space adventures — a two-week endurance flight during which two manned vehicles may fly within inches while orbiting at 17,500 miles an hour.

Success of the marathon mission and the planned rendezvous with Gemini 6 would topple all man-in-space records and considerably enhance America's confidence that it can land astronauts on the moon in this decade.

Most space agency officials feel there is slightly better than a 50-50 chance that the Gemini 7 and 6 rendezvous can be accomplished in mid-December.

The smoothest pre-launch preparations in the history of the man - in - space program coasted without a hitch toward today's scheduled 2:30 p.m. (EST) launching of Gemini 7.

The weather outlook, which had caused concern yesterday, brightened.

The forecast was for cloudy but satisfactory launching conditions at Cape Kennedy this afternoon.

All systems in the four-ton spacecraft and the nine-story-tall Titan 2 rocket received thorough checks yesterday and were pronounced in excellent shape. Fuel was loaded in the power - producing fuel cells. The Titan 2 was fueled last night.

Air Force Lt. Col. Borman and Navy Cmdr. Lovell attended a two - hour mission review and then retired to their "ready room" quarters at the Cape to rest and study the complex flight plan that calls for them to circle the globe 206 times in 329 hours 30 minutes — just 6 1-2 hours shy of 14 days.

The Gemini 6 astronauts, Navy Capt. Walter M. Schirra Jr., and Air Force Maj. Thomas P. Stafford, meanwhile, practiced rendezvous maneuvers in a spacecraft simulator.

Lovell and Borman were reported anxious to get started.

Borman had dinner Thursday with his wife, Susan, and two teen-age sons, who flew here from their Houston, Tex., home for the launching. Borman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Borman of Phoenix, Ariz., also are here.

Mrs. Lovell is expecting a baby — which could arrive while her husband is circling the globe — and remained in Houston.

The flight will be the most extensive test yet of man's ability to physically and mentally withstand long exposure to the space environment. Medical experiments have been given No. 1 priority.

Borman and Lovell will wear new lightweight space suits which they plan to remove for several days during the flight, riding in their long underwear for comfort.

Schirra and Stafford are to take off from the same launch pad on Dec. 13 — nine days after Gemini 7 in airborne — to begin the historic pursuit.

"We've got a good chance of doing it," said flight director Chris Kraft. "There are three factors involved: How well we do with the checkout of Gemini 6 spacecraft and launch vehicle, and the weather.

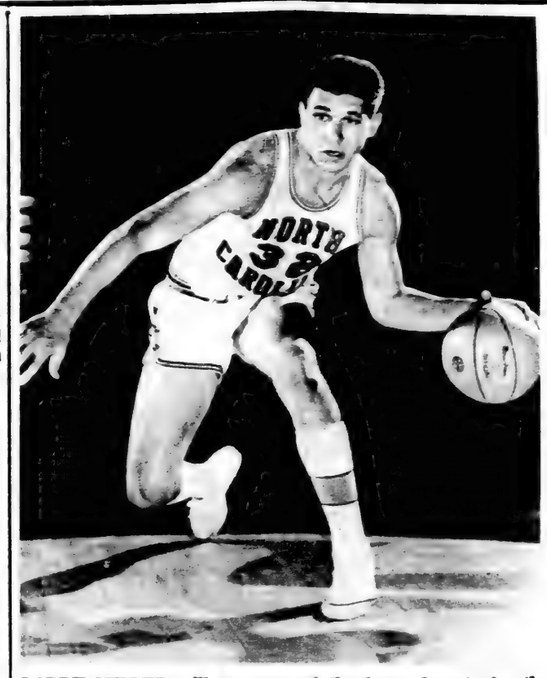
Kraft said Gemini 6 could be launched as late as the 12th day after the Gemini 7 liftoff without difficulty. He said there was a chance of launching on the 13th day, but this would depend on whether Borman and Lovelll and their spacecraft were in good enough condition to remain in orbit an extra day.

The two space ships initially will approach each other nose to nose. Although both will be going about 17,500 miles an hour, the relative difference in their velocity will be less than half a foot a second.

Gemini 6 is to chase Gemini 7 across the skies on an orbit-shifting 103,000-mile course, hopefully catching it within six hours after Schirra and Stafford blaze away from Cape Kennedy. Initial rendezvous is planned 185 miles above the Pacific Ocean.



LARRY MILLER will man one of the forward posts for the Tar Heels against William & Mary tonight. He scored 17 points against Clemson Wednesday night.

UNC Opens Home Slate With Indians; Seeking First Win

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The Tar Heels of Coach Dean Smith, looking for their first victory of the season, will give spanking new Carmichael Auditorium its basketball baptism this evening at 8 p.m.

The Tar Heels, who lost their opener to Clemson 84-74, will be facing a William & Mary club rated pre-season favorites in the Southern Conference.

The Indians added luster to that rating this past Wednesday night by defeating Virginia 93-82.

"William & Mary is the Southern Conference pre-season favorite and the way they defeated Virginia the tag is justified," said Coach Smith. "They have good size and excellent speed. We will have to play much better defense against them than we did against Clemson."

The Tar Heels will probably face another full-court press. A tenacious press by the Clemson tigers was the big factor in Wednesday's loss. The Tar Heels committed 27 ball-handling errors to only nine for the Tigers.

Junior Bob Lewis was the big Tar Heel offensive producer in the opener. The Washington, D. C., native hit on eight of 11 shots from the floor and 12 of 17 from the foul line for a 28 point total.

Sophomore Larry Miller was another big contributor. He hit eight of 14 from the floor and connected on his only free-throw try for 17 points. In addition, his ten rebounds paced the Tar Heels in that department.

Bobby and Ron were seniors at St. John's prep in Washington D. C. Lewis made the high school All-America squad and chose Carolina. Ron, of course chose William & Mary.

"He's plenty able and he can jump," advises Lewis. "If he is the caliber of player William & Mary can floor, I know we'll have a battle on our hands."

Coach Smith plans no line-up changes.

The unbeaten Tar Heel freshmen meet Brevard in the 6 p.m preliminary.

More Seats Than Ever

The temporary seats in Carmichael Auditorium won't be ready for tonight's game with William and Mary but there will be more room for Carolina basketball fans than ever before.

UNC Athletic Director C. P. Erickson said yesterday that tickets were still available for students. He said the current capacity of the auditorium is 7,000. When the temporary seats, which are supposed to be ready Dec. 11, are finished seating will be boosted to 8,600.

Students are seating in all sections of the auditorium. The reserved tickets have been issued on a first come, first serve basis.

In the future the policy may be changed so that tickets can be picked up at the door with the presentation of student identification.

Erickson said half of the parking lot in front of Carmichael will be reserved for people from out of town. He said he hopes students who live close will walk to the auditorium and help cut down on the traffic problem.

Student Legislature Tables Motion To Back U. S. Vietnamese Policy

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Political Writer

A resolution supporting United States policy in Viet Nam was indefinitely postponed by Student Legislature Thursday night by a vote of 22 to 15.

The resolution was introduced by Neil Thomas (UP), who sought immediate consideration for the bill rather than sending it through committee.

The bill cited enforcement of U. S. Viet Nam policy by the student bodies of other universities and the recent Thanksgiving message to U.S. soldiers in Viet Nam, which was signed by over 5,000 UNC students, as reasons why such a resolution would be passed by the legislature.

"This resolution is something the people of the state can look to as a sign of student responsibility," Thomas said.

Thomas's move was immediately criticized by Hugh Blackwell (SP) and other legislators who felt it wasn't legislature's place to discuss foreign policy or to circumvent normal legislative procedure.

Blackwell's objection to immediate consideration was defeated by the body in a roll-call vote of 27 to 13.

In the debate that followed, Blackwell said the resolution's supporters were "forcing the issue on the body for the sake of expediency.

"In passing this bill or even considering it we are violating two proceedures which were enacted to strengthen the legislative process of this body," he said.

He cited a long effort in legislature to compel members to submit bills to committee by normal process rather than introducing them on the floor for immediate consideration by the entire body.

"I also do not feel that members of this body are elected by their constituents to express opinions on U. S. foreign policy," Blackwell said. "This is a matter which does not directly affect the student body."

He said consideration of issues which do not directly affect students is the reason why the National Student Association has lost many member schools within the past few years.

"I object to consideration of this resolution not because I object to the U. S. Viet Nam policy, but because I don't feel this should be an issue before this body," Blackwell said.

Bill Purdy (UP) said he agreed with Blackwell that legislative proceedure should not be circumvented if possible, but he felt the Viet Nam resolution was an exception.

"This is an issue which has been before many student bodies," Purdy said. "Many students have told me that a statement should be made by the legislature supporting the U. S. policy in Viet Nam."

Speaker Britt Gordon left in the chair and warned the body that "we may be setting a dangerous procedent tonight which we might later regret."

He said several resolutions which he termed "irrelevant" to the body's normal business had been passed during the past legislative session.

"Every decision you make here is going to mold the future shape of this body," Gordon said.

Immediately after Gordon's speech, Blackwell moved successfully to postpone the bill indefinatly.

Former speaker of the legislature and University Party floor leader Don Carson was formally installed as an appointed representative for Craige Hall.

Addressing the body on privilege, Carson called for an end to partisan political battling and urged Student Government to get down to work on campus problems.

South American Girl Likes College Exchange Program

By LYNNE HARVEL
DTH Staff Writer

One hundred foreign students have left their homes for one year to study the customs and culture of the United States. Lilly Rothsteim is one of two from Colombia, South America, who came to UNC as a special student.

While participating in the exchange program, Lilly, who would be a sophomore in Colombia, has formed opinions of the program and of American life. "The purpose of the program," Lilly said, "is to create better understanding. The program offers opportunities to meet new people, customs and culture. New ideas are presented which contrast with the old ideas. and we will take the best ones home with us."

Lilly said there are several major problems of adjustment for an exchange student. "The dating procedure is entirely different. Now I am free to make my own choice; at home I was not. I also had to adjust to a new system of study, the different way of dressing, the reaction and behavior of other people and the problem of handling my own money. I have also been faced with doing my share of housework; in Colombia we have servants."

Selection of exchange students is based on scholarship and interest. The students are expected to attend class regularly, take quizzes and exams, abide by dorm regulations, eat the same food and attend the same parties, plays, concerts and art exhibits as American students. "The best way to learn about college life and American customs," said Lilly, "is to learn by doing."

This week selections are being made for UNC students to participate in the exchange program. Lilly urged students to apply. "A year in another country under a program of this kind is not just a pleasure trip. It is being away from home, being independent, and, however difficult, getting used to the customs of different people — different in every way, from eating habits to ways of thinking."

Residence Hall Officers Begin Conference Today

The special orientation conference for residence hall officers gets under way today at the Institute of Government.

The conference is being sponsored by Student Government which is attempting to reorganize residence hall activities and better acquaint student officers with their part in residence hall programs.

He said educational programming, social programming, leadership, group dynamics and the residence college will be discussed.

The convocation will be held from 2:15 to 6:15 this afternoon and from 2 to 5:15 Sunday afternoon.

Chancellor Paul Sharp will open the program with an address this afternoon.

He is expected to outline what leaders can do to contribute to residence hall and University life.

"The program has the appearance of being well organized and effectively administered," he said.

SP Meeting

Changes in women's rules, altering of the student court structure and redefinition of the Campus Code will be discussed by a panel of student judiciary leaders at a Student Party meeting tomorrow night at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

Women's Council Chairman Leith Merrow, Women's Residence Council Chairman Penny Scovil and Men's Council Chairman Van MacNair will sit on the panel.

Legislative vacancies in Men's District I and Morrison Hall will be filled, According to SP Chairman Jim Little.

Radio Petition

One hundred seventy five names were added to the petition for the establishment of a board of directors for a campus carrier current radio station.

The names were collected in Morrison Hall Thursday night by John Stupak, a petition organizer, and interested Morrison residents.

Supporters of the radio have tried to gain 1250 signatures which would guarantee a vote by the student body on whether the original bill will be passed.

A financial bill for the radio station died in committee, but both radio bills have been reintroduced in the Student Legislature by University Party Floor Leader George Ingram.

"We would like to reach our goal of 1250 names by next Thursday's Student Legislature session, when the bills for the financing and board of directors will be brought up in committee," Stupak said.

"If the legislature again ignores the demands of the student body by defeating these bills, we will have an immediate way to force the legislators to recognize the board of directors bill," he said.

"The petition will be presented to Student Body President Paul Dickson for validation this Friday if necessary," he said.

Stupak and his supporters will return to Morrison and Ehringhaus Halls Monday night in hope of completing the petition.

Three Klansmen Convicted In Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., (AP) — Three Ku Klux Kansmen were convicted Friday by a white jury of criminal conspiracy and sentenced by a federal judge to 10 years imprisonment in the slaying of a civil rights worker.

"In my opinion," District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. told the jury, "That was the only verdict you could reach in this case and reach a fair and proper verdict."

A short time later, Johnson imposed the 10-year sentences — the maximum prison terms —upon the three stunned defendants: Collie Leroy Wilkins, Jr., 22, of Fairfield, Ala., and Eugene Thomas, 42, and William Orville Eaton, 41, both of Bessemer.

Wilkins, a stocky and crew-cut former mechanic, had been acquitted earlier by a state court jury of murder in the March 25 slaying of Viola Gregg Liuzzo of Detroit.

The three Klansmen were convicted under an 1877 statute of conspiring to violate the civil rights of Mrs. Luizzo and other participants in a Selma-to - Montgomery march climaxing a violence - marked Negro voting rights drive.

When the judge asked the men if they had anything to say before sentence was imposed, Wilkins and Eaton each replied, "I'm innocent of the charge."

Johnson quickly pronounced the sentence in his rapid-fire voice. When he asked Thomas if he had anything to say, the defendant said, "No."

Their attorney said the verdicts will be appealed.

Appeal bonds of $10,000 each were set by the judge and the Klansmen were led away by a federal marshal to begin serving their sentences. They will be eligible for parole after serving one-third of the 10 years.

It was the second guilty verdict in two days by white juries in trials growing out of Alabama racial incidents. A jury at Anniston convicted a white man of murder yesterday in the slaying of a Negro and set the penalty at 10 years in prison.

In Washington, Atty. Gen. Nicholas Katzenback said the convictions were "A victory for equal justice in the South." He said, however, that the Justice Department will continue working on proposed legislation aimed at insuring equal justice by Southern juries.

The prosecutor, Assistant Atty. Gen. John Doar, said of the jury's decision: "The jury did its duty."

Defense Attorney Arthur J. Hanes, the former Birmingham mayor who had successfully defended Wilkins in his second murder trial, obviously was shaken and surprised at the verdicts.

Student Is Not Guilty

A UNC student trying to get his date to her dorm on time was found not guilty of a Campus Code violation by the MHC, which decided Thursday that the two accidentally fell asleep in the boy's apartment.

The couple had returned from a weekend trip home and had gone to his fraternity house before going in; but lost track of the time and stayed past the coed's closing hour.

Realizing she was late, the coed expressed fear of entering the dorm.

They fell asleep and didn't wake up until morning. The coed was apprehended when she returned at 8:45 a.m.

The Council found the boy innocent because of his "positive, concrete attempts to see that his date" entered her dorm.

Trying To Stay Healthy

The scene in Richmond was probably somewhat like a doctor's office. The examination was performed there by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and the patient was North Carolina's higher education system.

In 1963 the public colleges and university came down with a unique virus, unknown in any other state, which caused considerable discomfort to the schools. The suffering centered around the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill because the germ apparently entered the state's educational system at that point.

The bug hit so fast — in just a few minutes — that nobody had a chance to prepare for it. Few diseases are legislated, but this one was. Many of the men who caused it did not expect it to have any bad side effects, but they just failed to take time to consider the possibilities.

They were concerned about a big ugly germ called communism and they thought their action would serve as a sort of vaccination for young people.

But the immunization backfired, and those who disliked the attempt called it the "gag."

The gag was not fatal, although some said it might kill "academic freedom." That bothered only the few who could define academic freedom. But then the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools made it a little plainer by saying the gag could create the necessity of an amputation. Accreditation might be cut off, and with it money, prestige, recognition and professors.

Friends of the ailing system rallied 'round and stirred such a ruckus that the gag became just too irritating for those legislators to scratch.

The governor appointed a commission to find an antidote and then instructed the lawmakers to use it. That antidote — amendment — is at least showing signs of working because the Southern Association has just finished its checkup of our school system and found it passable.

Let this be a lesson to those fellow in the General Assembly.

Quit practicing medicine without a license.

Lighting The Way

People scoff at those pacifists who make such a to-do over burning their draft cards because they are opposed to war, or at least personal involvement in it. Hold that laugh, though, because this may yet prove to be the most useful and versatile form of protest ever devised.

The possibilities are unlimited. The man who hates to pay his taxes can burn his Form 1040. When a cop gives you a ticket you obviously did not deserve, burn it, along with your automobile registration.

To protest poor athletic performances, burn your student ID pass. And the only sensible thing to do with those low-grade quizzes is to put them to the torch.

The fellow who draws a dud for a blind date can best express dissatisfaction by destroying his telephone book. If you cannot register for the courses you want, burn the class cards you are stuck with. To rid the campus of immorality, we suggest the burning of every smutty paperback sex thriller in town.

Obviously almost any problem can be solved by burning whatever object symbolizes it. There must be a limit to the game, however, and those who have taken to self-emolation have gone far beyond the extremity.

If you feel you really must withdraw from the human race, please just burn your birth certificate.

If you have no complaints, join us in investing money in some match company stock.

"Slump, Hell, Depression!"

A Little Fire Never Hurt

By RUSSELL BAKER
The New York Times

WASHINGTON — Governmental hysteria is not the answer to the nation's young draft-card burners. By ostentatiously claping these men into prison, the Government can only martyr them and thereby create more draft-card burners.

There is a sensible way to deal with the matter. Let Selective Service assemble a large group of discontented young men, call in the press and television to assure national publicity, give each man a draft card and a box of matches and tell him to burn away.

What these young men will discover is that a draft card is one of the most unsatisfying things in the world to burn. It creates a contemptibly small flame and goes out in less than sixty seconds. From thirty feet away it is scarecely noticeable. It provides no spectacle and affords virtually no emotional release. The game simply isn't worth the match.

People have always burned things, of course. When man is in high dudgeon, a good fire seems to soothe him. Normally, however, he reaches out for something that will burn more satisfying than a draft card. In 99 of a hundred cases the man who tries to satisfy his emotions by burning a draft card will have to go on and burn fifty pounds of old newspapers before he can experience any release at all.

People who really know how to burn right these days burn big. When such people are upset about race relations, for example, they burn churches, crosses or supermarkets. If the burning is done on the grand scale, as in Los Angeles this summer, the authorities will quit talking about prison and start listening to the burners' complaints.

There was a time when people could burn people, but that isn't tolerated any longer. Nowadays governments can burn people, but people without government - burning authority are confined to burning effigies.

People have always burned cities, of course. The Germans burned Conventry, the Americans burned Dresden, the Russians burned Moscow and the Yankees burned Atlanta. That was burning on the grand scale.

A few years back people burned books that disagreed with them. Unfortunately, the custom became stigmatized as Hitlerian and nowadays nobody can do it without feeling like a Nazi. As a result, people sit around becoming increasingly depressed as Congressional Records and books by and about Hubert Humphrey spread inexorably through their houses.

Burning libraries is something else. In the highly developed nations, people don't seem interested in library burning, but in less fortunate countries in recent months firing up a good library has become a perfectly acceptable expression of student idealism.

There is another class of burning that goes on around the home. This is a form of petty burning in which the fire is used not in support of great public principles but to vent the burner's personal hostilities.

A wife angry at her husband may, for example, make a dramatic show of burning the love letters he wrote her when they were courting. In more subtle refinements she merely burn the potatoes.

Husbands who resent being saddled with such feminine chores as cooking will light the charcoal grill and burn up $15 worth of prime beef. If husband and wife have acquired an enviable new rug, an envious neighbor will drop by long enough to drop a cigarette coal and burn a hole in it.

From all this it should be obvious that the draft-card burners are no menace to the established order. In the best human tradition they are following the principle that human affairs can be settled with fire. There are undoubtedly many young men prepared to believe this, and if the Government will only let them see for themselves what an unsatisfying blaze a draft card makes, they will surely be willing to go on to bigger fires in a more orthodox cause.

The honorable course for the dedicated pacifist is to go quietly to jail without any flames. When he touches a match to his draft card, he acknowledges his own agreement in the very principle he professes to despise. When he lights the match, he says, with 5,000 years of governments and his own generation of church burners, "There are some issues important enough to burn for."

Letters To The Editor

Legislature Slows Down Efforts To Get Counsel

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In the first session of summer school for 1965 I introduced in legislature three bills regarding a lawyer for Student Government. The first of these was to establish the position of such a lawyer, the sec, blish the position of such a lawyer, he second to establish the amount of his retainer, and the third to establish an amount for further legal services.

These three bills have as yet not been passed out of legislature, having gone through its first session. This dilatory action has slowed the progress promised by Student Government in the last election–namely the lowering of prices within the University and in the Chapel Hill Community. There are two Student Government organizations vitally affected by the passage of these three bills, Student Discount Commission and the Student Co-op Committee. The Discount Commission is working in the Chapel Hill area to gain lower prices in the several areas for the students, while the Co-op Commission is working within the University to gain lower prices in the Book Exchange. Bob Travis, Chairman of the Discount Commission, has stated that his work has come to an impasse unless he can obtain the legal advice necessary to go on with the project.

There are other areas also in which this lawyer would be of necessity especially regarding the judicial system and whether certain parts of it may be unconstitutional. Publications would also be aided by his advice as to libelous statements.

The fact that the University itself has a lawyer is of no avail to Student Government, since Student Government would often come into conflict with the University in certain areas--as the Book Exchange. Thus, an unbiased counsel would be of necessity for certain areas of Student Government to continue efficient operation.

UNC And Knowledge Pills

Well, the situation wasn't as rosy as it first seemed. True, the pills indeed imparted on-the-spot learning, but first they had to be digested.

Among the upper classmen, pills like Political Science and Business Administration induced vomiting.

Even the seniors at times said they had indigestion.

Problems especially arose immediately prior to exams. Busy with extracurricular activities, students disregarded professional advice and failed to take the pills regularly before attending classes.

"Stay awake" tablets, of course, were not very helpful, but Bromo Selzer proved to be salvation of students preparing for big tests.

Competition for Phi Beta Kappa keys was keen; however, not everybody felt they were worth bloated stomachs.

Nevertheless, all agreed that the best jobs after graduation went to the people with the most over-stuffed abdominal cavities. And everybody knew that if they flunked out of school, they'd have to enter the outside world, where knowledge was obtained the painful way--by needles.

As always, professors insisted the students did their worst work around midsemester, when they couldn't swallow pills after filling their stomachs with Thanksgiving turkey.

Leaders of the Free Speech Movement charged that the country's universities didn't prepare students for life's realities. "Not everything's covered with chocolate," they warned. (The FSM also denounced the way the pills were distributed by computer.)

But the head of campus clinic thought the rigors of academic life were perfectly sufficient. "Already, the pills are giving the students ulcers," he said.

Meanwhile, fraternities came under attack for helping their members cheat on exams by studying the contents of previous tests carefully stashed away in medicine cabinets.

Viet Nam demonstrators believed that ROTC pills were bad for people's health.

ROTC cadets said radical peace groups were filling students' stomachs with pills of their own to encourage the students to duck the draft.

Right-wing Republicans commented that the campus ferment was a direct result of the Democrats' federal scholarship program, which, they felt, interferred with private enterprise. "The whole matter should be left to the pharmacists," the Goldwaterites declared.

Legislators in Raleigh, eager to check Communist subversion, reintroduced the Speaker Ban after parents camplained their children were getting food poisoning.

Ultimately, however, a special commission appointed by the Governor discovered the trouble came form the inferior offerings of Lenoir Hall.

Controversy also developed when the Catholic church objected to the pills' being used by students taking Marriage and the Family.

In both cases, the state legislators ruled in favor of academic freedom after state-supported colleges and universities were threatened with loss of accreditation by the Food and Drug Administration.

Foreign Exchange

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The last week before Christmas vacation selections will be made for the 1966 exchange program with the Universidad do Antioquia, in Medellin, Colombia. Because I was one of the original exchange students in this program and because I am the only US student currently on campus who has been part of this program, the International Students Board has asked me to write this letter telling of the advantages for which two UNC students will be eligible for the coming year.

It is amazing and disappoing that each of the last two years only about a dozen students have applied for this exchange. I feel that this is an invaluable educational experience, which one can obtain at less than the cost of one semester here (at the very most.)

The primary advantage is an educational one. It is true that very few credits are transferable, but the educational experience far outweighs the loss of one year. Any one majoring in foreign languages, political science, or history will benefit greatly from the year. More indirectly but equally importantly, any student will benefit from the experience of living in a different culture.

If you like nice weather, Medellin is the place. Average temperatures are in the 70's, and in "cold" weather only a sweater is necessary.

An important part of Colombian life is the fiesta. And so, anyone who enjoys a good time— whether dancing, drinking beer at a dime a bottle or going to bull fights–will enjoy himself. This is not to say, however, that such pastimes are necessary for being a successful or happy exchange student.

Financial difficulties should not hinder a person's foing on this exchange. The university life is less hectic than here, and there is a large demand for English teachers (no previous experience necessary) in private schools and church-supported and, to a lesser degree, state-supported high schools. The university scholarship covers all living expenses and includes a liberal amount for other expenses. With the scholarship one can live well and do travelling in Colombia. With a relatively small supplement to this, whether from home or from well-paid teaching, one can live extremely well, have a good time, and do a good bit of travelling.

In case the preceeding paragraphs make it sound only like a year of fun, let me stress again that this is not completely true. It is very enjoybale, but most of all I recommend the year in Colombia because it is a challenging and rewarding experience.

There will be a question session in GM on Wednesday, December 8. At that time I will try to answer any questions about the university, the life, the advantages of going, etc. Watch in the DTH for announcements about this session about the procedure for applying and having an interview

DC-5 Has Less Hair Than Some Carolina Gentlemen

By ART LATHAM
Special to the DTH

They like the Beatles, the Beach Boys, and the Supremes. They dress conservatively, and they're clean-cut.

Carolina Gentlemen? No, the Dave Clark Five, the British group whose latest record is on the Top Ten Around Kixland.

When a Daily Tar Heel reporter couldn't make it to the DC-5 interview, we decided to take the trip to Raleigh ourselves, to meet the boys if nothing else. So we rounded up a car and a girl Friday named Carol, and headed for Raleigh.

We arrived late for the interview, after wandering through rush hour downtown Raleigh traffic for a frustrating twenty minutes. The car was parked and with the help of the lady at the desk, we found the conference room.

The door of the room was at the front, and as we came in, everybody looked at us, including the five young men seated at the long table across the front of the room.

"That's them," we thought, duly impressed. A lady asked us where we were from, and after we told her, she offered us seats on the third row, beside the television camera.

Absurd Questions

We had been forewarned about the kinds of answers to expect from British R & R groups. "Be haughty with them," we had been told, "or else you'll never get answers to your questions."

Since we had come in late, we thought it best not to ask any questions, in case somebody else had already thought of the same question. So Carol took notes while I scurred around trying to get a good camera angle.

It didn't take us long to find out that it wouldn't have mattered if we had asked the most absurd questions in the world, because some reporter from one of the area's dailies would ask a dumber one.

Dave Clark did most of the talking. He assured a lady reporter that neither he nor any other member of the group was about to be knighted by the queen, expressed his preference for British cigarettes, and flatly stated that his hair had always been this length.

"This length," incidentally, is fairly short compared to present-day American standards. No member of the group had hair long enough to rate a second glance in Chapel Hill. They were all neatly dressed in clothes they had designed for themselves.

'Short-term Thing"

But the overwhelming impression that one received was that here were a group of young men who were enjoying what they were doing. All through the interview, whenever a reporter would ask a question which had obviously been asked many times before, Mike Smith, the organist and piano player, would add side comments of his own to Dave Clark's answers. For example:

Reporter: Do you think your fame will fade?

Dave: Well, of course we know that this will be an overall short-term thing, but we...

Mike: You can please some of the people some of the time, and you can please all of the people...

Lenny: Mike.

Reporter: Why do you wear your hair that way? Is it just a gimmick for you group?

Dave: Well, my hair has always been this long. The other fellows have let theirs grow a little, but this kind of haircut is much more common in England than over here...

Mike: It would be a dull world if everybody were alike . . .

Mike: . . . and we take our wigs off when we travel.

Reporter: What was your reaction to the criticisms of your new movie?

Dave: Surprisingly enough, the reviews were good . . .

Mike: He only reads the good ones.

After the formal part of the interview, the reporters and the DC-5 mingled and milled around the room for a while.

Shows Strain

I caught a glimpse of Lenny and Rick trapped in a corner by an old man with no chin who was grilling them about why they thought they thought they had become so famous. They were answering him the best they could, but the strain of the interview was beginning to tell on their faces.

I edged up to Mike and we got into a brief conversation about the banalities of press conferences. He agreed that they got to be tiring, "But," he added, "it's part of our job, just like reporting is part of yours, and we enjoy it."

By this time, the group's manager had decided it was time for dinner, and the boys, after smiling at Carol and winning a fan for life, filed out the door. The interview was over. I wandered back to the refreshment table, poured myself another drink, and thought about how bad the traffic would be on the long ride home.

Whoever polished off that glass of beer was a real beer drinker. Someone who uses the swallow approach. Not a sipper. Sipping, you see, is for wine. It's the best way to appreciate the delicate taste of a fine vintage. But not beer.

Especially not Budweiser®. Budweiser is a hearty drink brewed with lots of character, and the best way to enjoy it is to drink it. (Not chug-a-lug, either . . . just good healthy beer-drinker's swallows.)

Try this. Take a clean glass . . . say a twelve or fourteen-ounce size. Rinse it out with cold water. Open a can or bottle of the King of Beers and pour it right down the middle so that you get a good head of foam.

Now . . . take a big drink. No sips.

Good? You bet. This is how beer should taste. Budweiser gives you a taste, smoothness and drinkability you'll find in no other beer at any price. Our exclusive Beechwood Ageing with natural carbonation has a lot to do with it. This is the slow, finicky way to brew beer. Expensive, too . . . but the results are worth it.

So please, after we go to all this trouble, pour your Budweiser with a flourish. Drink it with a flourish.

And maybe a pretzel.

it's worth it...it's Bud.®

Fauntleroy

Put away your beer and gin,
For Fauntleroy is back again.

The magic and infallible typewriter has been collecting cobwebs. I pulled the red sash curtains across my oak panelled bedroom and, with a belly stuffed with turkey, I sacked out.

Yesterday my eyelids gradually unglued themselves from my eyeballs as Jeeves, my ever faithful butler, shook my arm.

"What is it Jeeves," I asked.

"A telegram, sir."

The butler graciously placed a silver tray before my groggy face. I opened the yellow envelope. It read as follows:

"To the omniscient one, We have long admired your football knowledge which proved to be infallible. We humbly implore that you turn your great mind to the game of basketball. Your adoring servants, The National Association of Basketball Coaches."

I leaped from my bed and threw open the curtains. Then, with Jeeves' ancient hand I swept the foul cobwebs from the golden keyboard.

"Ah. The basketball season," I sighed. "It will indeed be a pleasure."

Strong Frosh Hit Brevard College

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

A perennial North Carolina junior college basketball power will face off against UNC's strong freshman crew tonight in Carmichael Auditorium at 6 p.m. in a preliminary to the varsity clash with William and Mary.

Brevard Junior College, which practically makes an annual habit of representing this state in the NJCAA eastern regionals, is fielding another formidable team seeking its second win after splitting a pair with jayvee opposition.

Coach L. W. Martin starts an all-soph lineup which averages six feet four inches, and 192 pounds per man. The UNC quintet pans out to 6-5 and 194.

The big man in the Tiger attack is center Larry Arrick, a husky 6-7, 235-pounder from Indiana. He attended the University of Utah in 1959-60, but left school before deciding to enroll at Brevard last year. Martin describes him simply and adequately as "very strong."

The forwards are a pair of in-state boys, Pete Peters (6-4, 195) of Durham and Joe Bob Nesbitt (6-4, 180) of Fletcher.

David Morrow (6-2, 182), a Gastonia product, and Bob Pickens (6-1, 170) from Kentucky set the pace at guard.

From the Carolina standpoint, Larry Brown received a very favorable overall impression of his club's midweek opening win over Clemson.

"The kids played their usual unselfish style of basketball and looked good most of the time. What stood out most to me was the way they scrapped and hustled all the way and played all-out on defense. I was very pleased with that performance for an opener."

When someone mentioned the ease with which 6-8 frontcourtman Bill Bunting blocked numerous shots, Brown just shook his head and broke out in a big grin.

Tickets Still Unsold

Over 200 tickets remain to be sold. The ticket office in Carmichael will open this open this morning at 8:30 and close at 12:30.

Grapplers Set For Opener; Face Pfeiffer, St. Andrews

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The best Tar Heel wrestling team in 15 years will give Carmichael Auditorium its first taste of varsity competition today at 2 p.m.

The grapplers of Coach Sam Barnes offers a "grunt 'n' groan" doubleheader as they face both Pfeiffer and St. Andrews.

"This is the best team I have had since I've been at Carolina," said Coach Barnes. "Sure we have some holes — that's obvious — but we do have six strong weight classes."

Confidence fills the practice room. It fills part of the wall also. "This is the year: 12-0 Let's Go" is written in banner headlines across the back wall.

"I have nightmares of going undefeated till the Maryland match — then being shut out," said Barnes.

But today's matches are the problems at hand. Maryland, perennial conference champ, will come in due time.

"Pfeiffer has been real tough for the past three years," said Barnes. "I know they lost three good boys by graduation. Of course you can never tell how strong they might be. With boys eligible as freshmen, they coudl have someone to fill those holes."

"We really don't have anyone to wrestle in the 123 pound weight class," said Barnes. "We have a 112-pounder in there — and he's quite a wrestler for his size — but he has to give away quite an advantage.

"We really don't have a true heavy weight either," he said. "One of the boys filling that position weighed in at only 185 pounds the other day."

But the overall picture is very bright indeed. Boys to watch in today's matches are captain Roy Hagerty, defending ACC champ in the 145-pound weight class; sophomore John Stacy, state champion in high school; Jim Goodwin, ACC runner-up in the 130 pound weight class; and Jack Saunders, ACC runner-up in the 115 pound weight class who will wrestle at 123 in today's matches.

The "two matches in one day" was not a scheduling error.

"We want to look at the first two teams in the opener," said Barnes. "We will have our first-line boys in the opener with Pfeiffer then substitute five other boys in the second match.

"We try to letter two full teams each season — it's a type of reward you might say. But it also serves a very useful purpose.

"Some boys are practice - room wrestlers," he said, "then they can't do so well in combat. Others are exactly the opposite. When we can use this many boys in one afternoon, we can tell which is which."

Two Gemini Astronauts Rocket Into Orbit

Bob Lewis, Larry Miller Loose Fateful Lightning For Win Over Injuns, 82-68

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The expected Bob Lewis-Larry Miller storm finally broke loose last night against the William & Mary Indians as the Tar Heels christened Carmichael Auditorium with their first victory of the season, 82-68.

The Lewis-Miller combo struck for 56 points and 20 rebounds as the Tar Heels disposed of a William & Mary club rated pre-season conference favorites in the Southern Conference.

Lewis had the point edge with 34 points to 22 for Miller. Miller had the rebound edge 16-4.

But by no means was the Carolina show a two-man affair. Defense was a big factor and the Tar Heels clung to the Indians at every turn.

The Tar Heels, victimized by a full-court press in their opening loss to Clemson Wednesday night, pulled the same trick on the Indians. Repeated Indian offensive tries never got off the ground as the alert Tar Heel defenders broke for the ball then broke for the score.

The Tar Heels never trailed. Although the offensive show was slow getting under way, the problem was even greater for William & Mary.

The Indians could not scratch during the first four minutes of the game while the Tar Heels managed three baskets and a six point lead.

But the lead held. William & Mary pushed in two foul shots and a field goal to cut it to 6-4, but could never get any closer. A long swisher by Johnny Yokley at the halftime buzzer put the Tar Heels in for good 39-29.

The Indians could never get closer than nine points in the second half. A Lewis swisher, a Miller bucket and the Tar Heels played it cool the rest of the way. By this time Tom Gauntlett was around to add his offensive hand—hitting six for eight from the floor and two for two from the foul line for 14 points.

When this trio occasionally faltered, John Yokley was around to grab a loose ball—center Bob Bennett blocked a shot then grabbed a rebound or a Ray Hassell, Donnie Moe, or Mark Mirken came off the bench to carry the load.

William & Mary coach Bill Chambers was, at best, discouraged with the loss. He had seen his club tear apart a good Virginia group Wednesday night.

"We were beaten by a great ball club tonight," he said. "A great team and two great individuals — that's the story."

The Tar Heels, who hit 59% of their shots in the Clemson loss, continued their fine shooting from the floor. Carolina hit on 62 of 101 attempts for 61.4.

But one shining factor indeed came in the ball-handling department. The Tar Heels, who committed 27 errors in the opener, were charged with none tonight.

Frosh To Hold Spaghetti Feed

The freshman class will hold an Italian Spaghetti dinner Saturday from 5-7:30 p.m. in the Tin Can. Tickets, which must be purchased by Wednesday, are $1.25 per person.

Freshman class president Ben White said "a generous helping" of spaghetti will be on the menu. Tickets are on sale at Y-Court, Lenoir, and Chase.

Funds will be used for starting a freshman class newspaper, sending tokens to U.S. forces in Viet Nam, financing a booth in the winter carnival, athletic rallies, a freshman tutorial service, and for the freshman class weekend next spring.

Begin Projected Two-Week Flight

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON, Tex., (AP) — With high spirits, Gemini 7 astronauts Frank Borman and James Lovell dashed into space Saturday. They flew formation with a spent rocket, faced a lingering power problem, but pressed toward a world record 14-days in space.

The problem was a troublesome fuel cell light that showed "on" indicating a problem in the electricity producing fuel cell.

It preoccupied most of the earth-to-space talk in the early stages of the flight while engineers on the ground decided what to do. The electrical usage was cut down — but not because of the fuel cell problem, flight officials indicated.

But early word from flight officials was that the problem was not expected to endanger the 14-day mission.

For something less than 17 minutes, the space rookies flew close to the 19-foot second stage of the Titan 2 rocket that shot them into space, a preview of a bigger formation flight to come.

The countdown and blast off were perfect and right on schedule. Gemini 7 cut through the murky Florida sky over Cape Kennedy at 2:30 p.m. (EST).

It entered its first orbit at 2:36 p.m. (EST).

"You're right down the slot, Gemini 7," was the radio report from Earth.

"That's the best news I've heard," replied Command Pilot Borman, an Air Force Lt. Col.

While they flew in formation with the spent rocket, Borman and Lovell kept the big casing in sight, saw it venting unused nitrogen pro-

Smoke, A Deafening Roar, And Gemini Is Launched

Editor's Note — DTH Editor Ernie McCrary flew down to Cape Kennedy Friday for the Gemini 7 launch yesterday.

He was one of a group of college editors whose expenses for the trip were paid by Life Magazine. McCrary arrived at the cape late Friday afternoon and attended a reception and banquet at which most of the astronauts were present.

Early Saturday the group got a tour of the Cape Kennedy complex, and then went to watch the launch which took place at 2:30 p.m. Following is a report McCrary telephoned to the DTH.

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

CAPE KENNEDY — Regardless of what they encounter during their two weeks in space, Lt. Col. Frank Borman and Cmdr. James A. Lovell Jr. began their flight perfectly.

It appeared to be one of the smoothest countdowns in the history of America's space program. The viewing stands where we sat were near the control center, about two miles from the launch site.

It rained here Saturday morning, but by 11 a.m. the clouds were thinner and higher. NASA officials said the weather was not ideal, but "acceptable."

During the half hour we sat in the stands waiting for the shot, periodic loud speaker announcements indicated that everything was going well.

After passing the "critical period" at T-minus-eight minutes, there seemed to be no fear among the spectators that there would be any trouble.

The final countdown began and at T-minus-5 seconds the first smoke appeared around the launching pad. At T-minus-seven flames were visible at the rocket's base. At blastoff a huge billow of orange smoke appeared and Gemini 7 was on its way.

Its roar was almost painfully loud, for a few seconds; then the craft was out of sight in about two minutes.

The parents of Frank Borman were among the spectators, and though grinning broadly, they were two of the calmest people there.

At 4:30 p.m. the Titan rocket for Gemini 6 mission scheduled in eight days was already being taken to pad 19 which Gemini 7 had left only hours before.

Dickson Predicts–

Residence Colleges In By Spring

Student Body President Paul Dickson said yesterday all men's areas will "fairly definitely" be in the residence college system by mid-spring.

"And," he added, "I mean operational in final form. By that time, constitutions and by-laws of the colleges will have been drawn up, officers elected, funds appropriated and their relationship with student government established."

Dean of Students C. O. Cathey, who also spoke at the special orientation conference for residence hall officers, said he agreed with Dickson.

"I don't see much conflict between the residence colleges and student government," Cathey commented. "One is intellectual and recreational... The other is primarily political.

"We're very happy to see this development. We want the students to really move forward and explore the whole concept of the change.

He said the legislators must approve his student government legal counsel bill before his "discount proposal" can be successfully put into operation.

Dickson claimed a lawyer would be necessary to negotiate the necessary contracts with local merchants.

The student body president said he hopes students will have more of a voice in the operation of the UNC Book Exchange.

According to Dickson, the student government received assistance from the National Student Association in planning UNC's residence hall system, which he said somewhat resembles one at Harvard and other schools.

Cathey said Chancellor Paul Sharp could not attend the conference due to "conflicting engagements."

— Administrative expenses—$275.
— Social Expenses—$1,000.
— Publications—$175.
— Miscellanious—$50.
— Total—$1500 per semester.

Morrison Honors Justice Clark

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

U. S. Cupreme Court Justice Tom Clark, inspecting the campus as a possible site for annual judicial conventions, was honored at a special ceremony at Morrison College yesterday.

Residence College Governor Byron McCoy presented Clark with a framed diploma making him honorary Chief Justice of the residence college judiciary. Both McCoy and Housemaster Chuck Longino signed the document.

Clark is considering the University of North Carolina as the site of an annual convention of state and federal judges. If Chapel Hill is chosen for the gathering, those attending would live in Morrison and attend sessions at the Institute of Government.

Clark's party was accompanied by Dean of Men William G. Long, Dean J. D. Phillips of the Law School, and other representatives of the University and the Research Triangle.

The Supreme Court Justice and his party went to the top of the new ten-story residence hall for a view of the campus and to look at some of the students' rooms.

Clark said he was impressed with the facilities abailable, particularly with the proximity of Chase and the easy access to the Institute of Government.

The text of the document presented to Clark read: "Notice of Appointment–This is to certify that on the fourth day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixty-five, Justice Tom Clark was appointed, as herein attested by signature and seal, to the office of Chief Justice of the Judiciary of Morrison Residence College for a term of office of honory life term, as witnessed and presented."

Morrison will be the first residence college to establish a three branch government—including a judicial branch–pending ratification of the constitution now under consideration by the college senate.

The judiciary will serve as a constitutional committee to pass on the legality of bills passed by the Morrison Senate. Under the provisions of the constitution now under consideration, the judiciary would also rule on recall and referenda petitions.

The judiciary branch, as proposed, would consist of nine justices, one from each house (floor).

VISTA Recruiters Will Be At Y-Court Booth All Week

Recruiters for VISTA will set up a booth in Y-Court tomorrow to hand out applications for the "domestic peace corps" group.

Two VISTA representatives, Barbara Selfridge and Rex Agerton, will man the booths, through Friday. Agerton said a free film will be shown in Carroll Hall Tuesday night at 7 p.m. called "Small Miracles."

"The movie is concerned with Operation Breakthrough over in Durham," he said. "The ten VISTA people working in Durham will be on hand to answer questions after the film."

VISTA volunteers are given no tests. Their acceptance is based only on the application, Miss Selfridge said.

"Volunteers should be willing to relocate to somewhere in the U. S.," she added. "We have 1,500 volunteers from 44 states in VISTA now, but we expect to have more than 4,000 in 1,400 projects by June."

VISTA will have workers in the 50 states, the U. S. territories, Guam, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and Samoa, they said.

To apply for VISTA a student may speak to a representative on campus and receive an application. The application is evaluated and based on the application, the person is accepted for a six week training program.

There are no tests. While he is in the training program, the volunteer is evaluated by a VISTA staff and placed into one of four basic areas: urban, rural, migrant, or Indian.

Based on his choice, he is sent to a training center in an area where he will be taught with an emphasis on the practical aspect of the job.

"Only two weeks out of the six are spent in the classroom," Miss Selfridge said. Following training, volunteers are placed in projects, usually in twos.

The projects may be sponsored by any type of group, but the group must ask for VISTA volunteers before they are sent. Religious, community action, state aid, 4-H groups are some examples of groups enlisting VISTA aid.

The volunteers work under the direction of the local group, but usually volunteers "See their need and try to fill it," Agerton said.

Any public or private agency may ask for VISTA aid. Most work done by VISTA comes under teaching, in a broad sense, or counseling.

VISTA has groups working in Craven and Durham, in North Carolina.

Women's Council Convicts Two

One coed was given an official reprimand and another sentenced to indefinite probation by the Women's Council Dec. 2 for Honor Code violations.

One coed pleaded not guilty of falsifying a house offense slip, but she was convicted, given an official reprimand and placed on two weeks campusment.

Another girl who pleaded indefinite to the charge that she falsified a sign-out slip was convicted by the council, placed on indefinite probation and campused from Dec. 3 to Jan. 14.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

By VERMONT C. ROYSTER
The Wall Street Journal

Back in 1963 the North Carolina state legislature in the last fifteen minutes of the session, hastily passed a law prohibiting Communists from speakig on any state-owned campus.

A few days ago, in a special session called by the governor, the same legislature removed the ban and returned to the trustees of the various institutions the responsibility for managing their institutions.

In between these two events lies a story at once both sad and heartening, and one not without its imports elsewhere.

Thoughtful men ought to have a good deal of sympathy for the motives behind this law. It is certainly true that we live in troubled times, troubled abroad and also here at home. At the root of these troubles, whether in Asia or in America, is a sickness of the mind which makes some men mistake good for evil for good.

Foremost among these virulent ideas, as the authors of the "speaker ban" law recognized, is the Communist ideology. It is at one and the same time a doctrine to reduce men to slavery to the state and a plot to subvert or conquer the free nations of the world.

But not all the virulent ideas are Communist. We are also infected with viruses that attack morality, the concepts of order in society, the values of liberty and the faith in the uniqueness of each individual man which is the foundation of Western civilization.

It is also true, for reasons not easy to understand, that these new ideas attract many young minds. Perhaps it is only that they see the manifest deficiencies of our society without perceiving its virtues. No matter. The attraction does sometimes seem insidious.

So it's hardly surprising that the law found support among good and honest men. They miss the mark who argue that those whose labors support a place of teaching should abdicate concern with what is taught, or that they are knaves who would guard against infectious of the mind.

Yet in the end the people of that state decided it as a bad law. Why they did, and how they did, is worth remarking.

For one thing, it soon became clear that it was a futile law. It banned only one particular type of speaker and banned him from speaking only in one particular type of place. The truth is, as every man knows in his heart, that no law can halt the breeding of ideas, good ideas or bad ones.

It also proved a rather ridiculous law. Under it the state university couldn't hold a conference on new discoveries in archaeology and permit a Communist to read a paper on new artifacts uncovered in Uzbekistan on the tribes of Genghis Khan.

The chess club couldn't listen to Cholmov discuss the opening gambits of Bobby Fischer without moving the meeting off the campus. A Shostakovich could conduct the college symphony in one of his own compositions but he couldn't utter a word, not even a comment about his striking use of ninth chords.

This is an absurd way to treat any institution of learning — to say there is an American physics or an American biology and we aren't going to let young people listen to Communist theories on radiation problems in outer space.

This is a terrible accusation against the intelligence of our young. It is true that in every generation there are some who go astray from want of character or intelligence. They become not only Communists but madmen, crackpots, thieves, murderers or rogues.

So it was in our generation; so it will be in the next. But to imply that the young we beget are lesser men than ourselves is an affront both to them and to ourselves.

Finally, of course, all such laws imply little faith in the ideas of liberty and freedom which they profess to guard. Such laws speak a fear that these ideas of liberty met on the same platform with the ideas of communism will lose the battle for men's minds.

The sad part of the North Carolina story is that, momentarily, these fears should have written a law. The heartening part is in the men who rose to speak of the freedom of the university, and in the fact that the people listened.

When the governor asked a special commission to study the law's effects, those who came forward to be counted against it included lawyers, doctors, bankers, businessmen, housewives, journalists, politicians, veterans, ministers, farmers and teachers.

Whether the people were moved by the brilliant logic of these witnesses is problematic. North Carolinians are no wiser than their neighbors, no less beset by fears at the new and disturbing doctrines that swirl around them.

But thanks to the forethought of men long ago they do have a university which if not the oldest or the most prestigious is yet one which has been the people's pride for generations. If the campus has not been immune to false doctrines, ith as nutured wise teachers who put them in inquiry. And it has sent out to serve the state men who, having confronted all ideas, know not only what they believe but why, and so cannot thereafter be shaken by false gods.

And the people did grasp one simple fact. To put a wall around their university was somehow to do it injury, and to injure their university was to injure themselves and those hereafter.

So in the ending it's not a bad story for other men to think about.

"How's It Look Down There?"

America: Land Without Freedom?

By SAM KAPLAN
The Diamondback, Univ. of Maryland

In 1835 after returning from his nine month tour of the United States, Alexis de Tocqueville, French nobleman and political observer, wrote an analysis of our political system, Democracy in America. One of his greatest apprehensions about democracy was that a tyranny of the majority would impose a political and social orthodoxy through social pressure and legal coercion. He wrote, "I know of no country in which there is so little independence of mind and real freedom of discussion as in America." One's first impression is that de Tocqueville did not understand our society, but I believe rather that he understood all too well.

This problem is best illustrated by government persecution of the Amish people. This small religious sect places the simple life of farming and self-reliance at the base of their creed. They disdain worldy goods. Why then have they been persecuted? Their philosophy does not endanger the public welfare; it does, however, run counter to the materialism of an affluent society and the dependence upon government in the twentieth century welfare state. Earlier disputes between these people and government involved their refusal to pay social security taxes, for they ask no benefits from the government other than to be left free to make their own way in this world. The latest incident in their struggle for independence was their refusal to send their children to public schools in Hazleton, Iowa. Presently, they educate their children in antiquated one-room school houses. The teacher is an individual with the equivalent of an eighth grade education which they consider adequate for their simple farming life. On November 19, Superintendent of Schools Arthur Sensor and Hazleton School Principal Owen Snively brought a school bus to the Amish schoolhouse to forcibly take the children to public school. At the urging of their parents, the children hid in barns and cornfields to thwart these police-state tactics.

The basic question is by what right does the State decide what education is best for a child over the objections of the child's parents. Historically from the warlike, animalistic attitude taught the youths of ancient Sparta to the militant anti-Semitism taught in Nazi Germany to the racial prejudice and white supremacy taught in many Southern schools today, education by the State has not always been desirable. Why then do the Amish have less right to freedom of religion under the First Amendment than any other group? The immediate answer should come from Mr. Sensor and Mr. Snively, but the ultimate answer must come from the conscience of each of us.

Not long ago the national leader of the Amish sect announced that his people were considering moving to Australia where they could freely practice their religion. This is a sad commentary on the state of American democracy. We must never forget de Tocqueville's warning that the line between freedom and slavery is very thin, much thinner today than we like to believe.

Pacifists Should Try Peking Demonstrating

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

America is one of the few nations where the right of dissent is so strongly protected. This is as it should be for those dissenting are proving the existence of the very freedoms which they often claim to be seeking. Of course this is not always true in certain local areas, especially some southern states. Well intentioned individuals often advocate positions that are inconsistent with that which they seek to promote. For example, those who supported the Speaker Ban Law would use a totalitarian tactic to support a position of anti-totalitarianism. Thus they defeat their own purpose.

The recent March on Washington to protest our policy in Viet Nam is an example of gullible naivete on the part of most of the marchers and outright disloyalty on the part of some. Dissent I shall always defend, treason never.

Personally, I am sick and tired of the KKK, the Birchers and others of the fascist type. I am equally as sick and tired of the fuzzy minded pseudo liberals who can see no evil on the left side of the highway. I suggest to Norman Thomas (a man I used to respect though not agree with) to Carl Oglesby, to Mrs. Martin Luther King, to Dr. Benjamin Spock, and to Sanford Gottlieb that they now organize new Marches for they are very effective. I suggest especially Marches on Peking, Hanoi, and Moscow. Perhaps they should begin with Peking! And, if there is a priest left in Peking he might have the unique experience of celebrating a Requiem Mass for 25,000 who had proved the existence of freedom to to demonstrate in Washington.

Yes, the March was effective. It reminded me to write President Lyndon B. Johnson pledging my support to my country and my President and to our men dying at the hands of the enemies of freedom in Viet Nam. I pray that millions will do likewise.

Good Manners

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

Today I saw an out of town woman looking for a friend in the Village Apartments. I told her the number. When she found her friend was out, we got to talking. I asked her what her name was, and told her my name. She asked, "Are you the person my son, who teaches at the University, told us about correcting the students manners?" I told her I was afraid I was.

She said she was glad some one was doing something about young people's manners. She continued: "My nephew didn't have much manners, but when he went to State his manners got worse. I wish someone would do something about the manners at State."

We agreed that young folks are not taught manners in the home now, but we thought that the parents would really like to have their children taught basic good manners. Parents don't know what to do about it. College officials should work out some plan. For the students will find when they get out in the world that good manners are almost as important to them as what they have learned from books.

Washington March 'Healthy' Dissent

The Charlotte Observer

When the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy (SANE) organized Saturday's demonstration in Washington, its officers specified that they wanted a negotiated settlement of the war in Vietnam, not a pullout by United States forces.

This point needs to be remembered in the anger that greeted the appearance in Washington extremists carrying the flag of the Viet Cong. Many unauthorized and inflammatory signs were also borne by the more militant demonstrators.

The "March On Washington for Peace in Vietnam" was, on the whole, orderly and well-disciplined. True to the promise of the SANE chairman, his people moved to surround Viet Cong flags with American flags when the alien banners popped up in the parade.

This precaution and other acts marked the prime movers of the Washington demonstrations as men of good will seeking to dramatize their support of great U. S. efforts for a negotiated settlement.

This is the kind of dissent that President Johnson himself has said is "healthy." It should not be obscured by the excessive anti-U. S. behavior of the Youth Against War and Fascism and the Committee to Aid the Viet Cong Front in South Vietnam.

Display of the Viet Cong flag was in especially bad taste. Almost at the same moment, a South Vietnamese regiment and its American advisers were being overrun by hordes of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese regulars in the bloodiest engagement of the war. The battle at the Michelin rubber plantation said a great deal, in fact, about Hanoi's willingness to negotiate at all.

Still, there is much difference between Americans who seek peace through honorable means and those who favor an armed victory by the Communists in Vietnam. Those who are sincere in their quest for negotiations sought and got an audience at the White House and did everything they could to stay within the bounds of legitimate protest.

They could not have emerged from Saturday's march, however, without the realization that their sincere concerns are being taken advantage of by an elment that does not wish the United States well in Southeast Asia or anywhere else.

This fact, coupled with growing evidence that Hanoi actually believes the protests eventually will force us out of Viet nam, should cause SANE to reassess the mass demonstration as a means of changing U.S policy in the conduct of the war.

It may be equally important for the demonstrators to realize that their actions are helping bring demands for stepped-up efforts against North Vietnam, including an escalation of the bombing. The highest American casualties of the war in the week ending Nov. 22 give weight to that argument.

The need of the moment is to support the present U. S. commitment to the end that it prevents an armed Communist takeover of all South Vietnam, and at the same time urge the President to explore all possible avenues to peace.

This does not mean automatic approval of large new troop commitments now being mentioned. But it may mean having enough patience — and suffering through more American losses — until some honorable way can be found out of an unhappy international predicament.

No More Canned Notes For Student Of Future

By DAVID ROTHMAN

Newsweek recently reported that the University of California boasts a thriving lecture note service whose proprietor thinks college kids don't have enough skill to take good notes.

Berkeley students pay up to $5.50 a semester for these "canned" lectures, but judging from daily sales of up to $1,200, the service is quite popular.

And they're also incompetent in other areas of academic life, like exam taking.

But help's on the way. Look what happened, for instance, when Roger Retard entered UNC in 1975.

The moment he got off the Chapel Hill bus, he rushed straight to the campus book store, hoping to pick up course outlines and lecture notes.

"What's happening?" he asked the establishment's operator.

"Nothing," the operator replied, "except we've discovered that reading the course outlines and 'canned' notes is too difficult for the average student.

"Please follow me to the back room."

Pointing to them, the book store man said: "Because the typical student isn't suited for college work, we've arranged to hire professionals to serve in his place.

"Bob over there has sweated out English Composition thirty times. Harry's taken Math 1 for the past fifteen semesters. And Dick's been through ten years of Modern European Civilization, although he likes his job since he's taken it under an easy grader.

"Of course, not all the work is pleasant. I've always hated paying extra wages to have my employees take Physics and Chemistry, especially because these courses require so much overtime pay during exams.

"But I've got plenty of applicants for crib jobs like Marriage and the Family. In fact, the work there is so enjoyable that many students insist on taking the course themselves despite the fact they're incompetents. We patiently try to point out that do-it-yourself course taking is never as satisfactory as the professional approach, regardless of interference from the morals squad."

"What about the P. E. courses?" Roger asked.

"Several members of the football team have agreed to take Bowling for a limited number of students on a first-come, first-serve basis," the book store operator replied.

"But my conscience still troubles me," Roger said.

"You needn't be disturbed at all. Just remember a quote from another UNC student printed several years ago in Newsweek: 'The object is to pass, isn't it. I figure anything short of cheating is O. K.' Can you ask for a better recommendation?

"And," the operator concluded, "you'll actually be helping the War on Poverty. Several needy youths are now among our employees. If you use them, they can work their way through school to get a college education."

pellant, and said "It looked good."

The power problem came up just after the Gemini 7 entered orbit. Pressure from one of the oxygen tanks feeding the fuel cell power supply trying to heat the tank to build up pressure, the pilots were told to splice in the tank which provides them with oxygen to breathe.

They did, and the pressure went up to satisfactory levels. It is not expected to endanger the flight. The same trouble threatened the eight-day flight of Gemini 5 briefly and the splicing method was worked into the present flight to counteract such a possibility.

There was still a lingering problem with a pressure light but it did not seem serious.

At Cape Kennedy, Fla., inspectors went out immediately to survey the damage to launch pad 19 — and found it minimal.

That means there will be little trouble in erecting another Titan 2 rocket and the Gemini 6 hunter spacecraft in time for the scheduled Gemini 6 blastoff on Dec. 13 — nine days from now.

Piloted by Navy Capt. Walter M. Schirra Jr. and Air Force Maj. Thomas P. Stafford, Gemini 6 will search out and come within feet of Gemini 7. Then the two spacecraft will fly in formation for some six hours.

It will be an historic and complex maneuver, paving the way to the Moon.

After Lovell strips off his space suit, he may remain in his long underwear for up to a day to test the comfort of shirt sleeve flight in the Gemini cabin. After that, he and Borman have permission to take turns — during non-critical stages on the flight. One of them always remaining in the protective spacesuit. A sudden, massive loss of cabin pressure due to perhaps a large puncture would mean instant death for the unprotected crewman.

Bethlehem Star

The Morehead Planetarium iis presenting "Star of Bethlehem" this month at 8:30 p.m. week days; Saturdays at 11 a.m., 1, 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m.; and Sundays at 2, 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m.

Since the first version of this program was presented at the Planetarium in 1949, over 350,000 people have seen it improved each year. In the minds of many North Carolinians, "Star of Bethlehem" plays an important part in the Christmas celebration.

Planetarium Assistant Director Donald S. Hall said, "Each year that we present the program, slight changes and improvements are made; however, it remains basically the same presentation which has become part of the Christmas tradition of our state.

The first part of the program is done in the setting of modern day Bethlehem with the audience encircled by a color horizon view of that holy city.

In this setting the narrator turns time backwards 2000 years through the use of the Planetarium's Zeiss Projector to examine some of the possibilities of what the star might have been.

The planetarium will be closed Dec. 24-25.

Tar Heels Battle Buckeyes Monday

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

History has a chance to repeat itself Monday evening as basketball coach Dean Smith takes his Tar Heels to Columbus, Ohio, to battle the Buckeyes of Ohio State.

Only a few short weeks ago the Tar Heel football team enjoyed their "finest hour" of the season in disposing of a highly - regarded Buckeye club 14-3.

The stage is set once again and conditions are about the same.

Again the Tar Heels are the underdogs. Ohio State, coached by veteran Fred Taylor, are ranked as high as eighth in the nation in pre-season polls.

Monday's contest will be the third meeting of the two clubs. The pair split the first two games of the series. The Tar Heel victory came in 1946 — topping the Buckeyes 60-57.

Both clubs will be missing All-America centers this season. Of course the Tar Heels are minus the services of Billy Cunningham, but the Buckeyes will equally miss All-America Dick Ricketts — their 6-8 center of last season.

The Buckeyes, who fashioned a 7-7 conference record in the tough Big Ten, hope to be greatly improved over their 12-12 record last season.

Better scoring punch, stronger rebounding, the greater depth are the reasons for the optimism. Rebounding will still be a problem, however, since Al Rowley and Al Peters — a pair of 6-6's — are the tallest of the returning lettermen.

High-rated sophomore Bill Hosket, a 6-7 forward, and junior Ron Sepic, a 6-0 guard, will be called o nto carry much of the scoring load.

Much depends on the adjustment of 6-6 Bob Dove who has been shifted from the forward position.

But Lewis is not the entire Tar Heel show by any means. Sophomore Larry Miller has found a home on the varsity and his shooting and rebounding come as no surprise.

Bennett, a prep All-American and a 17-points per game scorer as a freshman, has played in the shadow of All-America Cunningham for three seasons.

★★★★

Basketball hits hard and heavy this week as the first full week of competition gets underway.

UNC, Duke, and Wake Forest get the ball rolling Monday night. The Tar Heels travel to Columbus, Ohio, to meet the mighty Buckeyes of Ohio State.

Tuesday action is sparce. N. C. State travels to Maryland to battle highly rated Terps.

Thursday is an open date for all area clubs.

The action is little but very loud on Friday night at the UCLA Bruins, rated number one in the nation, come to Durham to meet the Blue Devils of Duke. Maryland is at Kansas in other action.

Saturday is full of activity. The Tar Heels are at Vanderbilt. Duke meets UCLA again — this time in the Charlotte Coliseum. N. C. State is at Wake Forest. Maryland faces Kansas State. Richmond meets Virginia at Charlottesville. And South Carolina meets Pennsylvania on the road.

Track 'Meet'

Freshmen awards for all fall sports will be made Tuesday, Dec. 7, at 7 p.m. in Ehringhaus.

There will be a meeting of all members of the varsity and freshman track teams, and all new members interested in track participation or management, Monday, Dec. 6 at 7 p.m. in 304 Woollen Gym.

Grapplers Nab Double Win

By JOHN WILKES

Carolina varsity wrestling started its season off with a double win, beating Pfeiffer 22-11, and St. Andrews 19-11 Saturday afternoon.

Wrestling for their first time in the recently completed Carmichael Auditorium, the UNC grapplers met a strong Pfeiffer team in competition for their first win.

At the 137 pound category, the Tar Heels' John Stacy, ex-state high school champ, won 8-4 over Argo of Pfeiffer.

'Gym-Dandy' Carmichael

By DENNIS SANDERS

Almost everybody knows what it is — beside Woollen Gym. It's like putting a new Cadillac beside an old Pierce-Arrow.

But there are varying opinions concerning why it was built as it was and what it's function actually is.

The result of five years of planning, one and one-half years of construction and spending of $1.8 million.

University Engineer Jake Bryant, Assistant Athletic Director Walter Rabb and architect Donald Stewart are emphatic about its function.

"This is a multi-purpose building, and it's not for basketball alone," Rabb said.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson carried it further: "The 1963 General Assembly wouldn't have allocated the money for Carmichael unless it was designed as an auditorium to handle different functions.

Carmichael is a rigid-frame structure. It's not symmetrical, so cutting it in half would yield different pictures on each side.

"The overhead beams that hold the building are different," Stewart said. "Only two beams on each side are alike, but all beams carry the same weight load, so adjustments had to be made."

He added that the cost of structural steel (and not miscellaneous steel) alone was $502,000 — what he termed a "pretty fair amount" for such a building.

Part of Carmichael's beauty lies in interior colors, selected by Stewart, although he admits, "Were not interior decorators."

The colors are functional. The monotone (lighter) blue in some overhead beams and the seats was selected because it provides a good background for the colorful clothes people wear to basketball games.

"It also gives an effect of greater space," Stewart explained.

The darker blue — midnight blue — expresses the structure, and the yellow found on railings and exits also adds to the effect of space.

The only real construction problem came this fall when a water line broke and ruined the floor before it had been used. Rabb said this cost "about $14,000 extra" to replace the floor.

Part of the new floor — a 24 by 40 foot stage — is important. It gives Camichael the "auditorium" aspect that was required.

"The stage is hydraulic," Stewart said. "It's pushed up to a height of four feet by four pistons which apply equal pressure, and it was included to meet the legislative requirements."

He also said that such a structure looked easy to build, since there was so much open space inside.

"But it wasn't easy. A lot of things have to be considered," he added.

Rabb explained why the auditorium was named after W. D. Carmichael Jr., a former Consolidated University vice-president.

"Carmichael was a university official and he was also a great basketball player when he was in school here," Rabb said.

University engineer Bryant, whose staff supervised construction as it does for all university buildings, had a wealth of facts on Carolina's latest addition.

The building itself contains 65,112 square feet and 8,400 seats. Of these, 6,600 are permanent and 1;800 are bleacher seats — now being installed against the stage end of the auditorium (the end closest to Woollen).

"These bleachers will fold back against the wall so the stage can come up," Bryant said. He added that the new seats were wood and plastic supported by a metal frame."

The building houses 16 offices, four concession stands and four rest rooms. Rabb noted that he and Erickson occupy three offices, sports publicist Bob Quincy will move into two, and the basketball staff has four offices. Another is occupied by Educational Foundation Director Ernie Williamson.

The two glass backboards in Carmichael weigh 250 pounds each, according to Bryant.

"They're Herculite glass and they're tempered. I don't know if they're bullet-proof or not, but they're basketball-proof," he smiled.

Stewart called Carmichael "complex and functional." Rabb said "beautiful." They both seem to be pleased with it.

Babies Jam Brevard

Carolina's Tar Babies checked Brevard JC with a jam - sticky defense which picked off 12 steals and fired away at a 58.3 per cent clip on offense to smash the Panthers 92-70 for their second consecutive win last night in Carmichael Auditorium.

Following the ball-hawking of guards Dick Grubar and Gerald Tuttle, Larry Brown's forces asserted command from the very beginning and rolled up a 22-8 lead in the first seven minutes. Tuttle made five truly outstanding assists in the first half, and with Bill Runting and Rusty Clark scoring 13 points each, the frosh sprinted to a 45-28 intermission lead.

Bunting got the rout started when he followed up his own shot with a rebound basket after only eight seconds of play. Three minutes and five Clark-points later it was 7-3, and that was as close as the junior college visitors could draw the rest of the night.

The breakaway point came early, when, with only four minutes having elapsed, forward Joe Brown picked off a pass and gave it to Tuttle who fed Grubar for a layup. Then Tuttle was back with another pilfer, and this time he hit the stringy Bunting for a "snowbird."

A minute later Grubar (twice), Bunting and Jim Bostick put together four straight goals to stretch the lead to 22-8, and the Panthers were down the chute for good.

Coming out after intermission with a 17-point lead, the Babies refused to let up. Tuttle quickly scored from the top of the key, and Carolina built a fluctuating lead which reached its widest margin of 27 points at 77-50 with 8:13 to play.

During this feasty stretch, Clark and Bostick put together back-to-back streaks of eight and six straight points respectively. Bostick's flurry consumed only 42 seconds, and his three goals came on a pair of 15-foot jumpers and an excellent drive.

Just before these two hot-handed pistols began to fire, Grubar exhibited the top defensive plays of the night.

With Brevard at side-court, Dickie stole the pass almost before his opponent could get it away, and sped downcourt for an easy bucket. A minute later, he swiped another pass and Clark hit a follow shot to ignite his eight-point streak.

Clark had Panthers hanging off his shoulders and arms all night, and drew enough fouls to send him to the line for 19 attempts. Of these, he sank 12, and collected eight-of-14 from the floor to lead all scorers with 28 points. The amiable 6-11 giant also swept the boards clean for 16 rebounds to pose as UNC's top statistics man for the night.

Bostick, who saw a lot of action in his usual shuffle role with Brown netted an amazing eight of nine attempts from the floor and ran up a second-high total of 19. Grubar, one of the top defenders around, totaled 17 points, although he had trouble with the wide-open shot and missed a couple of cripple tries.

Reserves were predominant in the UNC lineup for the last eight minutes, and gave a fine account, scoring 15 points in that time. Guard Cecil Harrison and forward Don Rihdfleisch were particularly outstanding.

The Babies, who shot 59.3 per cent last Wednesday at Clemson, were hot again tonight, sinking field goals at a 58.3 per cent rate. The second half figure was 62.1.

Meade Wins Track Prize

The UNC cross country team awarded Captain Jim Meade the outstanding senior prize Friday night at their annual banquet. Trip MacPherson and Charley Worley were elected as co-captains for next year's varsity team. Truit Goodwin was made captain of the freshman team.

Coach Bob Fetzer, 30 years athletic director at UNC, and presently serving on the Morehead Foundation, made the gift presentation to Captain Meade.

Head coach Joe Hilton spoke on the fine effort his third ranked ACC team made in accumulating their six wins — one loss record.

He said that it had been a good season despite the many injuries and illnesses that plagued members of the team.

Looking ahead to next year, Coach Hilton said the team should be considerably improved. Runners who missed competition this fall due to illness or injury should be fully recovered by next season. And members of this year's undefeated, state champion freshman team will add strength to the 1966 varsity club.

Coach Hilton concluded his remarks by saying "I have not seen any better attitude, either individually or team-wise, any time since I have been here." Captain Meade presented both Coach Hilton and Assistant coach Newnam with gifts from the team in appreciation of their work through out the season.

Enlarged Molars

Columnist David Rothman predicts the Playboy girls of the future will have enlarged molars and dentists will be stationed in the arboretum. Read his page-two column.

A young lady attended Carolina's first basketball game the other night and came away wondering why athletes pat each other on the fanny.

Women continually hear about the feminine mystique, she says, but rarely get any answers when they attempt to delve into the masculine mystique. Just look at all the male pecularities that are shrouded in secret.

At first I thought the players were just being friendly — but big strong athletes are not supposed to have those kind of tendencies.

Then I tried to link fanny pats with significant happenings in the game. If you will notice, however, the team pats the one who scores and then will turn around on the next play and pat the one who just goofed.

Whenever a new man goes into the action or a player returns to the bench, both will get their fannies patted all the way there and back. Perhaps they are carrying secret messages to and from the coach.

Being well aware that patting a member of the fair sex raises some spirits, we could reason that patting each other boosts team spirit.

But, until we unravel the masculine mystique we'll never know for sure!

Directory Still In The Stew

It's not a best-seller, but it will be talked about anyway, at least over the telephone.

UNC's student-faculty directory is now on sale at the "Y" at 50 cents per copy.

The first name in it this year is that of John F. Abbick, a graduate student.

There are over 60 Moores and about two pages of Smiths.

And you can rest assured that the ad on the back showing the Lenoir cook slopping out the stew remains.

Plenty Of Tickets For UR Game

Plenty of tickets are left for tomorrow night's basketball game with the University of Richmond even though several thousand tickets were picked up by students yesterday.

Carolina Athletic Director C. P. Erickson said he hoped one third of the new bleachers will be ready for the game.

Last Saturday's game against William and Mary was a sellout but there were at least 200 empty seats.

Erickson said the Athletic Association is thinking about making some changes in the ticket situation. One idea is to hold tickets until the night of the game and give them out on a first come first serve basis.

At any rate, tickets are available for tomorrow night's encounter, so don't poor mouth about not getting in if you don't make an attempt to get your ticket.

DTH Staff Changes

Daily Tar Heel Editor Ernie McCrary has named former sports editor Pat Stith as new managing editor of the paper.

Barry Jacobs, previously managing editor, has become associate editor and is in charge of the editorial page. Jacobs replaces John Jennrich.

Staff Writer Andy Myers has taken over the roll of news editor from Fred Thomas who retired to concentrate on the books.

Mental Illness

The Key, a thought provoking movie about people locked in the back wards of mental hospitals—how they got there and what can be done for them—will be presented Wednesday night at 7 in room 08, Peabody Hall.

It is sponsored by the YM-YWCA Umstead Committee. After the movie students in projects at Umstead Mental Hospital will discuss their programs.

Mr. Britton L. Gordon, Jr., Vice-President
Student Body
University of North Carolina
Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Dear Mr. Gordon:

The 18 November resolution and the Thanksgiving Day Message expressing support by students of the University of North Carolina for the efforts of our armed forces in Vietnam are deeply appreciated. The fine actions by many college students throughout the United States in donating blood for the U.S. military forces, in offering support for our civic action programs in Vietnam, and in conveying encouragement through petitions and resolutions have more than offset the negative actions of an uninformed minority.

I have forwarded the resolution and the message to the Command Information Officer for dissemination to our troops via our military newspaper.

On behalf of all the servicemen in this command, I extend my heartfelt thanks to you, to Mr. Kirstein of the Thanksgiving Day Committee and to each student who contributed to this encouraging display of support.

Sincerely,

Launch Day At The Cape— Gray Start, Easy Finish

Ed. note: DTH Editor Ernie McCrary and 23 other student editors attended the Gemini 7 launch at Cape Kennedy as guests of Life Magazine and NASA. This is McCrary's account of the launch day.

By ERNIE MCRARY

CAPE KENNEDY — Saturday morning did not really dawn—it just lightened a little. It was a Chamber of Commerce nightmare, with a solid gray overcast, cool breezes and occasional sprinkles of rain.

It was no more agreeable to the thosands of people who had been working night and day in preparation for the sending of two men up on a 14-day space mission.

Since its start three days earlier, the countdown had progressed flawlessly—the weather was the only unreliable factor in the launch, and of course, the one which was beyond control.

Breakfast conversation at the motel in Cocoa Beach, a few miles from the Cape, was dominated by talk of the weather:

"The radio said that if it doesn't get any worse, they'll go ahead with the shot."

"I heard these clouds were supposed to start breaking up, but now, it's raining."

At 8:15 just before we boarded buses to take us to space center, a few drops began to fall and we started our tour of the base in a soft rain.

The first stop was the site of a future space museum—the pad where America's first suborbital spaceman, Alan Shephard, was launched in a now-antique Mercury Redstone on May 5, 1961. The gantry which stood by his craft is still there—it is nothing but a modified oil derrick. Said our NASA guide, "The oil derrick was the only thing available, and it worked."

None of us had realized the Cape is such a huge place—17,000 acreas of land and 20,000 employees.

Under development are 88,000 acres, much of it being reclaimed from the Banana River. Most of the dozen launch complexes lie between the Atlantic Ocean and the Banana, which is roughly parallel to the coast.

Our guide took us everywhere. Wearing pink NASA tags and hard hats, we literally crawled all over the Saturn I-B launch area. Eventually the I-B will send the into orbit to perfect techniques for lunar trips, which will be handled by the massive Saturn V boosters.

A Saturn I-B being prepared for an unmanned flight was erected on Pad 34 and we were allowed to roam about the rocket and the lower levels of the 210-foot moveable service tower which surrounded it.

We toured the VAB (Vehicle Assembly Building), which is so large that clouds would form and rain would fall inside it without air conditioning. The $100 million building is larger than the Pentagon and combined and is visible for 40 miles on a clear day.

It should be completed by March. It is here that the 360-foot Saturn V's will be assembled for the manned moon shots, the first scheduled in late 1969.

The rain sprinkles had ended about 10 a.m. and the clouds began to thin. By 11 the sun was actually shining—at least slightly.

We went to a briefing in the NASA Auditorium at 1 p.m. and received information about the goals and flight procedure of the Gemini 7 and 6 missions, then took buses to a site near the control center building where bleachers had been set up.

MHC President Says—

Faculty Will Decide On Court Reforms

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline will submit its reactions to proposed changes in the student judicial system after Christmas vacation, according to Men's Council Chairman Van MacNair.

A massive report of proposals for reform of student courts, penalties and jurisdiction of student codes was submitted to the faculty committee last month by the Student Government ad-hoc committee on the judiciary.

He said faculty committee members and student leaders were having difficulty deciding the jurisdiction of the Honor and Campus Codes and determining the status of the "double standard" of men's and women's social rules.

Student leaders have urged the jurisdiction of the codes be limited to the University and its community.

"The faculty is quite wary about the reputation of the University," MacNair said, "and it would prefer to have a catch-all phrase included in the codes so that the University will be protected against flagrant code violations committed away from Chapel Hill.

"We have reached an agreement with the faculty that the double standard does exist," he said. "As of yet, we have reached no decision as to what should be done about the double standard."

MacNair outlined student proposals to have a Men's Council and a Women's Council to handle Campus Code violations.

An Honor Council composed of both male and female students would hear cases arising from violations of the Honor Code.

A student Supreme Court will hear appeal cases, and final jurisdiction will be in the hands of the Faculty Review Board.

MacNair also outlined the responsibilities of male and female students in adhering to women's rules.

"If a man tries to help a woman keep her obligations under the rules, he is not responsible for an offense," MacNair said.

"If he is not aware of certain rules," he said, "the male student is not responsible. If the woman does not wish to keep the rules, he is not responsible.

"If the man acts as a barrier to her conformation to the rules, he is also responsible," MacNair said. "His minimal responsibility is to make an attempt to inform her of the rules.

MacNair said the faculty committee would support these proposals.

Women's Council Chairman Leith Merrow and Women's Residence Council Chairman Penny Scovil explained proposed changes in penalties and women's rules.

"Some women's rules declaring that a violation of a certain regulation will be considered a Campus Code offense do not give proper respect to the Campus Code," Miss Scovil said.

"A girl who comes in 15 minutes late is not guilty of unladylike conduct because of the fact she is late," she said. "We hope to change this."

Miss Scovil also explained the proposed liberalization of women's closing hours.

Professor To Speak Here On Wonders Of ESP

Dr. J. B. Rhine, founder and Director of The Parapsychology Laboratory of Duke University, will speak in Hill Hall Thursday at 8 p.m. His talk, "ESP — What Can We Make of It?" is sponsored by the Graham Memorial Current Affairs Committee.

What is ESP? Almost everyone, at one time or another, has had some experience — a hunch, a run of luck, a premonition, or a similarly puzzling event — which he could not satisfactorily explain. Experiences such as these are the raw materials from which the science of parapsychology took its beginnings.

In technical terms, parapsychology includes telepathy (extrasensory knowledge of another person's thoughts or mental states), clairvoyance (extrasensory knowledge of things or events), precognition (foreknowledge), and matter"). In general, they are covered by the term "psi."

Dr. Rhine joined Duke University's psychology department in 1927. From then to 1934 he remained a member of the department studying psychical phenomenon. By 1935 he had founded his own branch of the department — the Parapsychology Laboratory.

This organization virtually launched the ESP studies in this country and abroad. He has published extensive articles on ESP and is author of "The Reach of the Mind," Science of the Mind" (With J. G. Pratt), and "New World of the Mind."

Dr. Rhine's critics in the psychology field once dismissed his work because it does not deal with finding explanations of human personality in terms of the nervous system. To these critics Dr. Rhine writes:

"This brain - centered approach to man, this cerebrocentric psychology, has long been trying to sweep under the rug the things it could not explain by such means. It has particularly to keep out of sight those occurrences in human behavior that definitely challenged physical explanation. Psi phenomenon were not to be mentioned in polite psychological society."

Now, however, "Published surveys of the attitudes of younger psychologists toward ESP indicate that progress toward acceptance is much more rapid than among the older men. This is a promising sign."

Rhine sees ESP in practical terms, too. "The attempts to divine the future, to obtain knowledge of faraway events, of the military secrets of a potential enemy, the nature or prognosis of disease, the location of lost or underground objects and substances, ranging from water to uranium, are all examples."

'Fire Coach Hickey' Says Student Poll

By PAT STITH

Eight DTH staffers talked with more than 250 Carolina students. Those who had an opinion favored replacing Hickey by a margin of almost two to one (63.8 per cent).

Of the 165 people polled 148 wanted to see Hickey relieved of his job, 84 opposed the move and 33 expressed no opinion.

A group of students started a petition after North Carolina's 34-7 loss to Duke calling for Chancellor Paul Sharp to "take any necessary steps or make any needed changes in personnel" to improve Carolina's football program.

Hickey's contract still has two years to run. He makes between $17,000 and 18,000 a year, according to Athletic Director Chuck Erickson.

Many feel that Coach Hickey has recruited good material but that he hasn't made good use of it. They don't understand why Carolina freshmen teams are consistant winners while the varsity, under Hickey, can't break even.

"I don't see how we can have such good freshman prospects and still come out with such a lousy varsity," Dick Conely, a junior from Chapel Hill said.

Jim Hickey

Mel Manson, a graduate student, said, "I think we have had good material but I don't think we've made good use of it. If Hickey can't do that, we ought to get someone who can."

"I just don't believe football is that important in an academic community," said Jim Rossman of Charleston, W. Va., "I wouldn't like to see him fired."

"You cannot blame a football coach for things he cannot control, such as the good play of an opponent," he said. "To fire Hickey merely because he did not win is making him a scapegoat without looking for real reasons."

Hickey has been in coaching business for 19 seasons, since 1947. He has been head coach at North Carolina since the death of Jim Tatum, in 1959.

Before coming to Carolina as an assistant to Tatum, Hickey coached for five years at Hampton-Sydney College where he compiled a 27-11-4 record and was twice named Va. "Coach of the Year."

His most successful season came two years ago when his Tar Heels won of 11 including a 35-0 Gator Bowl win over the Air Force Academy. For his work that year he was named ACC "Coach of the Year."

Let's Take The 25th

Gov. Dan K. Moore has called another special session of the General Assembly for Jan. 10. This time the session is being held to comply with a federal court order for reapportionment and redistricting on the "one-man, one-vote" basis.

Moore, Lt. Gov. Robert Scott and House Speaker Pat Taylor said, "Our feeling is that the activities of the General Assembly should be confined to complying with the court order."

Heaven forbid the possibility of overworking our legislators, but before they plunge into the traumatic experience of reapportionment, there is one bit of housekeeping they ought to get out of the way.

They ought to ratify the 25th amendment to the United States Constitution, sometimes called the presidential succession amendment.

It provides that should the President become so incapacitated that he could not perform his duties, the Vice President would officially take on his job. If the President died, a new Vice President would be elected to fill the vacancy created when the original VP took over the presidency.

Twelve states, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Indiana, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, have already approved the amendment. Twenty-six more states must ratify it before the amendment is law.

If these states ratify the amendment, just four more will be needed. Some might call sessions to deal with state problems or even specifically to approve this amendment, especially when the required number is neared.

The country needs a President and Vice President at all times. A chance to provide that security should not be ignored just because our legislature has more personally important things to do.

Asking the General Assembly to do this now will probably be about as well-received as a request to outlaw Christmas, but we are really just trying to do the legislators a favor by providing a non-controversial means of achieving a sense of accomplishment.

When they leave Raleigh after trying to do the job the court has ordered them to do, and they return home shaken and with a few sweaty brows, they can look back with some comfort on the session and say, "Well, at least we ratified the amendment."

Such A Shocking Display

Everybody knows how much money those long-tressed British singers are raking in, but few realize the risks that go along with such an occupation.

Consider Keith Richards, one of the Rolling Stones. The group was singing in Sacramento, Calif., Saturday night when Richards' electric guitar touched the microphone before him. This Rolling Stone really lived up to his name.

In a shower of blue sparks Richards was kocked cold before 4,400 screaming teenagers, and was hauled off to City Emergency Hospital. Doctors pronounced him in "good" condition.

The Rolling Stones have been called many things, but until now "electrifying" has not been one of the adjectives.

Exchange Problem

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

As the majority of students here at Carolina realize, the UNC Book Exchange transacts business with thousands of students and buys just as many books. Perhaps it's too much to ask that a single student be rendered the simple service of ordering a book necessary for that student's required reading.

Their flimsy excuse for not ordering the book was that the UNC Book Exchange did not, under ordinary circumstances, order single copies of books. So with gritted teeth and determination to get this book — somewhere — I paid a visit to a well known bookstore uptown. They agreed pleasantly to order the book.

The point of the whole incident is that the UNC Book Exchange, set up for the aid and benefit of the student, wouldn't give service to a student when it was most needed. Whereas, a Chapel Hill book store offers this assistance which is often so important to the student.

Those responsible for the operation of the Book Exchange should take a long, close look at their policies along these lines. Maybe other students have faced a problem similar to this one. It's a shame that the campus book store can't orient itself to the demands of the student.

Otelia's Defender

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Opinions are quickly formed impressions which all too easily are made and which all too easily become our die-hard convictions. Who needs to be reminded that, as much as we cherish truth, so our opinions need always to be tested and checked out? For these reasons I oppose the opinions on Otelia Connor expressed by Mr. Clark in the DTH because it's fun to laugh at her latest solutions to our problems. I joke because I know these solutions are not the answers. The problems have been brought to my attention in an interesting way. It is now for me and you to find the right solutions. To take Otelia's remarks and turn them back at her in "ridicule and disrespect" is ever to retain our problems and to suppress one who tries to make us, occasionally, think.

Mr. Clark said, "one of the worst breaches of etiquette is to correct someone in public," and where he said it was on the second page of The Daily Tar Heel in the "Letters to the Editor" section. Being just about as "public" as one can get, Mr. Ford "corrected" Otelia for correcting others.

The problem here is that most of us never favorably receive criticism for our benefit, whether or not others are present. I don't believe resentment would be any less if Otelia took names and addresses and made private house calls. We do not know how to receive beneficial criticism. We ourselves have made such criticism a crime and a "breach of etiquette."

A graduate student in Library Science told me not long ago that the "time to correct someone is when he can do something about it." How simple and right! Where is the crime in this?

Jane Marotte in her letter to the DTH (Nov. 2) said, "Discipline comes from the inside of man . . ." If this is so, cannot Otelia help to build up, spur on, or awaken that discipline?

A good measure of a person's character, I have heard, is to see what that person esteems in others. I suggest that those excellent articles by Otelia on past University presidents be reread. From among the merits of these men shine out "dedication to the University," "discipline," and "character!" George T. Winston (DTH, Sept. 24) successfully saved our University by "zeal to correct any situation he didn't like," and David Lowery Swain (Sept. 21) believed, "the chief concern of the University is to make character and not to break people." I believe that Otelia, in her way, is contributing to make our character.

Why Reapportion?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I hope you're happy with the reapportionment of the General Assembly. Talk about discrimination, you couldn't be satisfied with 75% of the power, you had to have 99 of it.

I want you to go out and look around this state. The Piedmont has got more and better roads, schools, and businesses than the East.

It's about time an era ended? Well, buster you can take your "end of an era" . . .

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Kissing And Cavities

A University of Miami researcher recently suggested that kissing could transmit the bacteria supposed to cause tooth decay.

Dr. Doran D. Zinner said the decay is actually a contagious disease that has hardly anything to do with heredity or eating candy.

If Zinner's findings are correct, they'll undoubtedly make life easier for morals squads, who could call on professionals if they ever had a hard case to crack: dentists.

Upon definitely learning that kissing spreads cavities, the Chapel Hill Police Department hired several dentists.

They were stationed at strategic spots throughout the Arboretum.

Burly policemen hauled suspected offenders to the Dental School. Then, the dentists X-rayed them.

Students with an excessive number of cavities found themselves judged "morally undesirable."

A big scandal occurred when the president of the student body was discovered to have false teeth, but he was let off lightly. The Honor Council determined that his own bacteria had been responsible for the decay.

Later that year, perverted films were shown inside a University residence hall. The obscene flicks featured the insides of a heavy kisser's mouth.

But students continued hanging around a nearby news stand, where they eagerly bought copies of "Playboy." They cut out pictures from the magazine of girls with well developed molars.

All the women in "Playboy," of course, had slim wisdom teeth, and no strip-teaser could ever hope to attract attention if she lacked a proper wisdom-to-molar ratio.

Oral Roberts blessed people by putting his hands in their mouths.

The Daughters of the American Revolution refused to accept the new explanation of the cavities' cause. "After all," they insisted, "George Washington had wooden teeth."

The battle to fluoridate the water supplies of many small towns took on new overtones when the John Birch Society members charged the fluoridation, besides being communistic, was "a blatant insult to the morality of this God-fearing nation."

Comely girls throughout the United States were arrested at beaches for indecent exposure after police agreed their smiles were too revealing.

Commenting on the growth of pornography, one house wife said, "I am alarmed by this. Our sons and daughters can now see what used to be included only in dental journals."

Persons seeking employment with the CIA and similar federal agencies did not get hired unless they stood up in front of security officers and declared: "Look Ma, no cavities!"

The Student Speaks

A True Economic Liberal

This column will be devoted to contributions from DTH readers, which are considered to be of general interest. The material presented represents the viewpoint of th author, not necessarily that of the DTH.

In this column, Wilson Clark, Jr. discusses economist Ludwig von Mises, who will speak at UNC on Dec. 15, sponsored by The Carolina Conservative Club.

"Dr. von Mises' treatise is the work of an acute and cultivated mind . . . Its lucid common sense has the quality to be found so much more often in Austrian than in German authors, of the best French writing . . . The book is enlightened in the highest degree possible."

Thus, in rare form, Lord John Maynard Keynes describes an early work of Ludwig von Mises, The Theory of Money and Credit. (Theorie des Geldes und der Umlaufsmittel, Munich, 1912). This quotation accomplishes two purposes: It demonstates that 1) even Keynes was right part of the time, and 2) the early writings of Keynes tend to rather acutely embarrass latter-day Keynesian economists. But the topic of this article is von Mises and not Lord Keynes, so on to more interesting territory.

It is indeed fortunate that to mention the name von Mises in many quarters fails to provoke even the slightest reaction, whereas that of Keynes produces leftist ecstasy. In the confusing world of modern liberalism, especially in the academic community, the works of von Mises are rarely discussed, or even read.

As one discerning writer comments, in a review of von Mises' magnum opus, Human Action: "Undoubtedly readership has been restricted by the practice, so common even among academicians, of ignoring, regardless of analytical merit, any writings which on policy reach conclusions not already welcome."

Who, then, is Ludwig von Mises?

Born in Lemberg, Austria, in 1881, Mises studied under the great Boehm-Bawerk at the University of Vienna where he received his doctorate in 1906 in Law and Social Science. He was Professor of Economics at the University of Vienna from 1913-1938, at which time he left to escape socialist persecution and suppression under Nazism. After a brief stay at the Graduate Institute of International Studies at Geneva, Switzerland, he came to the United States, and was naturalized in 1946. He is now Visiting Professor of Economics at New York University.

The author of a great and varied collection of books, articles, and essays, his widely hailed masterpiece is Human Action, A Treatise on Economics, published by Yale in 1949. Human Action represents the culmination of a lifetime's research in the science of economics. It is characterized not only by its prodigious scholarship, but by the immensity of subject matter covered.

Von Mises journeys into ethics, politics, and metaphysics, not to mention his exhaustive coverage of economic theory. A revision of his Nationalokonomie (1940), Human Action delves into economics from a libertarian viewpoint. Following in the "Austrian" school of economic liberalism, this scholar is unequivocally laissez-faire. Representing the intellectual tradition of Adam Smith, Frederic Bastiat, Ricardo, Carl Menger, and Eugen von Boehm-Bawerk, Professor Mises calls himself a "True Liberal," avoiding the opprobrious modern connotations of that time-honored term.

Professor Mises examines this semantic dispute more thoroughly in his book, Planning for Freedom. In a discussion of Socialist and Interventionist policies in the Anglo-Saxon countries, Mises observes: "Anti-Liberalism's only chance was to camouflage itself as true and genuine liberalism and to denounce the attitudes of all other parties as a mere counterfeit liberalism."

He continues with, "The semantic innovation which the Socialists and interventionists thus inaugurated left the advocates of freedom without any name." The predicament has been somewhat resolved by utilization of the term liberatarian, but as Professor Mises emphasizes, the advocates of political and economic liberty in the twentieth century are stranded in a situation most bizarre.

The proponents of the omnipotent state, the protagonists of Socialism, are now known as Liberals, reversing a magnificent historical trend.

—Gemini Countdown A-OK—

Several hundred people, all NASA guests, took seats there 30 minutes before liftoff.

"Where is she?" a woman shrieked.

"Over there," another screamed. "Come up here and you can see."

"What's she wearing?"

Shirley sat down and attention turned once more to the Titan rocket setting two miles away with Frank Borman and James Lovell Jr. lying in its capsule.

A loudspeaker voice said, "It is T-minus-eight and still counting. We are past the crucial point in the systems checks and everything is okay—no problems."

At T-minus-five minutes the spectators were warned not to be alarmed by loud booms just after the launch.

"This will be the sound of jet chase planes breaking the sound barrier and will have nothing to do with the flight of the spacecraft."

Smoke appeared around the Titan.

"Seven."

Yellow-white exhaust flame appeared.

"Six. . .five. . .four. . .three . . .two. . .one zero"

'Flame gushed out, followed by a huge orange cloud of smoke which blew off to the north The "bird" hesitated, kept back by its hold-down clamps.

Then it lifted slowly, building a roar so loud that it felt as if the bleachers had been connected to a vibrator.

While some of the spectators applauded, the others followed the spot of flame with binoculars until it disappeared in the haze.

Astronaut Borman's parents, sitting behind us, came down from the bleachers, smiling the way proud parents smile.

The spectators got up and began drifting back to the buses, sure of just one thing.

It certainly looked easy.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

Di-Phi Meets

"Should the North Vietnamese get out of South Viet Nam" will be the topic of a public Di-Phi Senate debate tonight at 7:30 on the third floor of New West.

The public is invited to attend and express their opinions on the subject, and excerpts from the evening's debating will be broadcast on WUNC radio.

Di-Phi President John Harrison said radio broadcasts of all Di-Phi debates will be heard as a regular feature of WUNC.

UNC Humbles OSU With Final Surge

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Sophomore Larry Miller took charge of a facing Tar Heel offense and led them back to an 82-72 victory over a stumbling, fumbling Ohio State team here last night.

With three minutes left on the clock at St. John Arena and with the Carolina lead, which had been as high as 17, cut to six points at 70-64, Miller took charge.

In a minute and nine seconds Miller tapped in a stray Tar Heel shot, hit two from the foul line, and stole the ball and drove the length of the court for a layup to put Carolina out fron 75-66.

Still he wasn't through. With 1:44 to go he hit a corner shot and was fouled. He turned it into a three - point play and the Tar Heels were home free, 78-66.

Miller scored 32 points, two more than forward Bob Lewis, who carried the UNC attack in the first half.

The Buckeyes took an early lead, shooting out front 6-0. But with 7:30 gone Lewis scored to tie the game at 13-13. Seconds later his foul shot gave the Tar Heels the advantage they never surrendered.

Ohio State had an advantage in height but Carolina, using a half court press, constantly harrassed the man with the ball and forced the Buckeyes into countless errors.

UNC outshot Ohio State in the first half and led 35-22 at halftime. It was Carolina's biggest lead of the game.

The Buckeyes pressed in the second half but North Carolina played it cool, cool, cool. They passed up the good shot for the better shot and forced Ohio State to foul.

Ohio State's press, which failed to stem the tide, gave Miller nine layups and Lewis seven.

A pleasant surprise for the Tar Heels was the play of substitute center Mark Mirken. He came on midway in the first half when Bob Bennett fell and injured his head.

After missing his first two shots he hit three in a row and did a job defensively and on the board. Bennett's injury was not serious and he came back to play later in the game.

Top socrers for Ohio State were Bob Dove, who had 24 points and 6-4 guard Ron Sepic, who hit 16.

The Tar Heels have had two perfect seasons, in 1924 (23-0) and 1957 (32-0).

Dolphins Triumph On SC Road Trip

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The Carolina Dolphins took a trip into the Palmetto state and returned with a 70-23 victory over Clemson on Thursday and a 65-29 win over South Carolina on Friday.

"The Clemson meet went exactly as we anticipated," said coach Pat Earey. "Gaye Stratten, Joe Lea, Fred Lipp and Rick Miller set a Clemson pool record in the 400-yard medley relay with a time of 3:56.7. Stratten also set a pool record in the 200-yard backstroke with 2:09.1 and the freestyle relay team of Jim Bernuth, Ed Ragland, Jay Scattergood and Rick Miller set another pool record with 3:31.2.

"Other noteworthy performances included Bernuth's 1:56.4 time in the 200-yard freestyle and Lea's 2:29 flat in the breaststroke."

Down against South Carolina, UNC took every first place except three. Earey was especially pleased with Rick Mercuri's progress in the backstroke. He finished second with a 2:10.6 time in the 200-yard event won by Gay Stratten in 2:05.8. Others who did well were Rick Forum with a 2:25.2 in the 200 breaststroke, Strud Norfleet with 51.6 in the 100 freestyle, and Pete Worthen with 22.2 in the 50 freestyle.

Next on the schedule for the Dolphins is Duke at 3:30 p.m. on Wednesday in Chapel Hill, followed by East Carolina at Greenville next Saturday.

"We shouldn't have any real tough competition until we meet Army and Navy, and then we may have more than we want," Earey said.

Frosh Records Shattered

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC whipped the cover off its highly - touted freshman swimming team and they came away with two team records and an NCAA freshman record during a 67-28 win over the University of South Carolina freshmen.

The 400-yard freestyle relay team of Phil Riker, Greg Meehan, Randy Wade and Jim Edwards was timed in 3:14.1, breaking the old NCAA freshman record of 3:15.2 set by Yale. Edwards churned the last 100 yards in the tremendous time of 47.2, faster than the Atlantic Coast Conference record.

The 400-yard medley relay team of Fred Danneman, Jack Sheppard, Phil Riker and Greg Meehan set a Carolina freshman record of 3:44.9 in the first event of the day.

Danneman started with the backstroke and he and the South Carolina man finished their 100 yards in almost a dead heat. Breaststroker Jack Sheppard was next up, but lost a few yards to the USC swimmer. Then Olympian Phil Riker showed his form in his butterfly specialty. Riker's magnificent stroke caught the USC man on the second length and left him far behind at the end of the fourth. Freestyler Jim Edwards put the finishing touches on the record.

The other freshman record broken was by Edwards in the 200-yard individual medley. He shaved almost four second off the old record with a time of 2:05.9. UNC great Harrison Merrill was co-holder of the old record with current varsity member Gaye Stratten.

In other events, Randy Wade finished first in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:52.2. Joe Sanders was second. Richard Jacobs won the 50-yard freestyle in 22.8 time.

Wade added another win in the 200-yard butterfly in 2:07.1. Doug Behrman finished second. Edwards won the 100-yard freestyle in 48.3, but was pushed hard by teammate Gred Meehan, who placed second.

McMahon of USC won the 200 - yard backstroke with UNC's Danneman second. Alexander captured the 500-yard freestyle for USC as Joe Sanders of Carolina was runnerup. Hamilton Gadd finished second to USC's White in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Vic Laughlin of South Carolina won the diving competition with a total of 245 points. Rob Carney of UNC was second with 219.7 and Jack Swartley of UNC third with 208.85. The competition was marked by splendid diving by all contestants. Laughlin is the toughest man Carney and Swartley will face all year.

UNC's last final national ranking was in 1961, when it finished a 19-4 season ranked 5th by AP and 6th by UPI.

Conditioned Apathy New Political Trick

The University Party may lag sadly in campus elections but if they turn their party election methods loose in the next campaign they will be in like Flynn.

1. There were no nominating speeches.

2. All officers except members of the executive board were elected without opposition.

There were eight people running for the executive board one of them withdrew before the voting.

The top five vote-getters who were all elected to the board had a vote spread of about 95 to 73. The sixth fellow got 24 votes.

As the 100 members left the meeting, some commented on the strange manner in which all party factionalism had been eliminated and the slate of officers determined ahead of time.

"Conditioned apathy," one member said in disgust.

Alcoholism Information Leaders

Governor Dan K. Moore designated last week "Alcoholism Information Week."

In a statement Gov. Moore called on all citizens to help eliminate inconsistencies which block efforts to control alcoholism.

Rumors have it that the Governor plans to ask UNC student leaders to travel around the state and give informative speeches on the subject. Moore feels Carolina students are well qualified and there is no use in them sitting on the still.

Blood Trail Leads Nowhere

There was a trail of blood leading from in front of Alumni Building to the GM parking lot yesterday. It measured about 100 yards.

Apparently it belonged to some dog who got the worst of it in a scrap but no one seems to know for sure.

To Match Or Not To Match

Alexander Pope once wrote that "to err is only human," but what happens if a computer makes the goofs?

The mechanized cupid of "Operation Match" has already assigned at least one Carolina Gentleman to his sister, working on the assumption that dates share common characteristics.

The body, who declares his opposition to incest, claims she probably lied about her looks.

And look what happened in Washington, D. C.

Several boys there were assigned to members of the same sex.

Another calamity took place when one fellow got into an argument with a fraternity brother after the impersonal computer gave him his girl.

There's also the tale of another "Match" customer who sent in two questionnaires—each with entirely opposite answers.

But that didn't prevent the computer from saying he's be the "ideal date" of two girls whose names appeared on both lists.

Perhaps the computer was only thinking of the time-honored belief that opposities attract.

Alonzo Squires: 'It Is A Privilege To Be Blind'

By TREVA MITCHELL
Special to the DTH

"I consider it a privilege to be blind."

"People who have eyes let them distract them from things worthwhile." The soft-spoken 47-year-old graduate student paused. "My own perception of humanity wouldn't be so great if I weren't blind."

Squires scoffs at people who express sympathy for him. "I tell 'em, 'sure, I run into things once in a while, but it doesn't hurt long!' "

The political science major was born blind. He never uses a cane or guide dog, but walks all over the sprawling UNC campus. If he needs any assistance, he asks for it.

Strangely enough, his greatest problem is not crossing Franklin Street during rush hour. "It's getting my reading done for me." He has to hire readers, which can be a sticky situation around quiz time.

Squires is working on his master's degree, which will probably take another year and a half to complete. He takes a recorder to class and gets the gist of the lectures. As soon as he has them "down pat" he erases the tapes for re-use. "Professors have been most cooperative," he said.

He was in law school at UNC some years ago, but dropped out to go into show business. He spent a number of years in radio work, including eleven years with WAYS in Charlotte when he had his own program.

Squires returned to the University in 1964 to finish work on his undergraduate degree and decided to go on for his Masters. After getting his degree, he wants to teach or go into administrative work.

Aside from academic pursuits, Squires holds down the job of UNC traffic counselor. If you have a complaint about the traffic situation, he is the man to see. He works in Dean Long's office, and counsels with the Dean about judgments in more serious cases when requested.

Squires said there are many things to be done about the current traffic problems. "We're in growing pains right now," he said.

"However, I believe the administration honestly and sincerely is as seriously concerned with the problem of traffic at UNC as any other phase of University life. They give it their every attention in relation to other problems that daily confront them."

Squires talked for an hour and a half about many phases of life at UNC. For one of the "old grads" who just happens to be totally blind, he is in-the-know about nearly everything on campus, from student government to the status of the UNC coed.

Someday, you may have the chance to help him cross the street or navigate some steps. If you do, take it. Chances are he won't need your aid but you'll make a valuable friend anyway.

Richmond Spiders Meet Heels Tonight In Carmichael Duel

GENE RECTOR
DTH Spts. Ed.

The Tar Heels, fresh from Monday night's 82-72 upset of Ohio State, will be seeking their third victory in four games and their second win in Carmichael.

The Spiders offer a rout and a come - back in their two opening victories. The rout came against George Washington as the Spiders had little trouble winning 103-84.

The victory over VMI was a different story. The Spiders had to come from 20 points behind to nip the Cadets 77-73.

Hero of the VMI come - back was junior captain Johnny Moates, a 6-1 guard. His 21-point second half effort led the charge and his 21.5 overall average is best of the Spiders.

Working with Moates at guard will be Spike Welsh, a 5 - 11 senior from Spring Grove, Pa. Welsh, who hit three quick basket in the comeback against VMI, carries a 12.5 average into the game.

Juniors Harvey Roberts, 6-4, and Tom Green, 6-6, are the forwards. Roberts is averaging 18.5 points per game and has hit on 65.2 per cent of his shots.

Green, a south - paw, has averaged 18 points and 15 rebounds in the first two games.

Buster Batts, a 6-8 junior, will be at center. He averages nine points per game.

Of course, leading the Tar Heel charge will be the "L and M" boys — junior Bob Lewis and sophomore Larry Miller.

Joining Miller and Lewis in the starting line - up will be guards Tom Gauntlett and John Yokley. At center will be 6-8 Bob Bennett.

A stingy, hustling defense has been the key to the Tar Heels 2-1 record. After losing their opener to Clemson 84-74, Carolina has dumped William & Mary 82-68 and Ohio State 82-72.

The Tar Heels were victimized by the "press" in their loss to Clemson. Since that time, Coach Dean Smith has taken corrective measures.

Down by 13 at the half — 35-22—the Buckeyes applied in the pressure in the second half with a full - court press.

Playing a cool, methodical offense that shunned the good shot for the better one, the Tar Heels took the heat out of the Buckeye press.

Mirken, Bennett's replacement at center, came on in the Ohio State game after Bennett was injured and added several key plays to the Tar Heel attack.

Moe and Hassell have substituted at guards enabling the Tar Heels to play their "stick like glue" defense the entire game.

Silent Sam, with the help of a friend, reminds us of Pearl Harbor Day—one day late.

DOUBLE TROUBLE

Motorcyclists To Get Help

The motorcycle craze in Chapel Hill is going stronger than ever, but the problem it solves for student commuters is creating even bigger ones for University administrators townspeople.

An average of "one accident a day" has occurred since the motor scooter craze was initiated to solve the parking problem on campus. Concern of Dean of Men William Long and Chapel Hill citizens has resulted in an extensive accident control study.

The School of Public Health's Accident Control Division, the Dean of Men's office and the Infirmary began studying two-wheeled motor vehicle accidents the beginning of November to decide what preventative measures to take. They have so far investigated more than 25 accidents.

Bob Kepner, assistant to the Dean of Men, noted the number of two-wheeled motor vehicles registered this year has already increased from 299 to 450. "This is more than double the 242 registered at the end of last year. When the trend began at the first of the 1964 fall term, only 71 were registered."

Kepner said freshmen are allowed to register two - wheeled motor vehicles though they may not register cars.

Miss Janice Westaby, director of the Public Health Accident Control Division said, "Nineteen of the 25 accidents involved freshmen and most were operating the 'Honda - type' two-wheeled vehicles.

"The majority of accidents occurred during the day," she said. "Of the total injured six were admitted to the North Carolina Memorial Hospital for treatment."

Dr. Tyndall P. Harris in the infirmary said most of the accidents are minor ones involving bruises and abrasions, though some have resulted in more serious injuries such as compound fractures."

Miss Westaby noted that if more students would protect themselves with boots jackets, goggles and helmets, many injuries could be avoided.

She said most of the accidents don't involve speeding vehicles, but a "good share do involve loss of control and other motor vehicles."

"The important thing about the study," she said, "is that we are really anticipating the problem before it gets too big. If we can look at it now, maybe we can cut down on the number of accidents."

UP Candidates, Chairman Named

BY JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Nearly 100 members of the University Party acclaimed five candidates as the new UP officers for 1965-66 and elected five members to the UP Executive Board Monday night in Carroll Hall.

Nominating speeches for the candidates were eliminated after the body unanimously accepted a motion made by Phil Kirstein that speeches be dispensed with.

In his final address as party chairman, Hubbard answered critics within the party who have attacked the effectiveness of his administration.

He cited an increase in UP membership and the party's success in the fall elections.

"This party cannot and should not be the voice of five or six people," Hubbard said.

Thomas called on UP members to "bolster your party by yor actions, your appearance and your words."

He called for an end to "the intense rivalry between the University Party and the Student Party.

"The parties exist for Student Government and not Student Government for the parties" he said.

Thomas said he would join the SP in forming a fair campaign practices committee and announced he would drop all complaints against the Sp for activities in the fall elections.

He praised the efficiency of Freshman Class President Ben White, who was an SP nominee.

"I do not advocate crossing over to the opposite camp by any means, for his is inane," Thomas said. "The compromises I speak of are mechanical, not ideological."

The only actual elective contest which occured during the meeting was for the five seats on the UP Executive Board.

Clark Crampton, Bob Hunter, David Broadhurst, Don Carson and Phil Kirstein were elected to the board after it was determined that they had achieved the greatest number of votes in a field of seven.

RESOLUTION

The party unanimously accepted a resolution introduced by Carson calling for a UP investigation of the preregistration process.

The resolution scored preregistration's "ridiculously long lines, dozens of closed courses and acute schedule conflict frustration."

The committee will report the results of the investigation to Thomas, high Student Government officials and the Dean of Student Affairs.

Thomas appointed Carol Gallant UP Press Secretary and Jane Midgett File Clerk.

Campus News

Committee Named

A seven-man interim committee has been appointed to plan and discuss directions of residence hall life in conjunction with last week's Residence Hall Officers' conference.

The committee of volunteers will also formulate plans for future conferences.

Committee members are Richard Wright of Morrison College, James Womack of Everett Hall, Ott Farris of Craige College, Chuck Richards and Tom Jones fo Teague Hall and Kay Cansler and Susan Gretz of Whitehead Hall.

Don Wilson, who served as coordinator for last week's conference, will sit with the committee during its meetings.

Dance Friday

The MRC and the CWC will sponsor a dance Friday night from 9 to midnight in the Carolina Inn ballroom. Music will be provided by the Sinfonians. There is no admission, repeat, no admission.

UNC Debates

Two UNC debaters will go to Wake Forest for the 10th Annual Dixie Classic Tournament this weekend, and two others to Princeton for a major freshmen tournament.

The teams will debate "Resolved: That law Enforcement Agents in the United States Should Be Given Greater Freedom in the investigation and Prosecution of Crime."

Last weekend, Bob Powell and Eric Van Loon travelled to the University of illinois at Chicago for the Third Annual Lincoln-Douglas Debates.

Their 5-1 record in the first rounds gave them a fourth-place ranking among 38 teams.

But Van Loon and Powell still managed to reach the finals Saturday.

Dave Keil and Sue Whitt earlier shared first place honors at the University of Pennsylvania tournament with George Washington University, making it the second week in a row that the Carolina team had compiled a first-place record.

Everything Was Going OK Until This Man Butted In

BY JUDY RIKE
Special to the DTH

The auditorium was filled with senior girls eager to hear some illuminating words from the wise. Several women with varied qualifications were ready to talk about the woman's role after graduation, whether it be a career girl, a graduate student, or a bride. I sat there as eager as the rest and a little curious. A lot is said about the feminine mystique but not enough is said to women.

A young career girl, recently turned wife, talked about the awkward transition from the office life of nine to five filled with definite tasks to the frightening freedom of being left in the house after husband goes to work. With a lilting laugh she warned against getting in a rut of cooking and cleaning: "Your husband will soon stop asking you how your day was because he'll know the answer by heart."

The dark - haired psychologist next to her agreed emphatically. With a slow drawl she told about the many men who come to her with the complaint, "My wife is a bore. She was nothing to say except that Johnny has a cold, the milkman forgot to come today, and I have a terrific headache."

A masculine voice broke my tranquil peace of mind. The reaction "who let him in here?" ran through the feminine minds and escaped in whispers. I turned to see the voice's owner. He was a man with an enlarged male ego. His question was filled with a barbed challenge: "Just what is the woman's goal?" Now isn't that just like a man? He lumps all women together, calls them "the woman," and sarcastically demands to know a common goal as if all have the same personality, needs, and desires. When asked for his goal he replied with a tone of colossal self esteem: "I want to be as intelligent and as rich as I want." Utter ego.

In his arrogance he seemed ready to start a full - fledged battle of the sexes, uses his one superb, perceptive mind against our many limited ones. I personally wouldn't give him the satisfaction. Our sweet revenge will come when he marries someone who missed the lecture. I hope she's a real shrew.

VISTA Recruits Shouldn't Complain About The Cold

If you sign up for VISTA (the "domestic peace corps") this week at Y-Court and get accepted, don't compalin too much about the cold weather we've been having.

You might get sent to Alaska, where John Shively, a 1965 UNC graduate, is now serving VISTA by teaching Eskimos how to construct a breakwater to prevent flooding during spring thaws.

And cold weather isn't his only worry. Shively lives in primitive housing without running water or adequate sanitation facilities.

He fishes and hunts along with his neighbor,s eating seal, fish, reindeer, caribou and game birds.

Shively was introduced to Eskimo life and customs during six weeks of intensive training at the University of Alaska.

There, he prepared for long periods of isolation and countless days without sun.

The political science major says he joined VISTA because he has "always been interested in social problems, especially those we face in America."

Trull, a political science major, is seeking to improve the lives of Spanish-speaking migrants in New Mexico.

Cheek, who majored in history, is developing health and educational programs in rural Newton County, Ark.

Samuel Hunt, also a political science major, is attempting to make legal services available to the poor of Kings County, Calif.

They also render assistance to urban dwellers and the mentally handicapped.

The workers receive living allowances for food, housing, clothing, travel and medical care. They are paid $600 at the end of the year.

Volunteers will be assigned the type work they prefer if this is possible. They play a part in the selection of the locations to which they are sent.

Further information may be obtained by writing to VISTA, Washington, D. C., 20596.

Breaking Point Is At Hand

What a mess.

Never have so many tried so unsuccessfully to register for so few courses.

All week the Office of Records and Registration has looked like Grand Central Station when the trains come in, and a number of students have left the office convinced that they could have registered for more courses in Grand Central.

Ray Strong, director of the office, said yesterday, "It's been coming for years. You just can't absorb 1,000 new students every year without reaching the breaking point some time. We have 12,419—1,100 more than last year."

More than 75 courses were already filled yesterday; the fourth day of registration. Most of these are electives under favorite professors, and in many cases "favorite" means "crip." The all-consuming goal of those who get first crack at the class tickets is to make academic life during the coming semester as easy as possible. That means signing up for some of those Preferred Courses and the rush is on when registration opens.

The registering student lives in dread of the closed course. He sweats out a session with his faculty adviser, getting everything fixed just right, and then waits through a crowd at Hanes Hall only to find that one or more of the courses he wants or needs is close. So it is ack to the advisor and a re-start.

Things like this cause occasional gray hair and ulcers, or at least tantrums, amongst the student population, and hardly make life any easier for the people who work in the records office.

The procedure of pulling class tickets in the presence of the registering student was started this semester mainly as a favor to the student. He knows on the spot what courses he will have next time and will not get a surprise grab-bag schedule composed and mailed to him by office clerks.

What can be done?

Not much at the moment. The registration schedule has been changed to allow the office to pull itself out from under the backlog which started Monday when the line of waiting students reached from the west end of Hanes to beyond the flagpole in Polk Place.

Sophomores who conferred with their advisers after noon Tuesday must now wait until next Monday to get class tickets. Those who see advisers Tuesday cannot register until next Wednesday.

Under the present system the student has no way of knowing which classes are closed until he actually gets to the counter in the records office. Knowing which courses are closed before he plans his schedule with his adviser would help the student avoid going through the whole ordeal more than once.

To help provide some of this missing communication the DTH will print the up-to-date list of closed courses each morning during registration. The list is on page three today.

These measures might provide some surface relief now but they will not decrease the number of students who are paying for an education in subjects they really do not want to study. Perhaps there is nothing tragic in such a situation, but it is hardly ideal to have a school full of disgruntled students.

The only solution we see is for the departments to find the personnel and classroom space for more classes. All they need is probably $10 million and about five years of time.

It sounds rather hopeless now, but unless such major changes are started soon, the problem will be so much larger and complex that it will be insoluble.

Socialized Courtship??

By JOHN W. PETTINGELL

Looking back over that week at the University of North Carolina, often compared to Berkeley in importance, any casual observer can see portents of what is to come. The whole disturbance began with the overwhelming results of that all-campus referendum on socialized courtship, better known as SO-CO.

The referendum was proposed after a responsible sociologist, who refused to divulge her name, stated that it is an established fact that relationship known as courtship is of crucial importance in itself. She further said, "Because our daughters are our Nation's greatest natural resource we shouldn't use them foolishly. Because our children might make a mistake on so crucial an issue as courtship the Nation instead should plan such a relationship for them."

The upshot of her statement was a referendum which proposed that all male students be granted the right to have any girl on campus and since courtship requires money and the common good was to benefit, the referendum also stated that all students be required to pay a common fee into a kitty to be doled out according to need.

For the first time in the history of the school of 8,000 male students and 4,000 female students, a referendum had a complete turnout. Oddly enough, the referendum passed by a margin of 8,000 to 4,000.

The conflict arose when the student leaders ignored the mandate by vetoing the bill before them on the grounds that the services rendered by such a plan did not warrant the expense. Besides, they argued, "Who was to do the matching of couples, what standard would be used to represent the 'average' boy and girl for the matching, and what was supposed to be the expense of a 'normal' date?"

One leader was heard to say that since these norms were other people's subjective value judgments he would not be represented except by a hit-or-miss basis and further stated that when he used a dime for a coke, he expected to get his money's worth.

An opposing voice was heard to say, in jest, that he would never know if he was getting his money's worth because the choice of when to use the dime would not be his, since his money had been taken away upon entering the school, due to the votes of past and unknown students.

This spokesman went on to say, "Those who want something badly enough don't have to save for it themselves, but rather have a right to it regardless of cost and that if they haven't bothered to save for it, others' money should be used instead, since money in general is used for better things than for oneself." Further discussion was tabled until better information could be presented, or until the faculty solved the parking problem.

A few zealots were known to be circulating a petition that would put the power of the vote completely in the hands of the people. They were heard to say that there wasn't anything they couldn't vote on and that the leaders had ignored the student mandate. A noted sociologist pointed out that the referendum was a clear indication of the people's will, since it had shown an increase in turnout over past referendums — of any type.

As if to complicate matters, a relatively obscure leader proposed an alternate plan which would not only cut the fee of the courtship plan, but also all other student fees by close to 99 per cent. His idea was to return the $100-plus of yearly student fees conscripted and supported by past votes so that a complete freedom to use and dispose of their own money as each individual saw fit would be ensured.

He said that he could not and would not guarantee that each male get a female, but that he would protect their right to seek a relationship based on the principle of mutual consent to mutual advantage. He said that he wanted their vote and that he felt qualified to serve the students because he could protect their right to use their money the way they pleased, protect their right to seek the company they pleased, and do this cheaper than any other candidate could.

A rash of protests broke out against his proposal. One pious soul was quoted as saying, "Man is an instinctual beast who can't be trusted with complete freedom and hence needs partial slavery." An eminent sociologist said that the campus was a "closed" society, that it could not adopt such a plan. When asked what the campus was closed to and by whom, he failed to comment.

A noted clergyman pointed out that such a plan would give some men the chance to have more than their fair share of women and that some women would profit more than others. This he said was selfish and did not reach the virtue of self-sacrifice. A worthy psychologist remarked that the human animal could not accept the responsibility required for complete freedom and pointed to America's overabundant wealth and underabundant spirituality as proof of his statement.

A philosopher pointed out that freedom was an illusion since one can't be free to be not free. And a popular political scientist said the word "freedom" has no meaning because "when you define a word, it loses all meaning." He commented on the rash leader as being "old - fashioned" and "weak" because he wasn't going to "do" anything — at least not the way Roosevelt did.

The unknown leader was reported to have apologized for his presumption and was accepting his guilt well. He stated that he was sorry to have only considered protecting individual rights and their complete liberty, rather than ensuring the welfare of others.

A last report from the campus at Chapel Hill indicates that all is not over. The women are now circulating a petition for a referendum which will grant them the right to have two men apiece.

Equal Justice Is Nearer, Federal Help Not Wanted

The term "Alabama Justice" lost some of its malevolent connotations last week. Four white men were sentenced to long prison terms after convictions in cases involving two separate killings, both with racial overtones.

In Anniston, Ala., a white man was convicted of second-degree murder of a Negro. In Montgomery three Ku Klux Klansmen were convicted by a Federal court for violation of an old civil rights statute in the killing of a civil rights worker. All four were sentenced to ten years in prison. Presumably all were shocked by the verdicts.

If they were surprised, they were not alone. One of the three convicted in Montgomery was Collie Leroy Wilkins. His two earlier trials, and subsequent acquittal, for the murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo during last year's march from Selma made "Lowndes County" a household word to many people who had no idea where it was.

The people of Alabama deserve no applause for these verdicts. If the accused men were guilty, then Alabama was merely doing its duty. It is significant that, although murder was involved in both the cases, no capital convictions were returned. Equal justice has not quite arrived in the Deep South.

Yet make no mistake about it, last week's events were a long step toward that goal. Hopefully the days of "unsolved" murders, such as those of Medgar Evers and the three civil rights workers in Philadelphia, Miss., are gone forever. From the days of quick acquittals, or no trials at all, when a white man killed a Negro, the South has progressed to the days of hung juries — and this was a real step forward — and now to convictions on lesser charges. Yes, equal justice is in sight.

But a disquieting — even frightening — note is being sounded, to accompany the South on its journey. The omnipresent hand of the Federal government has its pen poised again. This time the proposed legislation will seek to insure equal justice by Southern juries.

Were its aim to guarantee Negroes an equal chance of acquittal, such legislation might not be objectionable. Yet the feeling persists that the aim will not be to acquit Negroes, but rather to convict whites. It was the acquittals in Alabama, not convictions of Negroes, that triggered the move for the proposed legislation.

The basic principle of our judicial system is that a man is presumed innocent until proven guilty. The belief is that it is better to free a guilty man than to convict an innocent one. This basic principle is in danger of breaking down under the stress of the civil rights struggle. How many people outside Alabama presumed that the three Alabama Klansmen were innocent?

Since the proposed legislation has not been presented yet, specific comments on it will have to wait. In fact, it is difficult to predict just what form the bill will take. It is hard to avoid the feeling, though, that it should not be written at all.

Legislation can do only so much to correct the evils of the world. There seems to be a disturbing feeling among Federal and civil rights leaders that they "have the South on the run" and therefore should pass every kind of bill that may possibly end some form of discrimination. There is enough legislation now to guarantee full civil rights to all people.

The voice raised here is not the same old cry of "Give us time," that was used to stall school desegregation. It is rather an assertion that as the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 are implemented, the Negro will come into the rights which are his.

Marines For France?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The election returns from France show that in the presidential balloting this past Monday, one third of the voters cast over five million votes for Francois Mitterand. Mitterand was the candidate of the Communist, the Socialist and the Radical Socialist Parties. Should we send in the Marines?

Otelia Answers Clark

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The people who have spoken about Ford Clark's letter in the Dec. 2 Daily Tar Heel have said, "Pay no attention to it. If you write, you expect some people to disagree with you and even attack you."

However, upon mulling it over, Ford may not have been 100% right, but he has a case. In my desire to improve the manners of the UNC students, I have no doubt taken things too much for granted, believing, because so many students, parents, and others, tell me they appreciate what I am doing, that all the students felt the same.

Most parents with the financial means, realizing how important good manners are if one hopes to get anywhere in the world, and aware that their children do not have proper manners, send them to prep schools, where they are taught good manners. Students at the University have been getting free what it would cost their parents thousands of dollars to get at a Prep school.

I agree with Ford that it is better to correct people in private, but if I didn't get at them in public, I never would get them at all, for that is the only place I see them.

One solution to the problem for those who don't like what I write, is to pass it over, and not read it. There is no law forcing anyone to read something that infuriates him. There is much in the newspapers that I don't read, because it isn't worth my time.

However, I appreciate Ford's calling attention to a statement some one else has made before — "It isn't so much what you do, as the way you do it." Those who are with me, let it be known by saying, Aye! Those opposed, No! Will the Ayes have it?

Frosh Hit Baby Devils

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

A lot of people have done a lot of wondering about which school has the top freshman basketball team in the Big Four this year.

There may be no real way of deciding the issue, but a lot of weight will be cast on one side of the scale or the other when the Tar Babies clash with Duke's Blue Imps in Carmichael Auditorium tonight at 6 p.m. The victory prize will be the early possession of the Big Four lead.

Duke opened its season with an 84-80 loss to Virginia Tech frosh club which fields two of the top first-year men in the East. The Blue Imps followed with a smashing 102-78 cruise past Wake Forest—considered as the Big Four's weakest team.

Carolina has completely dominated its first two rivals, utilizing near-precision in every phase of play to bop Clemson 86-50, and Brevard, 92-70. Their play has been characterized by a six-pronged scoring attack, backboard domination, quickness, and tight defense—and most of all, completely unselfish teamwork.

The biggest drawback so far has been the team's tendency to foul—they've averaged 21 per game.

"We have a well-rounded club...good scoring both from the inside and outside. We have a lot of strength off the boards, a strong defense, and the boys are working together real well."

Personnel - wise, the Dukes do not have an individual to match the stature of UNC's 6-11, 235-pound center Rusty Clark. But they have several guys who come close.

The top Imp is 6-7, 220-pound center Steve Vandenberg, who bears a "can't miss" tag by those who have watched him play. Some from this area who have seen him play say he has to be the best freshman in the Big Four.

Vandenberg was one of the most sought-after prepsters of last year, and the top player in Maryland. Carolina put in a bid for him, but could not lure him away from Duke.

Another big man in the lineup is Fred Lind(6-7,215), who is just behind Vandenberg in rebounds. The other forward is Claudius Claiborne (6-2, 170) whom Larry Brown terms as "an excellent driver and real tough on defense." Claiborne is the first Negro athlete to perform at Duke.

These are the three frontliners, and in the backcourt, Carmody starts a pair of Illinois All-Staters, one of them being an All-American.

The A-A is David Golden (6-0, 180), who is touted as one of the best shots ever at Duke. His running mate is Gene Bromstead (6-0, 190), who will draw each opponent's top scorer as his defensive assignment.

The two guards have averaged 15 points for the first two games, with Claiborne at 8.5 and Lind at 3.0. Vandenberg leads the team with a 23 points per game average.

Very likely to start, and certain to play a great deal, is 6-5, 2-5 Larry Dempsey of Greensboro. He has scored at a 12.5 clip.

For Carolina, guard Dick Grubar (20.5), forward Bill Bunting (19.3) and center Rusty Clark (19.0) have carried the main load so far.

Clark, who poured in 28 points in the win over Brevard, had his scoring held down in the opener by foul trouble. He is grabbing nine rebounds per game — 16 of which he got last Saturday when he went the route.

Coach Larry Brown said yesterday afternoon:

"This is about the biggest game we'll play all year, and it would mean just everything to the boys to have Carmichael full at game time. I'd love to see us really pack 'em in for this bunch of boys."

Facts

The all-time ACC record for the highest single-season average was set by Virginia's only All-America, Buzz Wilkinson, in 1955 — 32.1.

* * *

UNC leads the ACC in all-time All-America selections with 12 different players representing 19 A-A berths. N.C. State is next with 7 players and 12 berths.

Joyner, Mangum Greet Tar Heels

The victorious UNC Tar Heels had a small but sincere welcoming committe very early Tuesday morning.

With Mangum in their traditional green and orange jersies and both halls sporting "spur of the moment" signs, the Tar Heels had all the noise they could handle.

"D— Good Team, D— Good Team," was the first cheer greeting the Tar Heels as they filed from the bus. Next came "All the way big blue, all the way" — and others.

"We had planned to meet them at the airport," said one Mangum resident. "The radio announcer said the airplane would arrive at 11:30.

"Well, when we got there they had already gone. They arrived 30 minutes early and we missed them."

Of course missing the Tar Heels at the airport did not stop these hearty fans. They piled in their cars and headed back to Chapel Hill.

The bus came to a halt and the noise really began. Each player had his own personal back - slap or complimentary word from the group.

Tickets Remain

A number of tickets remain for tonight's UNC—Richmond basketball game.

Ticket offices on the east side of Carmichael Auditorium will open at 8:30 a.m. and remain open until after the game.

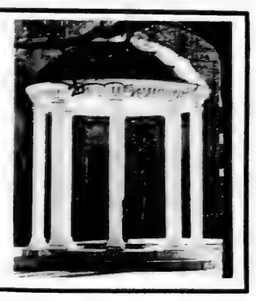
Carolina Style



'You Just Can't Kick The Habit'

Carolina gentlemen have some interesting observations concerning their friends of the opposite sex.

What is your opinion of the Carolina coed?

Jim Pugh, Hickory, accounting — "I'd like to know one well enough to give an opinion."

George Wiebel, North Wilkesboro, history — "They're looking up considerably this year."

Jim Garrison, Statesville, English — "Average in looks, behavior and sociability; low in moral values."

Lee Hibbs, Creedmore, sociology — "Stuck up. If they're good-looking they think they have it made with every boy on campus and never speak."

Bill Gatewood, Asheville, business — "More girls should speak, or at least smile, to boys on campus."

Gary Turner, High Point, math — "Girls should not complain if they don't date. It might be their own faults because they're so unfriendly."

The best comment of all came from a guy who wouldn't be quoted. "They're like cigarettes," he said, "you just can't kick the habit."

Talbott Gets A New Award

Well, since then they must have changed their minds. Danny received his plaque yesterday and it read: "Danny Talbott, ACC Coach of the Year."

Now, the question is who is the ACC Player of the Year. Maybe the sportswriters decided State's Earl Edwards should get the award. They voted him coach of the year at first.

The Case Of The Topless Sprite

A young lady walked out of her Victory Village bunglo this morning on King St. and hopped into her Austin Healey Sprite. But she noticed something was missing — the top.

"I just don't understand," she said, "who wants the old black vinyl top anyway."

Well, she wants it back. The police have been notified and she said there was a patch over the part where the dirver's head goes.

So if you see a black top walking around with a patch where the driver's head goes you might give this topless woman a call after 5 at 967-3367.

Administrative officials at the University of West Virginia have caused quite a stir by barring the Stars and Bars from campus. Tuesday, the N. C. State student paper, The Technician, said in an editorial, "The song "Dixie" should be stricken from the musical repertory of every performing group." Here at Carolina the old Confederate flag waves proudly over the KA House.

Weightlifting Club To Press, Snatch, Jerk Tonight

WHO SAID getting up in the morning is hard? Have you ever tried to stand up with 350 pounds on your back? UNC weightlifter Danny O'Quin is doing a full squat with a body weight of about 170 pounds.

DTH Staff Writer

UNC Weightlifting Club's First Annual Exhibition and Strength Show wil be held on the main floor of Woollen Gym tonight at 7:30.

The show will feature demonstrations of the three types of lifts, the olympic, the power, and the body building, plus, as an added attraction, a two-man press of a barbell weighing several hundred pounds by club president Joe Snyder and vice president Don Long.

The club was organized early this fall. Its purpose is "to promote strength, skill, and physical training through weight training."

The musclemen don't have team meets but individuals can enter weightlifting contests.

Ed Casey, one member, holds all Tennessee records for the olympic press, snatch, and jerk. He was second in the Junior Nationals in 1960 and second in the Collegiate Nationals that same year.

Tim Farmer who throws the shot on the freshman track team may go to the Teenage Nationals in the spring. He is "one of the upcoming national weightlifters" in the opinion of Joe Snyder who himself has taken part in North and South Carolina state competition.

LSD: Beautiful And Awful At One Time

BY JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

"You see that globe over there on the cabinet?"

The well - dressed young graduate student set his peer on the floor and pointed to a small glass bulb shading a desk lamp.

"If you're under the influence of LSD that thing will change its shape about 25 times within a couple seconds and will be colored with all the colors of the rainbow."

His listener turned to the small lamp and shook his head in disbelief. How could such a plain object be considered beautiful?

"It was beautiful and awful at the same time," he told his companion later. "I walked out into the rain during a thunderstorm. The heavy heavy clouds were scalloped across the sky, and the edges were outlined in purples and wierd colors.

"I looked up into the rain and let the drops splash on my face. Every time a drop hit my eyelids, the water would scatter with a thousand slivers of color.

"I was conscious, but I was completely out of it," he said. "It was beautiful, but I hated it. It was like someone had his hands around my throat and was about to kill me.

"In the back of my mind, I kept hearing myself pray, 'God, please get me out of this.'"

He turned and smiled. "That was some experience, but I'll never do it again."

These students were describing their experiences while under the influence of d - lysergic acid diethylamide and related chemicals.

LSD, its common name may be taken in a variety of ways. Bottles of the chemical and natural vegetable matter containing the drug, such as the catus plant peyote, flow into North Carolina from large East coast cities illegally and may be purchased through various contacts.

From 50 to 100 micrograms of the drug will produce a strong effect, which rarely lasts beyond 12 hours.

"The sensory experiences produced by the drug are the most spectacular effects," UNC psychiatrist Dr. Martin Keeler said during a recent nterview.

"Vision is usually most spectacular," Keeler said. "I suppose this is because man absorbs most of his information by vision.

"Unsupervised users of the drug do it for mystic or psychotic experiences or just for kicks."

The effects of the drug are roughly related to the symptoms of schizophrenia.

Unless under supervision, the LSD user might walk off a roof or into traffic unless someone stopped him.

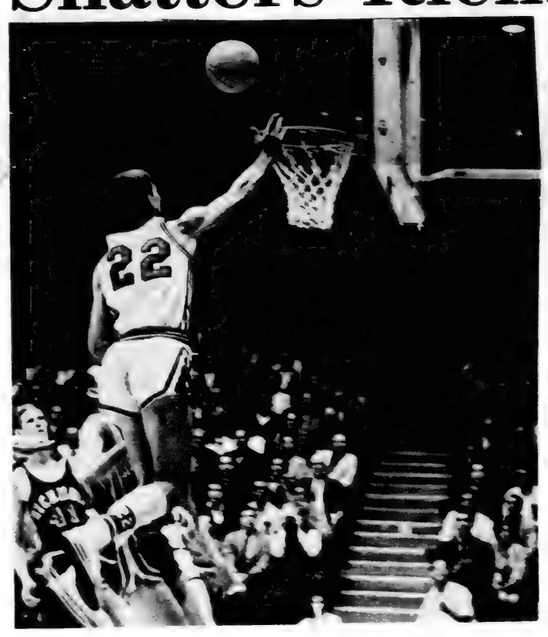
"There is no definite experimental evidence which indicates who is affected more adversely by the drug," Keeler said. "There is, however, a great deal of clinical evidence that indicates the drug can produce a permanent psychotic state in some individuals."

"This drug is exceptionally dangerous," Dean of Men William Long said yesterday. "I would urge uninformed students not to play around with it, period."

Long said he didn't think illegal use of the drug was widespread, but there have been cases of its use brought to his attention.

"I may not be competent to judge," Long said, "but the ignorant introduction of drugs into anyone's life is like playing Russian roulette."

Tar Heel Scoring Machine Shatters Richmond 127-76



Lewis Leads Heels With Record Night

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The incredible Tar Heels, led by fantastic Bob Lewis, unleashed the most awsome scoring machine in their history to completely annhilate the Richmond Spiders 127-76 Wednesday evening in Carmichael Auditorium.

The 127 points scored by the Tar Heels breaks the single-game Tar Heel scoring mark of 115 points set against William & Mary in 1956 and equalled against South Carolina in 1958.

The record - breaker came with 5:37 to go as center Mark Mirken hit a jump shot to make the score 117-66.

But fantastic Bob Lewis was the biggest man in the biggest game in Tar Heel history.

The 6-3 junior hit 17 of 22 shots from the floor and nine of 11 from the free throw line for 43 points — including 11-11 in the first half. The Lewis total missed by five the Tar Heel single - game scoring mark set last season by Billy Cunningham against Tulane.

Again sophomore Larry Miller teamed with Lewis in the offensive production. Miller hit for 32 points on 12 of 17 from the floor and eight of eight from the free throw line.

Next in line for the Tar Heels was guard John Yokley with 14 points. Tom Gauntlett and Bob Bennett had eleven.

Overall, the Tar Heels hit 52 of 83 shots from the floor for a 62.7 per centage. Twenty-three of 29 from the free throw line rounded out the scoring.

But the name of the game was offense and the Tar Heels wasted little time in starting.

A feed by guard John Yokley and a lay-up by Bobby Lewis gave the Tar Heels a 2-0 lead and the Carmichael baskets were in for their most productive night in history.

With 10 minutes gone in the first half, the Tar Heels led 41-18 and Lewis had 18 points.

With 3:50 to go in the first half, Lewis had 26 points including 11 of 11 from the floor.

The half-time score stood 69-45 in favor of the Tar Heels. They had hit 28 of 38 from the floor for a fantastic 73.7 percentage.

Richmond had taken one more shot than the Tar Heels — 39 attempts — and hit on 53.9 per cent of their shots.

The Tar Heels wasted little time in the second half. Three quick baskets made the score 75-45.

With 17:55 to go in the game, Lewis missed his first shot of the night giving him 11 of 12 from the floor.

Tar Heel fans — all 6,500 of them — had a field day. They gave Lewis a standing ovation lasting 40 seconds when the Washington, D. C., native left the game with 4:42 to go.

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith, who left the court on the shoulders of his players, was

Di-Phi Head Hits Apathy Of Students

Di-Phi president John Harrison blasted the indifference of the student body to the war in Vietnam in closing a debate last night over whether the North Vietnamese should get out of South Vietnam.

He pointed out that at a similar meeting last year over 150 students attended. At last night's meeting there were only 16 people, most of them members of the society.

"People are dying while we in the southern part of heaven are going to our fraternity parties and ball games.

"In a democracy you have to debate; if the people don't debate it is not a democracy," Harrison concluded.

Earlier in the evening Jerry Munroe suggested that it would be best if the North Vietnamese remained in the South.

He considered the war a power struggle between the U. S. and the Communists. America is fighting a war in Asia, and as such, "we should not say North Vietnam should pull out of the south". Instead he thought we should ask them to remain until they have been beaten decisively.

"To end the war yesterday, not now" is America's task thought Chris Parsons. He saw a flaw in American policy in the U.S.'s late arrival in Vietnam.

Americans have always been late getting involved in matters he said. He pointed to both the World Wars as examples. Had the U. S. entered these conflicts earlier they might have ended sooner, he believed.

Both these attributed the war to power struggles. Charles Gowen differed with them.

"The Chinese feel war can be an instrument of their foreign policy", Gowen said. This is contrary to American ideas of policy. He thought it is the U. S.'s job to show the Chinese that peaceful negotiations are less costly and morally more acceptable.

USC Is Fined For Violations

GREENSBORO, N.C.(AP)—The University of South Carolina has been fined $2,500 for having more than 140 athletes on scholarship, and its athletic department has been repremanded by Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver.

USC is the second ACC school penalized within the past week. Clemson University was assessed a similar fine with an added curtailment of future recruiting for the same violation.

Weaver said it could not be determined immediately how many more than the 140 limit South Carolina had on scholarship.

South Carolina, in addition to the fine, will be penalized five scholarships for the 1966-67 academic year.

Weaver ruled that the university must limit its scholarnancial assistance to "not ships, grants-in-aid or other fimore than 35 students for football and basketball" for that year.

Conference regulations, effective July 1, 1966, limit scholarships to new students to 35 in football and 5 in basketball.

The university also was instructed to issue no additional scholarships to any student "presently enrolled or incoming" for the remainder of the current academic year. This includes any for the spring semester.

Weaver, in his reprimand, stated, "Although James A. Morris faculty athletic chairman at USC was most cooperative and made every effort to clarify the situation, in view of the fact that the incomplete and contradictory information he furnished was given to him one must conclude that the person or persons compiling the list of recipients fo athletic awards were either careless, uninformed or attempting to withhold information. For this modus operandi the athletic department at the University at South Carolina is reprimanded."

Junior Class

Junior class interviews for positions on social, finance and publicity committees will be held from 3-4 p.m. today in Roland Parker I.

Committee interviews tomorrow will be held from 3-5 p.m., when memberships and chairmanships will be assigned. See President Mel Wright for more information.

Friederich Honored

Dr. Werner Friederich, Kenan professor, was recently named chairman of a special Modern Language Association Committee. Honorary members of the Association are chosen from internationally-distinguished foreign scholars suggested to the committee.

Friederich is a comparative literature and a German professor here. Some 50 men are now honorary members and represent countries from Australia to Iceland and from Russia to Chile.

Interviews

"Careers for Carolina" still has more than 50 openings in the one - day program scheduled for Friday.

Coordinator Jim Brame said the program is designed to aquaint students with career opportunities in local, state and federal government. It will be held in the Institute of Government's Knapp Building.

Brame said interested students should sign up as early as possible today for the program. Dean of Student Affairs C.O. Cathey said that although students could not be given a "blanket excuse" from classes they are urged to sign up this morning.

Don't Be Ridiculous

Time was when a protest was just a protest. These days it appears to be an invitation to become a fulltime nephew of Uncle Sam.

Four University of Michigan students took part in a sit-in at the office of the Ann Arbor draft board Oct. 15. All have been reclassified 1-A, "available for service," apparently because of that demonstration.

For one of the four, 22-year-old Eric Chester, it was his second "offense." He protested against the House Un-American Activities Committee in Chicago six months ago. When his Royal Oak, Mich., draft board heard of his conviction for trespassing after the incident, he was reclassified 1-Y. That means he was considered "mentally, morally or physically deficient."

Apparently he pushed his luck too far by taking part in the October demonstration, because now he is 1-A. At best, such action can only be described as paradoxical.

University of Michigan officials have told The Daily Tar Heel four students who have been reclassified are in good academic standing — one an honor student, two "safe and comfortable" and one an honor student, two "safe and comfortable" and one on temporary academic affairs, and Richard Cutler, vice president for student affairs at Michigan, have issued a statement condemning the possible drafting of students for any reason other than academic shortcomings.

"Satisfactory educational progress by the student is in our judgment the controlling, if not the sole factor, upon which deferment should be based," they said.

"This we understand to be the existing national policy. To introduce other factors into decisions makes possible either individual favoritism or individual punitive action, either of which is clearly unwise and potentially discriminatory."

Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, National Selective Service Director, has reportedly said, however, "The government would be committing suicide if it deferred students who defied selective service laws."

Apparently the law the protestors are violating in the eyes of the Selective Service is the Universal Military Training and Service Act. It provides that anyone who interrferes "in any way" with the administration of the draft may be imprisoned or fined. Col. Arthur Holmes, Michigan Selective Service Director, has said punishment may also include drafting as delinquents. Hershey has supported such action.

There is today an obvious trend toward the elimination of dissent in America, and as it grows it becomes all the more disturbing. Everyone agrees that this is the land of freedom of action and attitude. To do otherwise would be an admission that we live in a dictatorship.

Our government is committed to a war in Viet Nam. We support the goals of that committment, but we do not accept every decree from the District of Columbia as holy writ. May those who ridicule all protests remember that if our predecessors had not questioned the status quo we would still be British subjects.

We have no sympathy for the "leave Asia for the Communists" ideology, but we refuse to reject the right of those who do have such sympathy to say so — without fear of "disciplining" from an all-knowng government or know-it-all individuals.

Slap the "peaceniks" into the Army and ship them off to the war?

Don't be ridiculous.

What soldier would want one behind him with a gun?

Let those who expend great amounts of energy attacking card burners and the like remember that nothing is so frustrating and damaging to the protester's aim as to quietly consider his argument and then ignore it if it is found to be invalid.

Draft him? Send him to jail? Fine him?

Don't be ridiculous.

Best System: Laissez–Faire

By WILSON CLARK, JR.

Having introduced this series on Dr. Ludwig von Mises with a quote from Lord John Maynard Keynes, I shall again indulge in the phraseology of the Left, with remarks from Norman Thomas' book A Socialist's Faith. But first, a brief review of Professor Mises' argument.

Dr. von Mises represents the Austrian school of economic thought, often characterized as laissez-faire economics, and rightly so. For Professor Mises is a liberal, in the truest and most noble sense of the term. The original meaning of this word is inextricably bound with laissez-faire capitalism, as the economic corollary of the free political state. Leftists of our age have twisted and mutilated the conception and substance of this epithet once applied to the advocates of liberty.

Although exasperating, the writings of Norman Thomas have one great virtue, clarity. One need not resort to the consensus to ascertain the position of Mr. Thomas, for he is quite frank. By the same token, von Mises represents the diametrically opposed conviction (in most cases). The following issue proposed by Norman Thomas should exemplify this:

"The uncompromising laissez-faire liberalism, the economic system so dear to a Hayek or a von Mises, never really existed, and its reign was limited. Its tenets were worked out of the great misery of the Industrial Revolution; its golden age was short."

Thomas is right in asserting that unhampered capitalism never really existed for any extended period of time, but in reply, what did limit its reign?. The state, with its absolute monoply on legalized coercion.

He wanders astray, however, with his historical supposition of the origin of economic liberalism, or laissez-faire capitalism. Dr. von Mises counters here with the obscured side of the picture of the Industrial Revolution, usually painted in emotional overtones. As Mises points out in Human Action:

"The laissez-faire ideology and its offshoot, the 'Industrial Revolution,' blasted the ideological and institutional barriers to progress and welfare. They demolished the social order in which a constantly increasing number of people were doomed to abject need and destitution...The outstanding fact about the Indistrial Revolution is that it opened an age of mass production for the needs of the masses."

With numerous historical examples, von Mises obliterates the commonly propagated collectivist myths about the Industrial Revolution. Thomas' allusion to the "great misery of the Industrial Revolution" is a rather shallow value judgment, often used as the mainstay of leftist diatribes.

Flip the coin, however, thus exposing England without the benefits of this capitalist enlightenment, and the collectivists flee for cover, without benefit of their hyper-emotional pleas. To quote one example from Mises' survey, consider the following:

"But let us not forget that in 1770 (according to the estimate of Arthur Young) England had 8.5 million inhabitants, while in 1831 (according to the census) the figure was 16 million. This conspicuous increase was mainly conditioned by the Industrial Revolution."

The meticulous and rigorous scholarship which generally distinguishes Dr. von Mises' work is clearly demonstrated in his analysis of the Industrial Revolution. The glib cliches of the collectivists can hardly stand rational examination, especially that of an inquisitor of Professor von Mises' stature.

Norman Thomas continues in his description of economic liberalism with a listing of the prerequisites of the system, such as the laws of the market, its independent nature, the gold standard, free trade, and "the self regulating market between liberal (not totalitarian) states...Compared with the practices of totalitarian states, it had its virtues. But in its conception of the economic man and the supremacy of a pure and undiluted profit motive it was inhuman and contrary to age-long human experience under various civilizations." (emphasis mine)

It is noteworthy that Thomas chooses only the ethics of capitalism to dispute, and not its theoretical justification. Could it be that his logic is more fallible than his passion? Going beyond the basic utilitarian argument for capitalism, the modern intellectual, unfettered by primitive shibboleths, can and does challenge the simplistic reasoning girding such statements as Thomas's on the alleged inhumanity of the profit motive.

Although the profit motive is usually connected with capitalism, it is moreover, a distinguishing characteristic of man and his remarkable history on earth. To further his very existence, man must provide for his needs. The problem then shifts to the economic system that can provide for these needs best, and that system is unrestricted laissez-faire capitalism.

As Professor von Mises wisely reflects, "All those rejecting capitalism on moral grounds as an unfair system are deluded by their failure to comprehend what capital is....Capital is not a free gift of God or of nature. It is the outcome of a provident restriction of consumption on the part of man." (The Anti-Capitalistic Mentality, Princeton, 1956)

Irony: Peace And Pearl

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel

While walking from the Post Office toward Graham Memorial, I couldn't help but notice the irony in front of me. To my left on the GM door, encircled by a wreath, was a sign saying "We wish you a Merry Christmas." To my right was Silent Sam, with a gun in hand and the words "Remember Pearl Harbor" hanging from the barrel, apparently alluding to Viet Nam.

At first glance, the two seem grossly inconsistant with each other. And yet, although we would like to be able to just say "...and on earth, peace, good will towards men." From the outside, man surely must appear as a totally incomprehensible creature.

They're No Gentlemen

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel that the time has come to explode the myth of the "Carolina Gentleman". After attending my first UNC basketball game last Saturday night, I am convinced that the title "Carolina Gentleman" is a complete misnomer and has no basis of truth whatsoever.

There have been many instances throughout the year that have led me to this conclusion, but Saturday night convinced me. In all the years that I have been attending college basketball games, I have never seen a worse display of manners and alcoholism. There were enough flasks at the game to start a new ABC store here in Chapel Hill.

The "Carolina Gentlemen" didn't even bother to hide the flasks. I'm certainly not against booze, but I find it rather ridiculous that "Carolina Gentlemen" have to get their school spirit from a bottle.

Certain specific instances stand out in my mind that make the title "Carolina Gentleman" even more ridiculous. For example, an old man came into the stands and was having trouble finding his seat. He asked a group of "Carolina Gentlemen" for help and these "Carolina Gentlemen" laughed at him and told him to bother someone else.

Another group of "Carolina Gentlemen" made themselves thoroughly obnoxious both before and during the game by hurling very individualistic and profane cheers at the referees, the opposing players, and everyone that asked them to shut up. Still another "Carolina Gentleman" tried to amuse and entertain the crowd by upchucking his "School Spirit" all over himself and the guy in front of him. His friends thought it was funny as hell. A lot of other people, particularly the guy in front of him, didn't.

After the game, still another group of "Carolina Gentlemen" were in such a hurry to get back to the dorm to watch dirty movies or whatever else they do in their dorms that they were practically knocking over anybody who got in their way.

These are but a few of the many examples of the behavior of the "Carolina Gentleman" that I have observed throughout the year. I hope that they are enough to put an end to the myth.

A Nanny's-Eye View Of JFK Administration

Author's note: One of the aftermaths of the Kennedy assassination has been a series of excessively intimate biographies about the late president and his family. The column is a satire on these books, not on JFK.

I haven't seen Miss Shaw's book, but I can well imagine what it's like if it matches anything put out by Sorensen, Schlesinger, or Mrs. Lincoln (JFK's secretary). Here's a brief summary:

"When I first met John-John, I knew right away he would be going places. True—I had seen plenty of children come and go at the congressional kindergarten, but John-John seemed apart from the usual crowd.

"Maybe it was that special grace—the way he played with his toy helicopters. Never did he appear awkward, even while pulling Caroline's hair.

"And always, he was concerned about his image. He refused to be photographed when he played cowboys and Indians, and he wouldn't grant interviews with the press unless the newsmen praised the way he handled himself in the sandbox.

"Maybe it was that mysterious aura, that magnetic personality. Everybody, it seemed, insisted on seesawing with him.

"All the girls dreamed of becoming part of John-John's life, but in the end I was chosen to be his nanny.

"Being the nanny of a famous person isn't the easiest job in the world, and there were times when I found the work excessively demanding, particularly after the Vaughn Meader record. It was then that John-John's prestige hit a new low. All over the country, people wondered if somebody so young and inexperienced could really play touch football.

"Not that John-John wasn't eager to learn. During his days in the White House nursery, he became expert in chess and Chinese checkers, though Victor Lasky wrote a book saying that the elder Kennedy had taught John-John to cheat at monopoly.

"He was a hard worker, and he expected just as much of his staff as he did of himself. I remember spending many long hours with John-John helping him clean his room. And the lights burned late at night while I picked up his toys during the Cuban missile crisis.

"But the work had its rewards. John-John even gave me an autographed portrait of himself he had crayoned at school, and he applauded the skill with which I handled the record player while he played "musical chairs."

"Nevertheless, at times his temper flared. Once he threatened to fire me after I accidentally stepped on his toy aircraft carrier.

"Still, the work meant a chance for travel and excitement. Every day I escorted him as he rode his tricycle around the White House driveway, and occasionally, he let me pull his wagon.

"John-John's reading was omnivorous, though he considered 'The Bobsey Twins' biased and disliked 'Dick and Jane' on the grounds that it had little news and less to report. Yet he read these and other publications regularly—even 'The Hardy Boys,' which was a source of special despair; for unlike 'The Bobsey Twins,' it was well-written.

"I sincerely hope my book will not cause unnecessary controversy within the present administration. But I think it proper to reveal that President Kennedy did not intend to keep Mrs. Lincoln in office after the next election."

Look At Past

Carolina played a total of 1,3 games of basketball from 1939 through last season. Overall record for the Tar Heels during that span was 462 victories against 221 defeats.

This was known as the Woollen Gym era and in that building Carolina teams won 85 per cent of their games.

naturally jubilant over the victory.

"The most important thing was the unselfishness displayed by the whole team," he said. "This is what makes the team."

"We're improving each game and if we can keep it up, who knows —."

Coach Smith had high praise for senior center Bob Bennett.

"Richmond was not as big as some of the teams we will play, but Bennett really showed what he could do in the rebounding department."

Bennett hauled down 13 rebounds to place second to Larry Miller's 14.

The Tar Heel defense was also a factor.

"At half-time," said Smith, "we talked about how lousy our defense had been. Then we came out on the court in the second half and played the best defense of the year for the first eight minutes."

Babies Rout Devils 89-69

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Defense did it again.

Just when it seemed that the Tar Babies were in for a sound thrashing, lightning hands began to steal the ball, and Carolina's frosh made one tremendous comeback to register their third straight win of the campaign.

Rusty Clark, with 27 points and 12 rebounds in an overall outstanding performance, was the big gun of the rally, which didn't let up until the Babies lead reached 22 points near the game's end.

There was 9:54 left in the first half when the Babies began to rally from a 21-11 deficit.

Guard Dick Grubar cut between his man and the ball and deflected it away. He recovered, drove in for the layup, and seconds later was on the passing end of a Jim Bostick layup. At 9:08, Bostick hit again from the right base line to cut it to 21-17.

A minute later, Rusty Clark scored from beneath, then hit a free throw to complete a three-point play.

But the Imps were hitting too, and pulled on top 26-20.

At this point, the Babies blitzed the now - befuddled Duke defense for eight points in 3:21, and they never relinquished the lead.

Clark started it with a free throw, then Gerald Tuttle hit two foul shots and a field goal, to cut the Imp lead to 26-25. Here, Joe Brown gave a fake at the foul line and lost his man — then was fouled by another as he canned a layup. His three - pointer gave UNC a 28-26 lead at the 3:06 mark, and lit the fuse.

The rally had been a great one, but the Babies had a "second wind" now, and poured in 12 points in the remaining 2:23 to establish a 40-34 lead at halftime.

Grubar broke a 30-all tie at 1:51, and when Clark banked in his second basket of an eight - point Tar Baby streak in which Bostick also had two buckets, half - filled Carmichael Auditorium sounded like all this was being done by the two varsity clubs.

A three - point play by Bill Bunting early in the second period moved the lead to its first 10 - point reach at 47-37, and two minutes later, Joe Brown got his second three-pointer to run it to 54-41.

It held at this level until three straight baskets by Duke guard Gene Bromstead sliced it to 58-51 with 9:28 to go. Then big Rusty got hot again, and the Babies blew it wide open.

After an Imp score, Brown hit, and Rusty tossed in a pair of free throws and another fielder to run the score to 70-53, and it was all over but the shouting.

And there was lots of that.

When Paul Camnitz of Kinston batted in a rebound to give the frosh their biggest lead at 81-59, the now near-capacity crowd almost brought the house down.

At the end, a bullet - pass from Camnitz to guard Wayne Dillard for a layup kept intact the frosh record of winning all three of their games by at least 20 points.

"It was a great comeback and just a great game," said calm coach Larry Brown in the excited din of the dressing room. "Any coach who is not pleased by a game like this . . . I don't know, there's just something wrong with him. All the boys kept their poise even after being down by 11 or 12 so early. It was a great effort."

Clark led the Carolina shooters with nine-for 15 from the floor, and Bostick had another hot night with 6-of-nine. It was the third straight game in which the shooting percentage had been over 50 — this time it just barely edged over the mark at 50.8 per cent. Duke shot at a 55.8 per cent clip, but with the Babies forcing 26 turnovers by the Imps, they did not get as many shots as they strived for.

SCORING: Clark 27, Bostick 15, Bunting 13, Brown 10, Grubar 8, Tuttle 8, Camnitz 2, Rindfleisch 2, Dillard 2, Todd 2.

LSD Related Drugs Sold Here

BY JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

"Pearly Gates," the brightly colored label reads.

"Blue Heaven," promises another.

It costs between 15 and 25 cents, the price of any packet of commercial variety garden seed, but a small package of Morning Glory seeds will provide many unusual hours of amusement or horror to the buyer who eats his purchase rather than planting it.

A teaspoon full of the seeds mixed with a little honey to flavor the taste will lead the user through the pearly gates and into a blue heaven of fantastic illusion and psychological reorientation.

The seeds contain chemicals related to d-lysergic acid diethylamide, commonly known as LSD, and they produce roughly the same effects as better known hallucigenic cousin.

Walk into any hardware store in Chapel Hill or Carrboro during the spring, summer or early fall. The seeds will be on sale.

Those who take the drug either eat a cube of sugar with the pure chemical in it, inject the chemical into a vein or consume seeds or peyote cactus plants, which contain a natural form of LSD.

The drug produces sensory illusions of a phenomenal nature. Everyday objects take on strange colors and patterns, and LSD users frequently claim they can "feel" a color with their fingers.

a psyhotic state roughly simia psychotic state roughl y similar to schizophrenia, and those who take it may have their outlook on life significantly altered after the effects wear off.

Recent clinical analysis by psychiatrists, however, does strongly indicate that use of the drug will induce a permanent psychotic state in some individuals, according to UNC psychiatrist Dr. Martin Keeler.

Keeler said there is no sure way of determining who will be affected adversely by LSD.

Experimentors have not determined the full effect which the drug produces in the human brain, and research is still in progress.

Keeler said LSD related materials are "probably present" in all Morning Glory seeds.

"Seed companies have reported that the sales of Morning Glory seeds have just about doubled within the last year or so," Keeler said.

Police Powerless

Despite the risks involved in taking LSD under unsupervised conditions, many students here and elsewhere continue to use the drug.

LSD use has been related to some recent suicide cases and accidents.

In an automobile wreck last summer, Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake reported large quantities of Morning Glory seeds had been found scattered thoughout the vehicle.

There are no federal laws against the use or distribution of LSD and related drugs, according to Blake.

"There is a state law which says it is illegal to possess peyote," Blake said.

"We know there are a lot of people using thosse Morning Glory seeds," Blake said, "but we can't do anything about it.

Early next spring, the seed dealer will make his bi - annual visit to Chapel Hill stores and the Central Carolina Farmer's Exchange in Carrboro.

From spring through the summer, and into the fall, the temptation of the pearly gates in three or four local hardware stores will continue to bother students and townspeople.

Student Editor At State Wants To Banish 'Dixie'

SOON, SOON, SOON—That's the latest word from the Athletic Department on when the bleacher section in Carmichael Auditorium will be completed, and if work on the seats continues at the present rate, that prediction will come true. Here a workman uses a power tool to tighten mounting brackets.

Not Against Song Itself, Only Reaction To Music

From The Associated Press

Editors of the North Carolina State University student newspaper have proposed that "Dixie" be stricken from the repertories of groups that perform on the university campus.

The editorial said there was no argument with the song itself, only the reaction to the music.

The editorial added "it appears that all a performing group has to do is strike a few notes of that tune and . . . people automatically shout frantically, stand up and sing. 'Dixie' represents those things the South should be attempting to lay aside. It is a remnant of the 19th Century which has no place in the 20th. Dixie gives unreconstructed Southerners something of the past which to cheer and there is certainly little in the past of the South about which anyone should wish to cheer."

Some 300 students wouldn't sit still for this editorial attack. They converged on the college newspaper offices Wednesday night demanding a retraction and an apology.

They screamed for the editors to make an appearance.

Then an estimated 400 students marched on the state capitol with Confederate flags whipping in the night air and the sound of "Dixie" floating through the city of Raleigh.

A college official marched with the students and remarked later, "It looked very much like the rebel retreat from Atlanta."

Don Grigg, manager of the campus radio station, also became a target when he left instructions to announcers: "It is deemed in keeping with out policy on neutrality on editorial matters not to air Dixie at this time."

Only once during the demonstrations was there a threat of trouble.

Two Negro students from North Carolina State appeared with a placard saying, "Down with Dixie." The crowed ripped the poster from their hands and destroyed it.

Ehle On Careers

Careers for Carolina Coordinator Lanny Shuff announced yesterday that prize-winning author John Ehle author of "The Free Men" will speak at the careers program today.

Whistle 'Dixie' But Don't Sing

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

RALEIGH — "Have I bitten off more than I can chew? Holy mackerel, you aren't just er — ah whistlin' 'Dixie'."

Bob Holmes, an editor of the N. C. State Technician, made the statement yesterday, two days and several demonstrations after he wrote an editorial comdemning the song "Dixie."

"I never expected it to escalate to the sclae it has," he said. "We were just trying to provoke some discussion among the students here, but it has got out of hand."

Wednesday morning a big banner reading "Dixie Forever" appeared at the top of a smokestack on campus. Students rose at breakfast in the cafeteria to sing "Dixie."

Wednesday night some 600 students gathered between two dormitories to talk it all over. Half of them moved on to the newspaper's office after a student counselor confiscated a bull horn and told the noisemakers to break it up.

They gathered outside the office and yelled for the editors — even burned a few copies of the paper nearby. Bill Fishburne, the other editor, went out and led the crown in the "Star Spangled Banner" while Holmes preferred the security of his office.

"Two Negroes showed up with 'Down Dixie' signs and there was a little mix - up," Holmes said. "The signs were taken away from them and torn up, but there wasn't any real trouble."

The crowd grew slightly, then decided to move downtown. Marches on the Capitol are a traditional means of protest on the Raleigh campus, and that is where they went, to tsing a few choruses of "that song."

Homes, a native of Raleigh, said, "We've had about 20 letters, about two - thirds of them against us. The phone hasn't quit ringing, and some of the profanity and threats we're getting would put a sailor to shame."

Homes wrote the editorial, but Fishburne, an Ashville native, said the staff supports it.

Blake Clarifies Cycle Accidents

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake denies that UNC has experienced an average of one motorcycle accident a day since the two-wheeled fad got under way here.

Chief William Blake

The "one a day" figure had been arrived at by the School of Public Health, the Dean of Men's office and the infirmary

"If this is true, the police department is not aware of it," Blake said Wednesday.

Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont said yesterday there "many, many accidents on bikes that are not reported to the police.

"A kid will borrow a bike and have an accident, somehow return the bike and stagger over to the infirmary," he said. "These accidents are never reported to the police."

Blake explained that "any personal injury or property damage over $100 is normally reported to us, and that naturally includes campus accidents."

Beaumont said there have been no fatalities on motorbikes yet — "Knock wood." He added that "last year we had some serious head injuries."

Unfortunately, "The 'expert rider' has between 15 minutes and three months experience," Beaumont said.

Blake added that "in the accidents we have, the cyclists always come out at the worst end" compared with automobile drivers.

"And sometimes, the motorcycles are hard to control, but if a person would really took advantage of the cycles' greater maneuverability, he'd come out ahead.

"I frequently get calls from parents, yet so far I haven't advised anyone not to let his son have a cycle.

"But," he continued, "I agree the danger is the biggest objection to having one. Most accidents result in leg injuries."

He said the seriousness of the cycle mishaps varies greatly, making it hard to agree on a common definition of a reportable accident.

He mentioned "the son of a good friend of mine" who would have been killed if he hadn't had his helmet on."

No Shorts For Ladies, But It's O.K. For Gents

BY CAROL GALLANT
Special to the DTH

Winter chills got you down? Consider the following girl's plight. It is presented in behalf of those trained to plan and think ahead.

TIME: Late spring.

The sun beat down mercilessly on the coat - clad figure as she moved resolutely towards her destination. She, however, was no to be overwhelmed by the stifling heat, or distressed by the curious stares, but merely pulled her coat more snugly about her. Perspiration running down her forehead, hair sticking damply to her neck, she smiled inwardly, knowing that she was doing the right thing.

My friends, here you behold a Carolina coed abiding by a "recommendation" concerning the wearing of bermudas and slacks on campus. Thus, a coat must cover her bermudabared knees or toreadored figure. This indeed is the right thing.

It is right because as a Carolina coed she must be a lady, in dress as well as action. Anyone knows a real lady doesn't wear bermudas and toreadors. She is always proper, reads Emily Post, wears her skirts just the right length, murmurs, "how nice", and "really" in just the right tone, faints at the sight of blood, and smiles a lot, demurely, of course.

This is the ideal we must strive for. Down with this carefree abandonment, this unfeminine conduct as evidence by "those girls" who feel they can look just as neat, just as proper in bermuda and slacks.

Such irreverence for the word! They go further to suggest that as girls intellectually capable of dealing with Carolina academics, and Carolina men, they are capable of determining what dress is proper without the aid of recommendations, or a house council ruling.

They mutter about the ridiculousness of having to wear a coat, the girl thinks to herself, but don't realize that they must protect their feminine image (no one will ever guess they have bermudas on under their coats, and a London Fog over toreadors is actually most becoming).

They must also protect the poor innocent Carolina gentleman. He must not be distracted from his deep concentration as he sits meditating in the cool shade of a tree in his tee - shirt and cut - off blue jeans, or his madras bermudas and sleeveless sweat-shirt. He is bare - footed of course.

Dear Santa: Where Are You?

What happens to all those Dear Santa letters?

The Chapel Hill Post Office has already received a few this season and they pose a slight problem. They don't know where to send them.

Postmaster Paul Cheek said they usually send the letters back to the parents in a plain envelope or give them to the Merchants Association.

"We give some to the local papers when we find a cute one they might want to print," said Joe Augustine, director of the association.

"If we find a hardship case in a letter we try to do something for the family at Christmas," Augustine said.

It would be nice if there were no hardship cases this year. Course it would help matters if the United States Post Office could find Claus' change of address form.

The L&M Boys, Lewis And Miller

The basketball team was pleased with the thunderous cheering Tuesday night.

But then the fans were pretty well pleased with the thunderous performance of the Tar Heels. It was too bad that the L & M boys, Lewis and Miller, lost to Richmond by one point. They only managed to come up with 75 between them while the Spiders got 76.

The pep band has been doing a wonderful job down in the guts of Carmichael Coliseum—yeah coliseum, that's what the tickets said.

Decorations Blow A Fuse

The fire department was called out twice last week to put out electrical fires in the decorations on W. Franklin St.

The department says if it happens again the lights in that area will have to be turned off until the cause can be determined and remedied.

Christmas may be over before it gets started and certain merchants are bound to blow a fuse.

Publisher Publishes On Page One

There is a good story about Mark Foster Ethridge, journalism lecturer here, who retired this summer as editor of Long Island's Newsday.

The former publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal was arrested and charged one night for drunk driving. The next day he ordered the embarrassing story put on page one of the newspaper.

He received several calls from elderly women around the city who offered to drive him around until he got his license back.

Red Speaker On Campus Tuesday

They just amended the Communist Speaker Ban Law not more than three weeks ago.

And the UNC Press Club and the faculty of the Journalism couldn't wait to sponsor a Red Thursday night who will speak in the Howell Hall lounge—his name is Santa Claus, Ho, Ho, Ho.

Frosh Spaghetti Dinner Put Off

White Cancels Dinner

Freshman Class President Ben White announced yesterday that the spaghetti dinner planned to raise money for the class has been postponed until after Christmas because of technical difficulties.

He explained that the athletic department would not permit any type of fire heat or open flame in the Tin Can and the electrical system was not suitable for electric stoves.

He cited other University functions that conicided with the dinner as another reason for postponement.

Student Seminar

Representatives are being chosen by student government to attend the International Student Relations Seminar to be held in Washington, D. C. from June 13 to September 2, 1966.

The seminar is an expense-paid summer training program designed to provide American students with an understanding of the campus politics in over a hundred foreign countries.

Anyone interested should contact Bob Wilson at student government offices

Europe Flights

An organization called People-to-People, began by President Eisenhower in 1956, offers a program of traveling to Europe for $260 round-trip.

A sign-up sheet is at the information desk in GM, and there will be a meeeting Sunday at 4 p.m. in GM. A membership in PTP costs $2.50.

Before the flight in June, there is a three-day orientation program for PTP. Last year President Eisenhower spoke to the group. Flights leave June 17-18 and return Aug. 26-27.

Johnson New Head

The Rev. Robert L. Johnson, Methodist chaplain at UNC was elected president of the Association of Wesley Foundations at a national convention in Lincoln, Nebraska, Dec. 2.

Johnson has been director of the UNC Wesley Foundation since June, 1957. He graduated from North Carolina in 1952 and studied at Union Theological Seminary.

The foundation has recently won recognition for its $300,000 student center.

Scholarship Fund

A scholarship fund providing annual grants equaling the most generous and attractive now available to undergraduates in this country has been established within the Music Department by an alumnus, Sidney M. Dowd of Blowing Rock.

Valued at $2,000 for an academic year of two semesters. the Dowd scholarships are designed for students majoring in music, whose principal interests and abilities lie in the field of performance. They will be awarded on an annual basis for a maximum tenure of four years, with option of futher tenure for students of unusual promise.

Latins Visit UNC

Fifteen non-English speaking economics majors from the University of Los Andes in Caracas, Venezuela wli be on campus starting today and until Wednesday.

There are 11 boys and four girls.

Remodel Lenoir

Lenoir Hall will get its kitchen remodeled by 1967 and will have its capacity doubled by 1969 if the State Legislature appropriates money for the changes and the University approves, according to Director of Dining Halls George Prillaman.

Prillaman met with University Planning Director Arthur Tuttle, manufacturer's consultant Richard Iuen and architect Milton Small yesterday to discuss the plans before sending them to University administrators.

Teachers Convene

Over 300 high school educators from all over the state will attend a two day Mathematics Teachers Conference beginning this afternoon.

The conference is an annual event sponsored by the Department on Mathematics of the North Carolina Education Association and the University of North Carolina.

Phi Beta Kappa

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

Down With 'Dixie'

To give Chapel Hill students the chance to see what all the ruckus is about, the DTH is reprinting the Tuesday editorial from the N. C. State Technician which called for doing away with "Dixie."

The song "Dixie" should be stricken from the musical repertory of every performing group.

On the basis of the performances given recently on this campus, "Dixie" can be buried none too soon. The only thing more ridiculous than the Royal Marine Tattoo or the Norman Luboff Choir performing "Dixie" is the reaction of the audience itself. Actually, it appears that all a performing group has to do is strike a few notes of that tune and the crowd immediately emits a response that might be termed Pavlovian: people automatically shout frantically, stand up, and sing. Children learn the Pavlovian response early without really understanding its implications. The traditions represented by "Dixie" are perpetuated—the South continues to linger in the past.

"Dixie" represents those things the South should be attempting to lay aside. It is a remnant of the 19th century which has no place in the 20th. In fact, "Dixie," in its own small way, stands as an obstruction to the progress of the 20th century. In a time in which the South has been under heavy assault for its practices, "Dixie" gives unreconstructed Southerners something of the past of the South about which anyone should wish to cheer.

Naturally some persons in the audiences will probably never arrive in the 20th century. Not altogether unexpectedly, these persons, who are the first to their feet to the strains of "Dixie," are also the ones who sleep until the group performing produces a few pop songs and who applaud at all the wrong times during the concert. Hopefully, the majority of the audience does not react in this manner. However, when an audience rises to "Dixie," each and every member standing deals a direct slap in the face to every Negro, and to the hopes of the 20th century as well. It is an insult which can no longer be tolerated.

The decline of "Dixie" will perhaps be long and slow, but, as a start, performing groups should abstain from furthering 19th century traditions by playing the song. Perhaps if enough groups abstain, "Dixie" will die a welcome, and none too swift, death.

Learn Today – Earn Later

Any student with an interest in working with state, local or federal governments ought not to let today's "Careers for Carolina" program slip by unnoticed.

"We aren't aiming this at the politician-type at all," coordinator Jim Brame said yesterday. "The purpose is just to give anybody who is interested in any phase of government, especially local and state, the chance to find out about the opportunities and requirements involved. This includes jobs in the public service and administration category — school teaching too," he said.

Last night about 50 students had signed up for the day-long program. Space is available to twice that number, and Brame said additional interested students may attend the sessions in the Institute of Government simply by registering there at 9 a.m. Latecomers will probably not be able to attend the luncheon, however. John Ehle, author and former UNC faculty member, will speak at the luncheon.

Chancellor Paul Sharp and other educators, the state personnel director and a representative of the Federal Budget Bureau will be among the speakers. The program will end at 5 p.m.

Official permission to cut classes to attend the program cannot be given, but Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey has completely endorsed the session and urged professors to "be lenient" in counting absences.

Excused or not, this is a chance for interested students to learn some really meaningful career information from the proper sources.

"They Always Say Don't Smoke In Bed"

Movie Review

Nothing Repulsive About 'Repulsion'

By PETER RANGE

It occurs to me that there may have been many who did not go to see Roman Polansky's "Repulsion," shown for the past two weeks at the Rialto in Durham, out of fear of being repulsed by what they would see. This especially applies to women.

And then I suppose there were those in attendance, young bucks always eager for a bit of sex served up in any style, who went because the movie's title suggested the possibility of two hours of ecstatic perversion on the screen. This applies mostly to men, and they were there aplenty when I went last week.

In any case they were both in error about "Repulsion." The man in charge of making this film sell was probably a fool, bless him, and got taken in by those arty fellows who believe in the cinematic-literary importance of a movie's title.

"Repulsion" shocked but it did not repulse. Alfred Hitchcock is at least seven slashes gorier. The repulsion which the title bespeaks is that felt by Carol, the heroine, when she confronts men. Carol, played almost flawlessly by Catherine Deneuve, is a beautiful Belgian blond working in a plush London beauty salon as a manicurist.

She has a neurotic fear-aversion for men which develops into a psychotic rampage in her apartment during the 12-day absence of her older sister, with whom she lives.

Carol's underlying neurosis is turned into psychosis, in a stretch of credulity, by the presence of the older sister's obnoxious London lover in their apartment. He treats Helen, the sister, as much less than the gorgeous mistress that she is to him, offends Carol repeatedly, and leaves his toothbrush and barber's razor in her her toothbrush glass in the bathroom every morning.

Carol's repulsion is climaxed by the sounds (magnificently done under Leslie Hammond's direction) of Helen with Michael in the next room every night. Then sister and lover depart for 12 days in the country.

Within two days Carol has lost her ability to cope with the outside world. She leaves work one day in a stupor and forgets to return for three more. Cracks in a sidewalk captivate and immobilize her on the way to a date with Colin, her would-be suitor. She locks herself up in her apartment forever.

Carol is now a full-blown paranoiac. Cracks in the plaster rip open to wide gashes. Grasping hands reach out of rubbery walls at her as she walks in the hall. Another wall becomes soft and clay-like. In her bed she labors under the oppressive fear of rape, has delusions of a man walking in the hall and finally several delusions of rape by a huge, dirty man who hides in her bed. She wears only a sheer nightgown for the remaining ten days.

Poor Colin is a good boy with the right aggressive instincts, but he does not know a paranoiac when he sees one. Out of desperation over Carol's disappearance he breaks down the door to her apartment. When he turns his back for a moment she pounds him to death on the head with the butt of a heavy candlestick. First shock. But no repulsion.

Somehow she gets Colin's body into the overflowing bathtub and leaves it there. The baron landlord shows up a few days later, demanding back rent. As soon as silent Carol pays it, his interest switches to the lovely creature under the nightie.

But Carol has Michael's hated razor behind her and very neatly slashes the back of the landlord's neck when he forces himself on her. Then more hacks and slashes until the fellow is a dying mass of gashes and blood. This part of the film, through the sound effects, is powerfully brutal but deftly avoids the gory.

When Helen and her lover finally return and discover the carnage, they find Carol under the bed in a spread-eagle schizophrenic catatonia. The neighbors have come rushing in at Helen's cries and are afraid to touch Carol. When Michael, now heroic and noble, picks up the insane girl and carries her out, the film closes on their mutterings: "He shouldn't have touched her."

The strength of the film lies in its direction and the weakness in its plot. But the immediacy of each scene takes prime importance so that the viewer is not bothered by the weakness of support for Carol's neurotic repulsion, the incredibility of the sister's departure as a catalyst sufficient to produce such a bloodbath, and the lack of tightness or logical progression in the plot.

Polansky has done an almost clinical cinematic study of the basic elements of psychoses and done it well. The obvious walk cracks, delusions of objects on her face, sundry persecution complexes) do not fall heavy-handed into the film because of the clarity and verismilitude of each scene. There is a lightness about the acting and direction throughout, unlabored by strained gestures and melodramatic lines as in a film like "The Collector," effective as that flick may have been. This movie may well be the best treatment of the psychotic done so far and, despite its extremes, can be compared with "David and Lisa" as a psychological study.

States Must Accept Unfair One-Man Vote Decision

As it must now come to all states, the moment of truth comes to North Carolina on Jan. 10. On that day the General Assembly convenes in special session to tackle the problem of reapportionment. Both the Assembly and the state's Congressional districts must be adjusted to abide by the Supreme Court's now famous "one man - on vote" ruling. The legislature faces a court - imposed Jan. 31 deadline.

Reapportionment is perhaps the toughest a job a legisaltive body has to face. Men must vote on laws that they know may put themselves out of work. Because of the difficulty, some states have ignored the instructions of their own constitutions requiring them to re - district regularly. Urban and suburban areas increased greatly in population, but saw their legislative and Congressional representation remain small.

A vicious cycle developed. The rural areas controlled the state legislatures. Reapportionment would have meant a loss of rural power, so reapportionment was ignored. The urban areas, without the votes in the legislatures, were powerless to do anything.

Into this situation stepped the United States Supreme Court. Reversing an earlier decision, the Court ruled, in Baker v. Carr (1962) that Federal courts did have jurisdiction over the apportionment of state legislatures.

Last year the Court amplified its ruling to require that all districts be as near equal in population as possible. The first decision, while perhaps regrettable, is also understandable. As has often been said, the states brought the ruling on themselves by refusing to obey their own constitutions.

The second decision, however, — the one man - one vote ruling — is neither understandable, desirable, nor, in my opinion, justified by the Constitution. This document guarantees to each state a republican form of government The United States has a republican form of government. Yet Congress has only one house apportioned according to population, and even that one is not districted on a one man - one vote principle. (North Carolina has 11 representatives, about one for every 400,000. Alaska has one for a population of about 200,000.)

Despite the obvious example of the national government, the Supreme Court has ordered the states to apportion both houses on a strict population basis and has specifically rejected any "little Federal" plans. This decision is, to say the least, illogical. Do the states have to be more republican than the Federal government? Or is the ruling designed to make them less republican and more democratic?

One effect of the Court's edict is to make a two - house state legislature meaningless. When the smoke of reapportionment has cleared, state senate and house constitutencies will differ only in the number of people they contain. Neither will have any geographical base as the United States Senate constitutencies wil continue to have. Perhaps more states will follow Nebraska's lead and create unicameral legislatures.

The Court's ruling can also prevent a state from having the form of government its people want. Even if all the voters of a state chose to apportion one house on some basis other than straight population, the state would be barred from doing so.

In addition to not making sense, the one man-one vote standard creates problems for the states. The headaches of recistricting are compounded when two houses must be changed. Moreover, there is a real danger that some people will wind up virtually without representation in their state legislatures.

The pattern of reapportionment is likely to result, in many cases, in a large and a small county being lumped together in one district. The almost inevitable result is that the representative will come from the larger county. Since states may appropriate money for such things as public education on a county basis, this lack of representation can be a serious problem.

Senator Everett Dirksen's proposed Constitutional amendment to allow a state to apportion one house on a basis other than strict population seems doomed to defeat This was apparently the last hope of mitigating the Supreme Court ruling. The Court has made a bad decision, but the states will have to live with it.

Cannibals At UNC

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Do you think, Mr. Stupak, that you know the difference between a cannibal society and a civilized society? I seriously doubt it.

Is it not true, Mr. Stupak, that in a cannibal society one gang gets what it wants from another gang because it is stronger rather than because it has something to trade? Is it not also true that a civilized society creates an institution called government to prevent cannibalism among its members?. . .

When your neighbor demands that you meet his terms, but is unwilling to accept yours, it doesn't matter whether he has the nerve to do this to your face or whether he wishes to do so by voting and thus hide behind an impersonal third party, the government, which will take the blame, it is still cannibalism and evil.

Mr Stupak, you are a cannibal. So are the one - tenth of the campus who will sign your petition.

I am not amused when you and your pseudo - intellectual friends quibble over the margin of votes necessary to eat Me!

If your radio program is really worthwhile — remembering that something is worthwhile only if enough people have freely consented it is to their advantage to support it for you to at least break even with its costs — then it is certainly not necessary that you demand that people support your plan by conscripting their money through a vote.

There are many ways of raising money in a free society, Mr. Stupak; one way not open to you for your private enterprise is the vote—be it with those of pre-school age, grade school age, college age, post - college age, any age.

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We the undersigned wish to make a correction in the letter to the Editor of Dec. 7, which was signed by Mr. Bob Jones. This letter was written by a number of students regarding the University Book Exchange. As Mr. Jones did not actually experience the incident, we, the authors of the letter, do hereby accept all responsibility for its content.

We met with the management of the book exchange today and the manager, who was not aware that this situation persisted, has guaranteed that in the future, any individual may place his special order for any type of book at either the booketeria or the Bullshead Book Store.

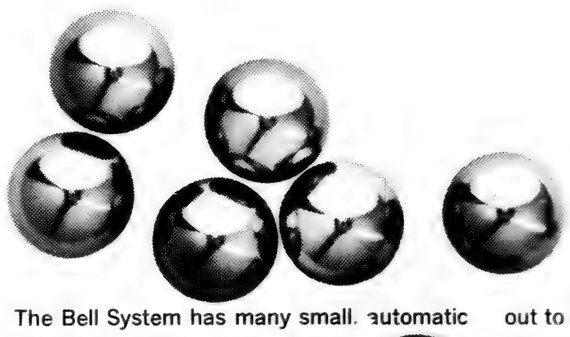
We set out to ruin some ball bearings and failed successfully



The Bell System has many small automatic telephone offices around the country. The equipment in them could operate unattended for ten years or so, but for a problem.

The many electric motors in those offices needed lubrication at least once a year. Heat from the motors dried up the bearing oils, thus entailing costly annual maintenance.

To stamp out this problem, many tests were conducted at Bell Telephone Laboratories. Lubricant engineer George H. Kitchen decided to do a basic experiment that would provide a motor with the worst possible conditions. He deliberately set out to ruin some ball bearings by smearing them with an icky guck called molybdenum disulfide (MoS_2).

Swock! This solid lubricant, used a certain way, actually increased the life expectancy of the ball bearings by a factor of ten! Now the motors can run for at least a decade without lubrication.

We've learned from our "failures." Our aim: investigate everything.

The only experiment that can really be said to "fail" is the one that is never tried.

Defense Spurs Tar Heels

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

"The zone press promotes an unselfish style of play. It does not emphasize individuals on offense alone. There is great squad appeal in this type of defense; it is a builder of team morale."

That was University of California Coach Pete Newell speaking (Sports Illustrated, 11-6-65) in general about the hardest-hitting renovation in college basketball since they threw away the peach basket goals.

But he just may have been talking pointedly about North Carolina's amazing Tar Heels, who have rebounded in the aftermath of an opening-game setback with a pressing defense that has practically blown three straight opponents off the court.

"Ours is not a UCLA-type press because, for one thing, we don't have their personnel. Mainly, it's more on the lines of the press that Phog Allen used out at Kansas when he won the national championship in 1952 and placed second in 1953. It's not really a zone press and not exactly a man-for-man either. We really aren't too good at it yet, but we're coming around."

The five-night blitz of William and Mary, Ohio State and Richmond has seen the emphasis on two individuals on offense. But this is not the contradiction of Newell's statement it seems.

Let Bobby Lewis, who forms Carolina's lethal scoring duo with Larry Miller, tell you about this "new look" Tar Heel team.

"The biggest different this year is in the spirit we have as a team. Everybody's equal, and when we come downcourt with the ball, we just look for a jersey to pass to."

Then Wednesday night, after Carolina has shattered the school's single - game scoring record, Lewis stood in the hell-raising locker room and talked about the pressure defense.

"It has worked real good so far. We have gotten a lot of steals in the last few games and turned them into easy baskets. I know that most of the scoring Larry and I have done has been on layups or close shots, and that is due to the way everybody has been working the ball. The way we've been passing, there's not much to do but just lay it in."

Law IV, DU's Take Crowns

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Law IV and DU Blue 11 won the graduate and fraternity tag football championships on Thursday by shutting out their opponents.

The Law boys slipped past the Town Tuffs in overtime, 1-0. The teams battled away for an entire game and proved nothing, except that both have outstanding defenses. In the overtime period, Charlie Shaffer of Law ripped off two sizeable gains and Law moved the ball further down the field than the Tuffs did, clinching the victory.

The DU's won their title by smashing Zete I, 25-0. Touchdowns by Bob Cordell, Dan Howe and Mel Wright staked DU to an 18-0 halftime lead and they coasted home from there. Wright added another touchdown in the second half to put the icing on the DU cake.

'Dixie' Held Dear By UNC Students

How do UNC students feel about Bob Holmes' (co-editor of the N. C. State Technician) editorial calling for banning "Dixie"?

Allen Webster, sophomore, Maxton — "I think we ought to ship the editor back to Yankee land." (Holmes was raised in Alabama.)

Robert Lee Crocker, freshman, Rocky Mount — "Students ought to be able to sing what they want to. I don't think there should be any more control over songs than there should be over free speech."

Linda Armantrout, freshman, Winter Park, Fla.— "When I hear 'Dixie' it makes me feel proud I live in the South. It doesn't mean I'm protesting change. I don't think 'Dixie' has all the bad implications the editor thinks it does."

Jean Blair, freshman, Winston-Salem — "I don't think its hurting anything to sing 'Dixie'. It's not important enough to have all that controversy about it."

One young lady who didn't care to be quoted said she figured Editor Holmes would soon come out against sex.

New Protest Movement Underway

For some reason cold weather brings agitators up from under their stones. Yesterday young peach-fuzzed students demonstrated their patriotism in Y-Court by trying to abolish the draft.

The SPU hasn't been taken too seriously after their highly deserved bombardment by both students and the press, Lord only knows what the Americans for Democratic Action are up to.

But now another protest movement has been organized. This one is the Association for Negro Instrumentalists Against Light-Skinned Singers — code name ANIMALS.

'The Daily What' She Asks

Yes Virginia, there is a Daily Tar Heel.

A DTH staffer was in town this week picking up office supplies for the paper when he encountered a department store clerk who supposedly isn't sure the DTH exists.

"Charge it to The Daily Tar Heel," the staffer said as he showed her the supplies he had bought.

"The Daily what?" the woman asked.

"The Daily Tar Heel."

"Spell it."

The clerk, who seemed to have normal hearing, said she'd lived in Chapel Hill 14 years.

Operation Match: Find Your Date In A Million

By ANDY MYERS
DTH News Editor

"You may not know it, but you're one in a million," the ad said. "No one is quite like you."

That's not quite what they meant, however. The gist of the Operation Match sales pitch went something like this:

Since we are all weary of mixers and sick of blind dates, why not let a computer take the blindness out of a blind date.

Several hundred UNC students decided to try Operation Match last October and the results of the computerized match - making have just started to pour in.

And like all machines of its type, the computer has registered a few errors which only a machine can make.

Take the case of a UNC coed named Hortense. (She declined to be fully identified). When she got her list of Matches back the other day there were 15 names. All girls.

Then there was a UNC sophomore who got fixed up with his sister, a freshman at Duke. "They are as different as night and day," one of his friends said.

But he was sure the machine had erred, disregarding the fact that incest is illegal in this country. "She must have lied on the 'sexual experience' category," he said. "I know she hasn't had any."

Perhaps the computer based its decision on the fact that opposites attract.

But there were other factors involved. An AD Pi at UNC filled out the Operatin Match form "just as a joke," she said.

What the machine didn't know was that she had become engaged to a boy in the meantime. What will she do when the calls start coming in for dates?

"I'll make a date to play bridge," she said. Won't the boy be disappointed?

Most of the Match returns contain from four to 15 names for possible dates. No one is sure whether they are listed in the order of "best date" probability, however.

A boy with 15 names on his Match card said he isn't sure if he's especially popular or just common.

There is a nurse who acted in the best way she knew how by cautioning two of her boy friends to stop calling up for Match dates with certain girls in the dorm.

"They were cool guys," she said, "but their dates were losers." She might have saved face for two anxious males, but who knows, maybe the machine was right.

Junior coed Cathey Matthews said she knew two of the boys she was matched up with. "Out of five names on my card, four of them came from Carolina," she said. "The other came from Duke."

Did the machine do right? "We get along great," she said. "I called one of them up and we had a chat."

There is some confusion about the proper Match protocol. She the girl call the boy, or should she leave it up to the man to get in touch with her?

Every boy on a girl's card has her name included in his list, and vice versa.

One boy took the easy way out. He mailed his Match date a post card. The card said: "Dear Match. When?"

"If I get a call I'll probably chicken out," one girl said. But she added apprehensively, "This thing is really wild!"

One coed told of a friend who was very particular. "She decided she was going to get matched," her friend said. "But when the boys started calling she turned them down."

50-60 Klansmen Coming

Klansmen Request Seating At Speech

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina Forum Chairman George Nicholson III said in a statement yesterday he has been contacted by representatives of the Ku Klux Klan who wished to know whether Klan members would be barred from the Forum-sponsored speech of Congressman Charles Weltner Monday night here.

Nicholson said the Klan spokesman had asked him to reserve "50 to 60" seats for Klan members at the Weltner speech.

Weltner, a liberal congressman from Atlanta, Ga., is the member of the House Un-American Activities Committee who proposed the recent congressional investigation of the Klan.

Weltner is scheduled to speak on "the invisible empire" at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall before the student body and representatives of local and national press, radio and television.

"I have been contacted by an intermediary of the Ku Klux Klan inquiring whether or not our program will be open to the public and if Klan members will be barred from admittance," Nicholson said.

"I want to take this opportunity of reiterating that all Forum programs have been and will continue to be open to the public," he said. "We have no intention of barring anyone as long as they conduct themselves in an orderly fashion."

Informed sources have told the DTH at least 10 Klan klaverns in North Carolina will send representatives to the meeting and form their own "hooting section."

Weltner will be questioned by a panel of distinguished persons including Congress of Racial Equality Board Chairman Floyd McKissick, WRAL commentator Peter B. Young, and Greensboro attorney L.P. McClendon.

The program which is also sponsored by the YMCA Human Relations Committee, will feature a CBS documentary film on the Klan which will be shown preceeding Weltner's remarks.

Weltner, who was cited in the November 8 edition of "Newsweek" as one of three congressmen most likely to "succeed," rose on the House floor last February to call for an investigation of the Klan.

"Let us reveal for all to see the men behind the masks," Weltner told Congress. "The Klan will plague us tomorrow unless we squash it today."

Nicholson said he had been informed by Weltner's office last month that the Klan was considering plans to harass Weltner when he spoke in Chapel Hill.

Student Body President Paul Dickson said yesterday he was "deeply disturbed" by the threats of harassment.

"Even though we expect no difficulties," Dickson said "neither do we intend to tolerate any actions that will disrupt Congressman Weltner's visit."

Cameras from nine North Carolina television stations and two Atlanta stations will broadcast the Weltner speech.

Student Assembly To Hire Attorney

A bill to provide for an official Student Government attorney who will serve as a legal advisor for SG activities was passed by a vote of 19 to 15 in Student Legislature Thursday night.

Supporters of the bill, a key segment in the Dickson administration's legislative program, defeated two attempts to delay the measure's passage.

Hugh Blackwell (SP) led the fight for the bill, claiming, "Student Government is very lucky to ave gotten as far as it has without advice of an attorney."

Blackwell said it was possible to retain a good lawyer for the post for $200.

The lawyer would be concerned with advising matters related to the Student Discounting Commission, student publications, the honor system, the proposed Student Co-op.

Blackwell said that in the past the university attorney had helped them only when he could work it into his schedule.

Independent legislator Don Carson asked if a Student Government lawyer might represent the student body in a dispute with the University administration.

'I would only say that a lawyer's advice might help to avoid a confrontation of this nature,", Blackwell told Carson.

The debate was thrown open to the floor and Bill Purdy (UP) told the body not enough specific information about the bill and the attorney's powers had been presented to the body to merit passage of the measure.

Cathy Cauble (UP) asked Hockfield if Dean of Student Affairs, C. O. Cathey, had been approached by SG officials to allow Student Government use of the University lawyer. Hockfield said that to his knowledge Cathey had not been contacted.

Who Is Ugliest Man Of All?

By BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

If you want to decide who's the ugliest man on campus (UMOC) and keep a ship afloat at the same time, then cast your vote in the eighth annual Ugly Man Contest.

Nine contestants are vying for the honor.

All proceeds will go to project "Hope," an international hospital ship financed solely by charitable projects of this type.

"Hope" is a floating hospital that has done much work in the underdeveloped areas of Latin America.

After the first day of voting Honeybun Hodges, last year's runner-up, was leading the other contestants by 150 votes. Morrison and Lambda Chi were tied for second place.

Hodges was leading until the final day last year when a sealed bid by Tau Epsilon Ph claimed the trophy.

Fire Breaks Out In Gym

A switch box that controls the lights on the main floor of Woollen Gym caught on fire early yesterday morning but was put out before it could do any major damage.

Chapel Hill firemen were called to check the smoking box at 7:05 a.m.

The switch suffered only damage according to fire-chief G.S. Baldwin. It was still being used Friday after minor reparis.

Stevens Heads Group

Professor Walter Spearman of the Journalism School, Susan Barron, Fred Thomas, and Dave Haycock are the other members.

The committee will investigate the possibility of expanding the DTH both in size and days of publication. It will also look into the possibility of reviving the Carolina Magazine and of putting the Yackety Yack on a subscription basis.

Arnold Air Society

Area B-2 of the Arnold Air Society will hold their area conclave this morning at the Institute of Government.

The UNC Arnold Air Society, which is a service organization within Air Force ROTC, will host squadrons from Duke, N. C. State, North Carolina A & T, and East Carolina.

A luncheon will be held at noon in Chase Dining Hall. Highlighting the conclave will be the area's candidate for the Little General contest held at the national conclave in Dallas, Texas, in April.

YR's Say Quit NSA

The UNC Young Republicans passed a unanimous resolution Thursday night urging Carolina to disaffiliate with the National Student Association.

The resolution says that NSA "took many actions and made many official pronouncements in direct conflict with the views and attitudes of UNC students."

The statement claims that NSA resolutions condemning U. S. intervention for peace in the Dominican Republic, urging Communist China's admission to the United Nations and supporting the Berkeley Free Speech Movement plus a donation of $100 to that cause were against the beliefs of most Carolina students.

Library Scholarships

The South Carolina State Library Board will award five $2,500 scholarships for graduate work in library science this year.

Recipients must agree to work at least two years in a South Carolina public library following graduation. The minimum pay would be $5,040 for the first year of work.

Applications and requests for information should be sent to the State Library Board, 1001 Main St., Columbia, South Carolina.

Christmas Program

The second anual Community Christmas Concert and Carol Sing will be held tomorrow afternoon in Hill Hall at 3:00.

The program, which is free, is sponsored by the Music For Children organization of Chapel Hill.

The UNC Gleemen, a brass ensemble from the Music Department, and the Young People's Orchestra will perform. Mrs. Bernice Otededo will be the featured soloist.

TV Newsman Blasts LBJ

Peter B. Young, the WRAL-TV newsman scheduled to appear at the Carolina Forum, has called President Johnson "emotionally unstable" and siad the Klansmen are "our brothers."

"What is the answer to the Klan?" Young asked. "Not the tender ministrations of our secret police, as deplored by a vengeful President."

Johnson, besides being "emotionally unstable," is "ruthless" and "unscrupulous," Young said in a statement to the forum.

He said the Klansmen "are more right than the President who so savagely condemns them. . .

"The lonely, frightened, exploited men of the Klan are our brothers. We ride over their lengthly list of legitimate grievances at our own peril.

"When we confront the individual Klansman, we are looking in the fun house mirror at ourselves. . .

"I am interested in the Klansmen as individuals," Young declared.

"Like you, they have wives, children, mortage payments and jobs.

"Like most of you, most of them have no police record for anything more serious than misdemeanor traffic violations.

Do-It-Yourself Hallucinations

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake has said, "We know there are a lot of people using those morning glory seeds, but we can't do anything about it."

Why bother about such an innocent-sounding thing as flower seeds? Because they contain chemicals similar to the hallucigenic drug d-lysergic acid diethylamide, LSD. The drugs themselves are not known to be physically harmful. They are not narcotics.

Nevertheless they are dangerous because they affect the brain in ways which cannot be predicted. A UNC graduate student who has taken such a drug described this sensation to a Daily Tar Heel staff writer: "It was beautiful and awful at the same time. I walked out into the rain during a thunderstorm. The heavy clouds . . . were outlined in purples and weird colors . . . Every time a drop hit my eyelids the water would scatter with a thousand slivers of color . . . It was beautiful, but I hated it . . . I kept hearing myself pray, 'God, please get me out of this.' "

Morning glory seeds, crushed and swallowed with a flavoring, such as sugar or honey, produce similar hallucinations, An amount no larger than a thumbnail can produce a psychotic state in the user, leaving him vulnerable to the whims of an uncontrolled mind.

Some psychiatrists have said these drugs could cause permanent psychological damage, although users claim the drugs are therapeutic and cause mental damage no more frequently than conventional psychological treatment.

Most college students would come into the "using it for kicks" category and they are placing themselves in danger by playing with a powerful drug like a toy.

Use is apparently not very widespread in Chapel Hill, but the raw materials — flower seeds — are available in season as a loaf of bread.

As Chief Blake indicated, there is no law against the sale of morning glory seeds. However, with the full knowledge that many of the seeds they sell never reach a flower bed, local merchants who stock the seeds should exercise some care in handling requests for them.

If customers were required to identify themselves when purchasing the seeds the merchants could be alerted to overly frequent buyers. The merchants should refuse to sell the seeds if there is any doubt about their ultimate use.

A limit on the amount of seeds an individual may buy, similar to the liquor limit, could be imposed. Such action would only affect those who buy for resale, however, since only a very small amount is required for a single experiment with the drug.

If the merchants find such a voluntary arrangement unworkable, perhaps the Chapel Hill Town Council could look into the matter with the possibility of control ordinances in mind.

A student killed himself last summer by jumping out of a window. A University official says he was under the influence of some variety of hallucination-producing drug.

One such incident is too many.

News Analysis

Legislature Faces Difficult Problem

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

For most of those who will be in attendance in the Legislative Building in Raleigh on Jan. 10, there will be a strong feeling of "deja vu" — of having seen the whole scene before.

And in a very real sense, many of those present will have seen the scene before — slightly less than two months before to be exact.

Then the General Assembly met in special session to consider the communist speaker ban law. On Jan. 10 the General Assembly will again convene for a special session — this time to decide on reapportionment.

But surface similarities are deceiving. The general character of the two sessions is destined to be quite different.

Relatively speaking, despite the emotional fervor which went into the heated debate on the speaker ban, there will probably be few tangible effects on the state as a whole. Of course revision of the law brought about continuation of accreditation, but it is doubtful that the new law will cause any sudden influx of communist speakers on campuses.

On the other hand, the issue of reapportionment, which has remained largely dormant until recent weeks, is likely to have a profound effect on the future of North Carolina.

During the first special session, legislators concerned themselves with what is at heart an academic question. During the upcoming session, the members of the General Assembly will be called upon to pass judgment on themselves.

And while a legislator may well have gone against the wishes of his constituency on the speaker ban issue without fear of direct consequences, he will be much more hesitant in diminishing his chances of re-election. And no matter how the legislature settles the reapportionment of the state, a number of legislators will end up with the short straws.

Despite frequent statements by legislators that they do not want to be pressured into doing anything, the very nature of their position makes this almost inevitable. While working on the revision of the gag law, the legislature kept one eye on the clock — they knew that the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools would meet and pass judgment on their final product. None of the legislators really wanted the state's publicly supported institutions to lose accreditation.

This time again the eyes will be on the clock and the calendar. The three-judge federal court which tossed the reapportionment of North Carolina into the lap of the General Assembly also imposed a Jan. 31, 1966, deadline.

They too will review the product of the legislators, and, regardless of their differences of opinion, legislators are unwilling to throw their work as well as their authority out the window.

Then there is also the matter of money. The last special session cost approximately $10,000 a day when all the expenditures were totaled.

The per-day cost will probably remain about the same. Only this time the legislators may have a three-week instead of a three-day session on their hands. And three weeks will be all the time that the General Assembly will have.

Of course the question has been raised many times, "Why weren't both issues taken care of in a single session?" Even before Governor Dan K. Moore issued the call for the first special session, most people, particularly the legislators, knew that the reapportionment issue was inevitable.

It was only a matter of time till the courts stepped in.

Legislators at the speaker ban session realized this, and one legislator even tried to introduce a bill on reapportionment, but had it rejected by the rules committee.

But chances are that had the Assembly opened itself to all issues; it would have given the reapportionment issue priority on its calendar; the issue would still be in the works; the speaker ban controversy would still be waiting in the wings; and North Carolina educational institutions would have lost their accreditation.

On the speaker ban issue, Moore cleverly put the burden of reaching a compromise decision on a special study commission. Moore only stepped in at the last moment by going before a joint session of both houses of the legislature on its opening day of the session appealing for the adoption of the commission's recommendations.

If Moore runs true to form, he will probably follow through in the same way on the upcoming session. Committees have already been named for each house, to come up with a proposed reapprtinmnt plan fr th respective house.

The governor will probably go before the General Assembly again to ask for adoption of the committee recommendations.

Amendment of the ban law was generally considered a personal victory for the governor. This time around, there probably won't be any victory — only an acceptable solution.

This time the road to adjournment won't be quite so simple.

Looking Ahead With ESP

Extrasensory perception, far from being the property of 17 - year - old girls who win automobile raffles, can be put to important uses like espionage work.

That's the opinion of Dr. J. B. Rhine, the Duke ESP expert, and I agree.

But I still believe there's plenty of room left in the ESP business for the average Joe Doe, even if certain people are inconvenienced by the new technology.

How will it affect your life and mine? Because the prominent ESP authority was busy discussing militay secrets and similar matters, he couldn't find time for me to interview him in person, but graciously consented to intensive questioning via ESP.

He says extra sensory perception can enable one "to divine the future," so here's the situation in 1970:

"After ESP was introduced to the UNC campus, there occurred a substantial alteration of the dating habits of most male students, who at last know the answer to The Question: 'Does she or doesn't she?

"Miss Clairol and other hair coloring firms, of course, immediately went out of business — as did 'Operation Match' when it was discovered how many coeds were lying about their looks.

"Academic life changed, too. No longer could students study the night before the big test and convince their professors they hadn't ignored their text books all semester. No longer could they cut language labs, 'fudge' term paper footnotes, make up fake laboratory reports or deny their roommates had written their English essays.

"Throughout the South, NAACP members called for a federal investigation of the Klan's brain jamming.

"ROTC cadets insisted that the SPU rallies were interfering with military communications between Selective Service and the holders of draft cards.

"In fact, the brain jamming complaints ran into the millions until an obscure researcher discovered it is foolish to say your opponent can interfere with your thoughts since you assume he has no brain in the first place.

"And there was other trouble. Through ESP, people learned that:

"—"LBJ owned stock in a candle company.

" — Che Guevera was hiding in a Miami night club.

" — Otelia Connor secretly ran an umbrella rental service.

" — Hubert Humphrey was Vice President during the Johnson administration

"— George Wallace once worked for Ebony Magazine.

Bundy Fit In Under Kennedy, But Out Of Place With LBJ

Bundy's gone.

Lots of people say that he should have stayed—that he was needed. As U. S. Security chief, Bundy seemed to have a knack for getting information on foreign affairs to the right people at the right time. He was highly respected by everyone in the administration. President Johnson was undoubtedly sincere when he expressed deep regret at Bundy's decision to leave.

Nobody twisted Bundy's arm. Still he had to go out. He just didn't belong anymore. He belonged under Kennedy, but not under Johnson.

Part of the Kennedy image was the vignette of the quick-striding man moving down a hall, speaking and listening, hashing it out with the knot of men around him. Bundy was one of those men—he was part of the picture.

The Johnson image shows us a man who does not speak as he moves, who does not listen as he speaks, who listens not to consider the speaker's loyalty. The image perhaps is changing—now the man has one confidant and adviser: his war lord McNamara. But the group of men about the leader is not there. Bundy is not there.

Mr. Bundy is a scholar—a man used to the free flow of thought. Something in him must have grated at the Johnsonian system of fiat from above, and he must have yearned for the old days when his ideas got a fair fight in a wide-open arena. Under Johnson, everybody's ideas must come up through the ranks, and Bundy must have seethed with frustration.

Kennedy kept a small plateau of equality atop the mountain of bureaucracy. Onto this plateau he invited men he trusted—including MacGeorge Bundy.

And now Bundy. He stuck it out for quite a while, but he just couldn't make it as a bureaucrat. He had to find another plateau of equality.

So he accepted the chairmanship of the Ford Foundation. He belongs there. The U. S. Govèrnment is no place for a former Harvard Dean—not any more.

Against Questionnaire

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We, the members of Women's Residence Council, would like to state our position in regard to the questionnaire formulated by the Study Commission on Women's Student Gorvenment, chaired by Miss Sandra Burden. It is our understanding that this questionnaire will be distributed in the immediate future to all women students.

On Tuesday, Dec. 7, 1965, Miss Burden presented the questionnaire and sought support of the questionnaire from the Council. She also asked for our help in distributing the questionnaire. After careful consideration, the Women's Residence Council unanimously decided that it could not offer its support to this specific questionnaire for the following reasons.

Even though the questionnaire had been conscientiously prepared by Miss Burden's committee, the Council felt the questions would not validly reflect the opinion of women on women's rules, and the results would therefore be of no service in evaluating women's rules. Furthermore it appeared to the Council that the questionnaire, in part, was irrelevant to Women's Student Government.

A questionnaire of this nature undoubtedly has its merits. The Women's Residence Council offered its help and support to Miss Burden's committee in preparing a questionnaire which would be more ap-Government, and more specifically, evaluating women's rules.

Miss Burden chose to refuse this offer. As a result, the questionnaire prepared by Miss Burden's committee will be distributed, but it is not endorsed by the Women's Residence Council.

The Council does wish to commend Miss Burden's committee for its interest in Women's Student Government. The Council also urges all women students to express their opinions on women's rules to their Women's Residence Council Representatives in order that the Council might better represent them in the rule-making process.

Respectfully submitted,
Women's Residence Council

Viet Message Clarified

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to clear up any doubt that may exist in the minds of the students concerning the content of the message sent to the soldiers in Viet Nam. The message stated, as was printed in The Daily Tar Heel and on the top of every sign up sheet, that the students were expressing "their gratitude to the American Servicemen in South Viet Nam for their sacrifice and service to our country."

The cooperation that the Thanksgiving Day Committee received was marvelous. The ease with which the Commtitee was able to get people to help was indicative of the support that the letter was to receive.

I would like to thank the Panhellenic Council, The Interfraternity Council and the Men's Residence Council for collecting the names and Susan Barron and her typing committee for typing the names on the letter.

UNC's Placement Service Helps Hundreds Find Jobs

By RICK STOFF
DTH Staff Writer

Fourteen hundred seventy five grad students, seniors, UNC alumni, and candidates for teaching positions have, and are now receiving job opportunities through the UNC Job Placement Service, this year.

The service, located in 204 Gardner Hall, is open to help all seniors, undergrad and grad students, and alumni of UNC.

Many seniors have the problems of deciding what jobs and careers their degrees can afford them, what starting pay these jobs offer, who to see to get the job and other important facts.

The service is provided to answer many of these questions and even to introduce the seniors and grad students to employers and corporation representatives who can talk to these interested students about the job on a first hand level.

Over 500 companies came to the Carolina campus last year looking for possible job candidates through the service because of the convenience of the department.

When a company shows an interest in a student for a job, and they ask for an interview with him, the service sets up the interview, collects all of the student's records and recommendations and even supplies a private room for the interview.

All of these services are free to the student except for a fee of $1.50 for the collection of the records of the student.

When trying to select a job the service urges the student to consider his interest in the field, possible satisfaction, and the chances of success.

Last year 1,371 jobs were offered by companies to students through the service. Of these, the demand for men in general administration was the largest field, which is evidenced by the large number of students with political science and other social science majors.

Accounting, sales and chemistry rounded out the largest number of job demands made by corporations according to majors.

The starting salaries are best for the graduates with Ph.D's, and Masters degrees. For those with Bachelor's degrees the salaries are best for graduates with majors in math, chemistry and a B.A. in industrial management. These jobs have mean starting salaries of $575, $532 and $625 per month respectively.

By occupation the best salaries are in the fields of accounting, math and production with salaries of $540, $587 and $562 per month.

Many of the students graduating with certain degrees will not take jobs which are their particular studies. This is a usual occurrence which is motivated by money and convenience for the individual.

"People, although they have one major, have the aptitude for a number of varied jobs and positions. In the case of the poli-sci. major who ends up as a salesman, his basic major is wide enough to be a stepping stone to other jobs out of the limits of political science.", said director of the Placement Service, Mr. J.M. Galloway.

The service offers three major aids to students and alumni: alumnus job placement, graduate job placement, summer jobs to undergrads, and teaching at the regular college and Jr. college level.

The regional College Placement Council supplements these aids by publishing a survey of job salaries and opportunities each year to inform graduating college seniors.

because now you can complete Air Force ROTC in just half the time!

Are you interested in starting a military career while in college—but afraid it will cut too deeply into your schedule?

Well, here's good news for you. Air Force ROTC now offers a 2-year program. You can start it any time you have 2 years of higher education remaining—whether on the undergraduate or graduate level.

Here's another good thing about this program: you get a chance to "sample" Air Force life before you sign up. During a special summer orientation session, you get to make up your mind about the Air Force, and the Air Force gets to make up its mind about you. Only when both are satisfied are you finally enrolled in the program.

You'll learn a lot in Air Force ROTC. The curriculum has been completely revamped. The accent is on aerospace research and development. But of course the classes are only the beginning. The important thing is that you'll be taking the first big step toward a profession of great responsibility, as a leader on America's Aerospace Team.

Find out more about the new Air Force ROTC program. See the Professor of Aerospace Studies today!

"The klan is not the only secret organization in America," Young said. "To give but one example, the Mafia is also secret and, rumor has it, individual members of the Mafia go outside the law occasionally.

"One difference is this: The Mafia, at a handsome profit, has made its backdoor deal with the establishment as represented by the big-city Democratic machines."

Young said the TV networks long ago sold out to an establishment that is in no position to issue a moral judgment on anybody."

Commenting on the CBS film to be shown at the Forum, Young said he would "buy three minutes of CBS network time at the conclusion of the KKK documentary" to expres his views on Johnson and the Klan "if I had $100,000."

Tar Heel Fans Give Opinions

By JIM FIELDS

Bob Lewis and Larry Miller are rapidly becoming the best one-two scoring bunch at Carolina since the days of York Larese and Doug Moe.

They were branded the "L & M" boys before the season started, but now they are being called the "L & M" scoring machine.

Jackie Cole, Roanoke Rapids, "They were tremendous. I wish they could have stayed in longer so I could have seen more of them."

Joel Whitaker, Troy, "They make a good scoring machine as long as we can keep it oiled."

Bill Hass, Falls Church, Va., "They are the best one-two punch in the conference and one of the best in the nation. But we need a third man who consistently scores around ten points so that if one or both of them are ever stopped he can take up the slack."

Jane Marsh, Kannapolis, "They really should both receive plenty of recognition by the end of the season, but just wait until next year."

Matt Forstadt, Durham, "They are probably the most valuable and unselfish duo that Carolina has ever had."

Fauntleroy

Our UPSET SPECIAL is nothing great;

The famous man leaned back in his leather chair and let his eyes wearily wander around the cabinet room. Then he pulled down on his long ears and addressed his top advisors.

"Boys, we're up the ol' crick. Got a conference with those press fellers in fifteen minutes and we ain't got nothin' good to tell 'em."

"What about the Gemini space flight?"

"No, no. From what I hear they miscalculated on the fuel supply, and those two cats is up there to stay.

"We need somethin' that can't bomb out — some information that no one will dispute and no one will criticize. Something that will appeal to the youth of America. We got to stop, 'em from skateboarding all over our highways and burnin' their draft cards."

"Mr. President," it said, "I am the great Fauntleroy. I know that I shouldn't be in here, but I knew that you needed help. I've got just the sort of info that you're looking for."

Minutes later the black car came to a stop and the president hurried through guarded doors. He ran to the podium and draped his mouth over the cluster of microphones.

"Gentlemen," he began, "I have a brief statement before I answer all your questions:

DUKE will beat UCLA's press with a zone of its own.

N. C. STATE will roll over WAKE FOREST's two-man show with a hot night after falling apart at College Park.

SOUTH CAROLINA's sophs shocked the world by beating Duke last week, but Philadelphia's massive Palestra sports arena has a dependable way of aweing youngsters. That should give PENN the winning edge, but if McGuire wins this one, watch out ACC!

North Carolina started using the shuffle offense in the 1962-1963 season in Dean Smith's first year here.

The most points the Tar Heels have ever scored was 115 against William and Mary in 1956 and against South Carolina in 1958.

The fewest points North Carolina has ever scored in a basketball game was eight against N. C. State in 1915.

Commodores Next For Tar Heels

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

Carolina's explosive Tar Heels, fresh from sterling performances against Ohio State and Richmond, meet their supreme test of the season as they tangle tonight with Vanderbilt in Knoxville, Tenn.

The Commodores, Southeastern Conference defending champs, are ranked fourth in the nation in this week's Associated Press poll.

The Tar Heels led by the "L & M" boys — junior Bob Lewis and sophomore Larry Miller — must contain the Commodores sensational center and everybody's all-America candidate Clyde Lee.

The 6-9 Lee, voted the most valuable player in the Southeastern Conference last season, will be joined by several returning letter winners.

At the guards will be a pair of 6-3 performers — Wayne Calvert and Keith Thomas. Thomas joins Lee as the only regulars returning from last season's Commodore five which compiled a 24-4 record.

Also prominent at the guard position will be 6-2 Jerry Southwood who played only the first semester of last season.

At the forward slots, Vanderbilt coach Roy Skinner can call on a host of letterwinners and newcomers.

Lettermen Kenny Gibbs (6-7), and Ron Green (6-6) are back this season.

Newcomers include Bo Wyanandt (6-4), Gene Locklear (6-5), Dave Boswell (6-3), Bob Warren (6-3), and Ron Knox (6-7).

Coach Skinner has a conservative outlook for this year's club.

"We'll have a difficult task trying to better last season's record and winning the Southeastern Conference championship. Three starters are gone.

"However big Clyde Lee is back and with him standout guard Keith Thomas.

"The backcourt is solid and there is good height. Our strength will be good speed and outside shooting."

One interesting sideline is the size of the Vanderbilt guards. Both are 6-3.

The Tar Heels met a similar situation at Columbus, Ohio, against the Buckeyes of Ohio State. The press they used, which took advantage of the slower Buckeye guards, paved the way for numerous easy offensive chances.

BOB BENNETT

Gene Rector

DTH Sports Editor

Tar Heel basketball fans have a team on their hands this season.

It was born before the season began — it was exposed rather convincingly against Ohio State and Richmond.

Over 12,000 at Ohio State saw that team effort tear apart a favored Buckeye team. Nearly 7,000 saw the Tar Heels romp over Richmond.

Sure, Bob Lewis and Larry Miller made the big noises with uncanny knack of putting the ball in the basket. But someone had to set up that pick to spring them in the clear and another had to fire that perfect pass at just the right moment.

Still others had to block shots, and grab rebounds. And still there were the "player-fans" on the bench who yelled their heads off with every Tar Heel score.

The point is that team work is paying off for the Tar Heels — unselfish team work.

"This is the greatest victory in a long time," he said. "Everyone on this team is so close."

In the post-game merry-making at Columbus, Ohio, one player yelled "short-range goal — Vanderbilt."

Another yelled "medium-range goal — ACC Tournament."

"Super-range goal — national champs" was next.

* * *

THINGS YOU WOULD NEVER KNOW DEPT. — Quite a number of strange names float around the varsity basketball court this season. Each performer has his own special tag.

Mark Mirken is "Beagle Brain" or "Mr. Chief." Ray Hassell is "Peter." Jim Smithwick is "Swifty." And Donnie Moe is "Mo-Mo."

* * *

One of the most pleasing ovations in years came this past Saturday in the victory over William & Mary. Senior center Bob Bennett probably received his first varsity standing ovation.

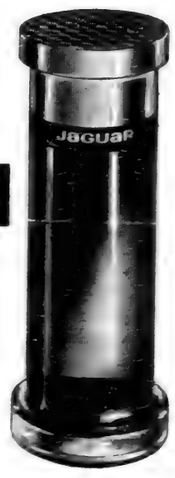
TAME IT'S NOT



This is Jaguar for men. After-shave and cologne combined. Women like it. Because it doesn't smell like the stuff they wear. Men like it. Because it comes on stronger. Stays on longer. Jaguar is lusty. Powerful. Potent. It's bottled in a stark, strong, smoky-glass cylinder. It's only for the man who gets a bang out of living, a charge out of leading—who plays to win, whatever the game. After-shave/cologne, $3.50. Soap on a rope, $2.50. 'Scoping' Provides Sexy Benefits

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

It was all timed very nicely.

The crowd of slightly drunken Alexander Residence Hall men left their beer blast last Friday night and congregated on the steps facing Winston, the girls' residence hall.

"A simulated panty raid," they called it, and after raising a little hell they expertly performed mock charges on Winston's doors.

The true intent was more sinister than the girls might have imaged.

"It's time for some 'scoping,' " the cry went out, and as the unknowing Winston girls dropped their occupations and went to their windows to investigate the racket, at least thirty eyes adjusted to lenses on Alexander's second and third floors.

The "show" began.

Scoping is a favorite pastime on campus, and the only tools of a scoper's trade are a watchful eye, a good vantage point, and an old pair of binoculars, a telescope or some field glasses.

From Alexander to Joynor, Conner to Columbia Street, Carolina gentlemen doff their inhibitions and become part - time peeping toms.

"Early in the evening the girls sometimes forget to pull down their shades," one rowdy fellow explained. "Sometimes we get some real good silhouettes."

"At the beginning of the year when it was hot we used to see a lot of good stuff," a student said. "One girl spent five minutes in front of the window drying herself off.

"Usually it happens so quickly that only one guy gets to see it," he said, "but this time we switched back and forth and even had a chance to talk about it."

Some male students claim the "novelty" has worn off, and the girls have gotten more careful since the beginning of school.

"The bathrooms are the only interesting things these days," a boy said. "The glass is frosted, but occasionally we see something."

Another said that when "scoping in" on a bathroom, it was best to get the girl when she took off her robe before stepping into the shower.

One connoiseur in Joynor praised the virtues of the "old dependables" in Cobb who never pull their shades down.

"You just wait until you see someone moving in a room and then you get your binoculars," he said.

One fraternity man took the trouble set up a massive telescope on a tripod in his room and trained it on Granville Hall, the new women graduate student's residence.

"The damned arthitect frosted the windows and made them too small," he lamented.

Despite the Winston housemother's claims to the contrary, Alexander and Conner men say the girls have been scoping in on them, too.

"The guy across the hall said he saw a girl on the first floor of Winston with a pair of binoculars looking at him," a graduate student said. "If they want to look, its all right with me."

One Alexander resident said that during the early fall football games between Winston girls and local male residents, some of the girls admitted they had peeped in a few times.

"We feel we have to put on a hooch show for them once and a while," an Alexander boy said. "I hope they appreciate it."

The coeds of Winston have hotly denied the charges against them, and one complained that Conner men should shade their windows.

"Its embarrassing to park your car, get out and see a beautiful bod in the window," a Winston girl said.

In spite of objections by some of the girls, everyone is waiting for the return of hot weather.

"It'll get too hot for them to keep their windows and shades closed," an Alexander resident said with a trace of lecherous glee.

Fourth Ranked Vandy Beats Tar Heels, 81-72

UNC Battles Down To Final Minutes

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

The Tar Heels displayed an overdose of courage and determination, but fell to the fense by a final score of 81-72, last night in Nashville.

The first half of last night's battle is easily described by cliches—a cliff hanger . . . beautiful . . . a see-saw battle . . . a real treat.

Carolina ran onto the court wth the opposing cheers of 5,000 screaming fans ringing in their ears. They started off cold and the Commodores burned red hot. Vandy's Keith Thomas, who is the proud owner of one of the finest outside shots in the country, hit from the middle. The Tar Heels met a really tough defense and tried endlessly for a shot that never came.

Then Vandy hit four quick baskets and it looked like the trip to Nashville was one better forgotten.

Finally Bob Lewis hit a pair and the Tar Heels began to relax. Vanderbilt, however, refused to cool off. Thomas hit two baskets and with 12:44 left in the half and the clock ticking, Vanderbilt lead by 10—14-4.

Carolina then began a long and determined comeback. It's culmination was reached after the Commodores lost the ball four straight times. The fourth was a steal by Larry Miller and after two free throws the score was locked up at 24 points each with 7:06 remaining.

The Tar Heels took the lead two times in the next four minutes.

In the second half the Vanderbilt squad didn't let up the pressure. Whenever Carolina made a mistake the ball was given up and victory inched its way out of reach.

All the Tar Heels struggled against the strength of Vandy's defense. All of the five blue uniformed players on the floor hit for baskets and they bounced from six to four and back to six points behind. But Vanderbilt found their openings faster and hit with more consistency.

Then mid way through the second half, Carolina had one final smell of victory. Yokley hit a jump shot from the outside. Lewis shot from the lane for his twenty-fifth point to make the score 62-58. Lee pushed a lay up through the strings and Lewis gave Carolina 3 quick points with 5:58 left in the game.

With three minutes remaining Lee grabbed a rebound and passed downcourt to Bo Wyenandt and his basket broke the back of the Carolina fighting effort.

Time became the Tar Heels' biggest opponent. Vanderbilt relaxed and Lee hit on a follwith two field goals. Vanderwith two field goals. anderbilt pulled away in the closing minutes and the crowds began chanting. "We're number one."

Clyde Lee made the most of his 6-9 frame and scored the final points of the game.

Bobby Lewis was the game's high scorer with 30 points. Lee had 21 and Wyenandt connected for 20. Keith Thomas' outside shot proved near perfect and earned him 14 points. Larry Miller was Carolina's second man with 14 to his credit.

When it was all over two things had been proved last night in Nashville. Vanderbilt is more than deserving of their number four ranking and Chapel Hill has a team to be proud of.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

EDITOR'S NOTE: Carolina Style, which usually runs in this column, will return Tuesday. It will be a five day a week feature in the DTH — Tuesday through Saturday.

Space Chase Begins Today

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON, Tex., — Gemini 7 pilot James Lovell sent a light signal to Earth yesterday — as the bearded astronauts headed for a world endurance mark, a church service and rendezvous with a sistership — all on a busy Sunday in space.

"I got her," shouted Air Force Lt. Col. Frank Borman, the command pilot as he jockeyed the Gemini 7 so Lovell could track the Earth light with his own light beam. Both pilots' voices burst with excitement.

Reds Encourage War Effort In Laos

TOKYO — The Communist Pathet Lao have been directed to launch a Viet Cong-style guerrilla war in Laos against what the Red leaders call "a dry season" offensive by forces of the Royal Laotian Army.

The directive from the Pathet Lao supreme command was carried in a broadcast dispatch of Peking's New China News Agency.

Laos' neutralist premier, Prince Souvanna Phouma, has accused North Viet Nam of sending regular army troops to Laos to fight with the Pathet Lao, led by his half-brother, Prince Souphanouvong. Laos is next door to Viet Nam.

The Communist directive claimed the Laotian Government was building up its forces for a drive against the Pathet Lao and all Red troops were ordered "to firmly smash the military attack and political sabotage launched by U. S. imperalism and its lackeys during the dry season."

Claiming the Pathet Lao has guerrillas through the country, the directive called on Communist forces to "raise vigilance, build hatred toward the enemy, foster a militant revolutionary spirit, master the combat strategy with the main stress on guerrilla warfare and the tactic of annihilating operations, and fight firmly."

Harsh Weather Racks Europe

LONDON — Gales, blizzards and floods hit widespread areas of Europe for the third straight day yesterday, causing death and damage in half a dozen countries.

Heavy snow blanketed Northern Italy and three fishermen were feared drowned as storms lashed the Italian coast.

In Britain, the rain-swollen river Thames subsided and Londoners relaxed a flood vigil. The river flooded homes and factories Friday and at one time threatened to flood the House of Commons while legislators were debating.

In other parts of Britain the situation was worse. The river Severn was running 17 feet above normal at Shrewsbury in the English midlands and flooded parts of the town. Troops helped ferry stranded office workers as the town suffered its second pre-Christmas flood in succession.

Fierce gales that have been battering the Dutch west coast moderated yesterday, but large areas of the country were left under flood water. At Stravoren, in Friesland Province, the body of an unidentified woman was washed ashore on Ijsel Lake.

Three deaths in England have been blamed on the wild weather.

The Rhine River was running 16 feet higher than normal near the German border. Floods were also reported in Belgium and throughout most of the low countries.

In Denmark, several jutland towns were flooded and rowboats were the only means of transport along flooded streets.

Fireball Mystifies UNC's Jenzano

By WAYNE HURDER
DTH Staff Writer

"Very Unusual."

That's how Anthony Jenzano, director of the Morehead Planetarium, describes the mysterious fireball that was seen from Pennsylvania to California. It rained meteorites all over the Midwest and started several small fires.

"When I first heard the report it sounded like it must have been a man-made object, like the nose cone of a rocket," he commented.

Usually meteors stop burning about 30 to 70 miles up and are cold when they reach the ground he said.

"It is very unusual for one to land and start fire."

According to Jenzano one piece was found about the size of a baseball and had a grayish metallic color.

"And," he said, "I have never seen a meteorite like that."

Two reputable scientists described the object as a fireball after hearing descriptions from people who had seen it. But he doubted their guess because "those things can play tricks on people's eyes." He said the eye can retain the image of the shooting star for a short time after it has gone out and make it seem like it is burning when it isn't.

He broke meteors down into three classes; the conventional meteor that cause shooting stars, the fireball, and the bolide, which explodes in the atmosphere.

The last two disintegrate and form meteors. The meteors start glowing about 30 to 40 miles up in the atmosphere.

According to Jenzano only the skin of the meteor burns; the inside never gets hot. When it hits the earth it it cold, which is why he can't understand how it could start fires.

He conjectured that with all the things the United States and Russians are putting into space, it shouldn't be unusual for something to come down in an uncalculated way.

He said the metal of rockets can retain heat better than a meteor and might explain the fires, if they were actually caused by the object.

But for the time being he felt the question of what it is up for grabs until a lot of investigation had been done.

Sophomores Seek Assistance

Anyone interested in applying for a sophomore class committee position and who was not able to come by Graham Memorial for interviews, is asked to call the president Bill Long, at 418 Ehringhaus, 929-6030, or to contact any of the officers before next Thursday.

Positions are open on the social, finance, publicity, planning, communications and secretariat committees.

K Leader's Wife: 'We Won't Come'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Mrs. J. Robert Jones, wife of the North Carolina Grand Dragon, said no Klansmen will appear at the Weltner Carolina Forum speech Monday "to my knowledge."

"As far as I know, there have been no preparations for the speech by any member of the Klan," she said. "In fact, my husband thought Weltner had already been to Chapel Hill."

Federal officials had said they heard of threats from Jones to embarrass and heckel the congressmen from Georgia who voted for the 1964 Civil Rights bill.

Weltner will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in Memorial Hall on the Klan's "invisible empire."

Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake said he had been "contacted by officials about a month or so ago," but he would not identify them.

Campus Security head Arthur Beaumont said:

"Much of what I've heard is from George Nicholson (forum chairman). I haven't officially heard from federal officials.

"We are taking just normal precautions," he continued. "There will be policemen there to direct traffic, but I don't expect any trouble.

"People made the same fuss when people like Martin Luther King and Governor Barnett (the Mississippi segregationist) appeared."

He said he has "so much confidence in our students I expect no trouble from them whatsoever."

Pete Young, the WRAL-TV newsman who has called the Klansmen "our brothers," said earlier this month:

"I hope that the Klan will not heckel and embarrass Congressman Weltner. I for one, want to hear what Weltner has to say."

Nicholson told The Daily Tar Heel Friday that a Klan intermediary has asked him to reserve "50 to 60" seats for Klan members at Weltner's speech.

The Klansmen reportedly were to form their own "hooting section" during the forum.

Cameras from nine North Carolina television stations and two Atlanta stations will broadcast the congressman's speech, which will be preceded by the controversial CBS documentary on the Klan.

The panel discussion is being sponsored by the YMCA Human Relations Committee as well as by the Forum.

Student Cuts Recording

A folksinging UNC student has turned producer and cut a 12 - inch LP album titled "Devil's Child," recorded on the Inner Records label.

Dave Jones, who spent last summer touring the United States and Canada singing and lecturing at many mid-western universities and nightclubs, wrote all 16 songs on the album.

Accompanying himself on the 12 - string, Jones displays a great variety of styles — from stomping, driving bottleneck blues to intricate finger picking instrumentals and deep moving ballads.

During his summer tour he played to, among others, Lynda Baines Johnson, as well as numerous college audiences.

Producer of the record, Chris Munger, a UNC student from Lexington, Va., said the record will be on sale at Kemps and the Record Bar later this week. Cost is $3.95.

Phi Delta Kappa

Patrick W. Carlton, vice president of the Beta Theta chapter of Phi Delta Kappa graduate men's educational fraternity will represent NC at the 30th biennial council of PDK to be held from December 28-30 at the University of Oklahoma.

Carlton graduated from North Carolina in 1954. He is attending UNC on a Southern Education Foundation Fellowship. Carlton held a Fulbright Teaching Fellowship to Turkey in 1963.

Right To Bear Arms

"Should the right of the people to keep and bear arms as guaranteed by the Constitution be repealed" will be the topic of a public debate 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Di-Phi Senate chambers on the third floor of New West.

All interested students are invited to speak, and refreshments will be served at the close of the meeting.

The lead speakers for the negative and affirmative sides of the topic have not been announced.

Hormel To Interview

Dean James C. Hormel of the University of Chicago Law School will be at UNC tomorrow to interview students interested in attending law school.

Students who desire an appointment with Dean Hormel should sign up for an appointment at the Placement Service, 211 Gardner Hall.

Planning Department

Student Government has added a Department of Long Range Planning to its other five departments.

Committees in the department will be for Curriculum, Student Mental Health, Cultural Programs, Opportunities for Outstanding Students, and the Problem of the Expanding University.

President Paul Dickson will hold interviews for department head and chairmen of these committees tomorrow through Wednesday from 2-5 p.m. Anyone wishing an interview should phone student government for an appointment.

To Sing Messiah

The Raleigh Oratorio Society will sing George Friederich Handel's "Messiah" Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Raleigh Memorial Auditorium.

James M. Chamblee of Chapel Hill will direct the performance. In addition to the often performed Christmas section (Part I), the choral group will also sing Parts II and III, telling the complete story of the birth and death of the Messiah.

The Society's 55-voice chorus will be augmented by a chamber orchestra and harpsichord, giving an authentic Baroque rendition of the oratorio.

Circulo Hispanico

Bill McFadden was elected president of the Circulo Hispanico at a meeting last Wednesday.

Ronald Miller was picked to be vice president, Stewart Rosen to be treasurer and Lucy Reed to be secretary.

Teh club was organized to offer students an opportunity to hear and speak Spanish and to learn about the cultures of Spanish speaking countries.

The club presents a lecture and discussion monthly.

Intramurals

Old East and the Mangum Mugs set up a showdown for the residence hall tag football title with convincing wins over their opponents Friday.

Old East waltzed by the Alexander Poobahs, 21-0. Dave McFadden's touchdown gave Old East a 6-0 halftime lead. Jim Poore and Ron Lowe added TD's in the second half. John Clower chipped in with a safety.

Mangum jumped off to a 19-0 halftime lead and coasted to a 32-6 victory over Avery No. 1. Joe Dunn and Bob Carter were the stars for Mangum with two touchdowns each. Reg Simpson helped out with another one. Tony Nicholson salvaged something for Avery with his score. The teams will meet next Wednesday to decide the championship.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

Happiness Is A Motorcycle

Happiness, to many students, is a motorcycle.

The initial cost of a small cycle is low, they get fantastic gas mileage, they can be parked in little places, they move as fast as the law allows (some of them much faster) and they do not now require a 2.0 grade average or upperclass standing for ownership.

Today there are 450 motorcycles on campus, double the number registered at the end of last year. Undoubtedly a number of Christmas stockings will contain Hondas this year, so the motorcycle population will continue to increase.

Because they are so new, most people have not yet adjusted to the motorcycles emotionally. They are still toys and novelties to far too many owners and automobile-driving spectators.

Dr. Ed Hedgpeth, head of the student infirmary, said the number of accidents involving motorcycles has been averaging one a day for more than a month.

"Surprisingly enough, most of the injuries aren't head injuries," he said.

This tends to indicate that a cycle ride should not consider a crash helment to be a security blanket.

"Most of the serious injuries have been bad fractures and abrasions about the face. I just don't know what we can do to cut down the number of accidents," Hedgpeth said.

Perhaps it is a matter of attitude. Car drivers tend to ignore the little two-wheeled buzzers in traffic, often turning in front of cycles and taking chances they would not take against a truck. Many cycle riders are hardly better because they use the versatile vehicles irresponsibly, riding on sidewalks and taking shortcuts where only pedestrians belong.

Until both users and watchers realize that the two-wheelers are indeed motor vehicles, and respect them as such, they accident rate will continue to be high and our record of no motorcycle fatalities on campus will inevitably be broken.

DTH Awards Of The Week

Loser of the Week: James Robert Jones, stripped of his driver's license because he was nabbed speeding twice within less than a year. Grand Dragon Jones says he still lacks a little more than half the trading stamps needed to get an airplane, so he will have to find a chauffeur. "I drive about 200,000 miles a year, so maybe it had to happen," Jones said.

Best Protest of the Week: Anti-slacks rule protest at the University of California at Berkeley. Coeds wore slacks — under skirts and dresses — to dinner in protest of the rule against female slacks in the dining hall.

Legal Break-through of the Week: County prosecutor's ruling that prostitutes cannot be arrested for walking Atlanta's streets. Chief Prosecutor Louis Slaton decided that arrests made under an old statute prohibiting "prostitutes, or women of lewd character from walking streets, alleys or other public thoroughfares" might be unconstitutional and should be stopped.

Driver of the Week: Roanoke Rapids woman who failed her test for a driver's permit. She did fine until she tried to park. The car jumped the curb, knocked down a parking meter, damaged the car $100 and sprained the wrist of the license examiner riding with her.

Quote of the Week: UNC sophomore who got his 18-year-old sister's name on his list of "perfect dates" from Operation Match. "I asked for a girl with sexual experience — she must have lied on her questionnair."

Don't Do Away With 'Dixie'

Shall the familiar strains of "Dixie" be heard no more? The North Carolina State Technician would like to see Dan Emmett's famous tune follow the dodo bird and the New York Mets into oblivion. I believe that the Technician is carrying a desire to atone for past sins too far.

That the South has sinned against the Negro is indisputable. I know no one who would defend slavery. But nothing we do or fail to do today can change what has happened. We cannot forget the past, even if we want to.

Nor should we. The Technician said "Dixie" is a "remnant of the 19th century which has no place in the 20th." The writers of that editorial are correct when they say the song is a remnant of the 19th century. They are dead wrong when they say it has no place in the 20th.

Like trees, people need roots to grow. A tree has its roots in the ground; a man has his in the past. We can only grow and improve on the basis of what has gone before. The danger comes when we live entirely in the past and refuse to grow or change at all.

"Dixie" is a reminder of the Southern past. And what of that past? Is it something to be hidden, to be remembered only with guilt? I don't think so. The Southern past was not all slavery. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson were slaveholders, but I don't believe the Technician would advocate consigning the Father of our Country and the author of the Declaration of Independence to obscurity.

Washington and Jefferson are part of the past that is represented by "Dixie." So are James Madison, Patrick Henry, and Robert E. Lee. Should their memories "die a welcome, and none too swift, death," too? Before telling the South to forget its past, the Technician should consider these men, among others.

"Dixie" represents the fighting spirit of the South, and perhaps this is what the editorial objects to. Should this spirit then be quenched? The South has fought some tragic battles some it perhaps should not have fought. Little Rock and Oxford deserve no cheers.

Yet that same fighting spirit has been at Yorktown, New Orleans, Belleau Wood, Normandy, and Viet Nam. Yes, and at Gettysburg, too. The South has no reason to feel ashamed for the Civil War. The men in gray fought for what they believed in. Before one condemns them on the moral basis of slavery, he should check into Northern attitudes toward Negroes in 1860.

The cry for the abolition of "Dixie" is another manifestation of hypersensitivity on the subject of offending Negroes. This feeling has also shown itself in attempts to remove "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" from library shelves. "Almost n Andy" from the airwaves. Even the Federal government felt the sting of resentment when the Moynihan Report on Negro problems received a cold reception from Negro civil rights leaders. It is hard to avoid offending someone who is looking to be offended.

The South has much to be ashamed of in its treatment of the Negro. This fact cannot be ignored or denied. But the past cannot be wiped away by wiping away one of its products, and a harmless one at that.

NEW YEAR'S DAY ON THE ROAD — Classes resume after the Christmas vacation on Jan. 3. This is the standard date for the return to the books. Has he Administration of UNC — or of many other schools, for that matter — considered the logistics involved in being back at school at 8 a.m. on Jan. 3?

Students who live within one day's drive of Chapel Hill have no problem. Students who live farther away do have one. If they drive home and back, they face three alternatives for the return trip. They can start back on New Year's Day; they can start back on Jan. 2 and drive all night, or they can start on Jan. 2 and cut classes on Jan. 3.

None of these are particularly attractive choices. The first is the one most students will probably choose. This means driving on New Year's Day, probably after a long night out. The hazards of a hungover driver with little or no sleep driving on frozen roads are obvious.

Why not delay the start of classes to Jan. 4? One day more or less can't hurt the academic program very much, and an extra day would give all students a day to rest and recover before beginning the long trip back.

Quarterly Has Bad Fiction

The new Carolina Quarterly is out. If you want to lose all your enthusiasm for modern fiction, try reading it.

The two short stories in the Quarterly are masterpieces of dynicism and depression. They all achieve the highest ideal of pop art: they violate every rule in the book.

Fiction is supposed to move and talk about something interesting. Each of the Quarterly stories just sits still and talks about itself — a dull, dull subject.

Good fiction is supposed to weave many threads into an intricate pattern. Neither of the Quarterly authors took the trouble to be coherent, much less to create a work of art. One of the stories establishes a situation, proceeds to weep about it for a few pages and then quits.

The other story is totally incomprehensible, save to the Initiate Few. Try this paragraph from Robert Brown's "Coming Home Baby":

"I don't know how to tell this on her because this one KNOWS way beyond hipness and flys her own kind of flag. Flapping now it seems more challenging than the banner McCarthy once hung out for all of us . . . It's knowing what's to be done just like in those old war movies when the submerged U-boat is discovered and automatically the Destroyer executed that wild maneuver which nearly capsizes her as she lays over on her side . . . But the truth is I'm just here and she's in. That's the scene, not because I failed but because she is strong, strong."

Well, I guess that's what we get for abandoning the art of writing to the beatniks.

Maybe the Quarterly editors and authors will insist that the new style of fiction reflects our unsettled times — that it must be confused and depressing if it is to be a mirror of our culture.

Now I ask you. What's the good of mirroring our culture? We all see it everyday, and we all know how confused it often seems. The mark of a good writer is the ability to take a small, confused lump of human life and work it and work it until it makes sense.

That's what makes you feel satisfied when you read a short story and all the parts suddenly click and fall together. That takes sweat, skill — and maybe a little human sympathy. Any fool can write a depressing story simply by writing poorly.

Good writers — and great writers — don't preach the doctrine of despair. No modern writer has more cause for bitterness than did Dostoevsky — a man who spent a great part of his life as a convict. Yet Dostoevsky's own experiences seem only to have developed in him a passion for delving through misery and despair to find human warmth and hope.

Our great American writers are gone. Hemingway's gone, Faulkner's gone. The tradition of American fiction has gone to the beatniks by default rather than by rightful inheritance.

And that's sad. It's sad when such stuff as the two short stories in the Carolina Quarterly pass off as art.

A View from The Hill

A high-placed University official announced yesterday that the singing of Dixie and the display of Confederate flags would no longer be permitted on the UNC campus.

The new policy was prompted by a similar decision at the University of West Virginia, an editorial in the N. C. State Technician, and a warning from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

A spokesman from the Southern Association stated there was a move afoot to withdraw accreditation from the University if such practices were not banned from the Chapel Hill campus.

"There is no place at a free university — the very citadel of enlightened discussion and dissent — for the proliferation of such distasteful philosophies," declared Dr. Millard S. Farquar for the Southern Association. "College students are basically naive and cannot be expected to resist the emotional appeal of inflammatory songs such as "Dixie."

"We are, furthermore, distressed that certain elements on the Carolina campus have been known to grow beards in commemoration of the Southern Rebellion," Dr. Farquar said. "We do not object to beards, PROVIDED they are grown as part of a legitimate protest. We cannot, however, condone these underhanded tributes to the past."

"If certain fraternities do not finalize their fearsome and flagrant flagwaving," he said, "we shall be forced to formulate a fierce finish for their fanatic fiction."

Miss Rachel Horstblankitt, secretary of the group, released a statement to the press at a meeting late yesterday. The Committee expressed delight that "the enemies of Free Speech have, at long last, been silenced forever. Our right to dissent will no longer be obstructed by people who disagree with us."

Also present at the meeting was Dr. Loomis Lipslip of the Political Science Department who read a paper entitled, "An Enlightened Critique of the Dialogue of Hominy Grits in the context of the Consensus Society."

After the meeting, the group marched down Franklin Street and staged a vigorous protest at the home of Colonel Sander's Kentucky Fried Chicken.

At about 9 o'clock the throng converged on a local fraternity house which flies the Confederate flag.

"Down with the traitors! Down with the traitors!" chanted the students.

The demonstrators were promptly dispersed at 9:07 when several empty bottles of Southern Comfort apparently fell from a window ledge on the third floor.

Fraternity president, Jordan Darker, was unavailable for comment.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. Viet War Is Necessary

By JOHN E. HARRISON
President, Di-Phi Senate

It has come to my attention that a number of students here at Carolina have taken my remarks at the last Di & Phi meeting amiss. I would therefore like to clarify my personal position on the war now in progress in Viet Nam.

I am categorically in favor of the President's policies in South East Asia at this time. I also feel that the ports of North Viet Nam should be blockaded and any other offensive action necessary to win this war should be undertaken by this country in concert with her allies, until North Viet Nam ceases her aggression to the South.

Next let me state that I did not say that the students here at Carolina were apathetic. I said that many students are reluctant to voice and explain their positions on this war; except for a few stock phrases and rhetorical questions with which they answer every attack on the present course of the war in Viet Nam.

We sent a telegram, which I signed, to General Westmoreland, expressing our thanks for the sacrifices being made by our troops in Viet Nam. But this emasculated epistle neglected to mention whether or not we thought these sacrifices were necessary or even whether the goal of freedom was worth the price. I think that it is!

In a democracy, or rather as ours is in a republic, the government is subject to the wishes of the people like no other. We must exercise our right and responsibility as citizens to make absolutely clear our position, not only to our own government but also to that of the enemy. We must disabuse Ho Chi Minh of his country's delusions of infallibility in guerrilla warfare.

The United States has never in its history lost a war, guerrilla or otherwise. If you want examples of our winning a guerrilla war, check the first phase of the Seminole Indian War of 1836, or more recently the United States victory over the Communist Huks in the Phillippines. Our history is replete with such examples, and it is my fervent hope that the war in Viet Nam will soon be added to the positive side of this ledger.

As has been said repeatedly by the leaders of our country, the communists' only hope lies in the possibility of a deterioration of our country's will to resist their aggression. We must emphasize our commitment to the fight for freedom now being waged in our name by the American Armed Forces in Viet Nam.

This is a war that we must win for an almost infinite number of reasons, two of the most important of which are: (1) We had our Munich in Laos, and if we are to stop the communist advance it must be here, for if we wait any longer it will be too late. (2) We cannot justify in any other way the sacrifices of our troops, unless freedom is secured for the people that America has promised it to.

I propose that a drive be started here at Carolina, as has been done at other universities, to give the blood necessary to partially replace the blood which our Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen are now shedding in defense of our way of life.

This is the answer to the question of what we can do for our country. We can support her; we can defend her; and we can show, not just say our love of this land that is ours and Freedom's home.

Reapportionment Studied

RALEIGH (AP) — A tentative reapportionment plan being studied by North Carolina House members would give the Piedmont and bordering counties control of the House of Representatives.

The plan, a knowledgeable source said yesterday, would reduce the representation from far western and eastern counties, cutting the House membership from a dozen northeastern counties from 12 to four.

The plan was drafted by a 16-member committee and has been distributed to the 120 members of the House for study. House Speaker Pat Taylor has indicated the plan will be made public tomorrow.

Under the tentative plan, 33 counties in the Piedmont would gain 12 seats in the House. Currently, the counties have 50 representatives.

If the tentative plan is adopted by a special session of the General Assembly, the counties in the Piedmont and along its border would have 62 House members — or a majority.

CU Tutoring Programs Help Image Of Students

Volunteer tutoring programs at all four branches of the Consolidated University are demonstrating how helpful and community-oriented North Carolina's college students are.

These tutoring centers work in a social and educational setting with elementary and high school children who don't achieve as highly as they could, and try to get these children interested in education.

Right now 3 programs (Charlotte University tutors are just beginning their service) have about 350 volunteer student tutors helping over 700 children from 1st grad up through high school.

Michael H. Lawler, coordinator for Youth Educational Services, (YES) a newly formed consulting service for college-based tutoring services throughout the state, explains why these tutoring services are purposely centered around colleges:

"College students have a high sense of community progress. Where they used to be thought of as lazy and passive, they are now getting concern for the state and its people. The students are extremely enthusiastic about these projects, and readily take on the responsibilities that go with them. Also, the kids being helped feel much closer to college age people."

YES began last September, when it received grants totalling $30,000 from the Ford Foundation, the North Carolina Fund and the Learning Institute of North Carolina. Its headquarters at the Quail Roose Conference Center 12 miles north of Durham was also given to it by the Learning Institute.

Beer on the rocks?

(Oh, no!)

The other day, for the first time, our brewmaster heard of "beer-on-the-rocks." He fell apart.

He really doesn't have anything against ice cubes . . . for scotch or old-fashioneds or lemonade. But not for beer. Especially the King of Beers.

You see, he knows how much extra time and expense it takes to get that Budweiser® taste and smoothness and drinkability. Add a couple of ice cubes and "bloop"... there goes all that extra effort.

Ice cuts down the head and waters down the taste. And, with Budweiser, that's a tragedy. Budweiser is the only beer in America that's Beechwood Aged. We allow Bud to brew its own tiny bubbles . . . slowly, naturally . . . over a dense lattice of beechwood strips. That's why Budweiser tastes better, foams better and sets better—glass after glass.

So if you know somebody who likes to plunk ice cubes in his Budweiser, please don't tell our brewmaster. (We hate to see a grown man cry.)

it's worth it...it's Bud.®

Rhine Speaks About ESP

By ALMA MEADS
Special to the DTH

A woman having dinner at a friend's house suddenly declared that she must go home.

How could she have known this? "Nobody knows," according to Dr. J. H. Rhine, who spoke in Hill Hall Thursday evening. Rhine, an expert in extrasensory perception (ESP), is the founder of the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke.

He told of a pregnant woman's husband who lost his hand working in the mines. "My baby will be born with that hand missing," the woman panicked. When the baby was born the hand was missing.

In another case, the 32-year-old Ellers twins, who had never been separated, were put in separate wards in a hospital for examination. They both died the same night from no apparent cause.

The fiance of a Duke student in Italy during the war dreamed that his hair had all turned white. She wrote and told him of this, and received the reply that it was true.

An elderly gentleman was awakened night after night by the sound of wagon wheels. Getting up and going to the window he never discovered any traces of a wagon until one night the body of his father was brought home in it.

Two pictures secured to the wall "broke loose" and fell to the floor. The woman of the house saw in them the death of her mother. Shortly the phone rang and confirmed this.

Each of the people in these cases related by Dr. Rhine knew that something was wrong but they did not know they knew it.

Extrasensory perception as a science began when these spontaneous experiences occurring to individuals through none of the five senses could be explained by none of the known sciences.

The study of the various forms of ESP—telepathy (extrasensory knowledge of another person's thoughts or mental states), clairvoyance (extrasensory knowledge of things or events), precognigion (foreknowledge), and psycho-kinesis ("mind over matter")—was begun to solve these puzzls.

One of his early investigations was of a young ministerial student who showed consistency in his guessing of 119 cards when no more than 60 would have passed as chance. The odds were 1 to 100 trillion.

'Two subjects have to be dealt with in telepathy tests," said Dr. Rhine, "and the tests are not as convincing, so I don't do as much major study on it. This is a favorite experimental field in Russia because they think it will be the easiest to find physical connections with."

A student working his way through school by dice-throwing showed Dr. Rhine that this could be a good method of testing for psycho-kinesis.

"The important element in all these tests is repition," explained Dr. Rhine, "in order to disprove coincidence."

The pioneer in his field said it has been a long struggle separating these forms of extrasensory perception and establishing their occurrence, but it is done and he leaves the unsolved questions for others to puzzle over.

The author of such books as The Reach of the Mind, New World of the Mind, and New Frontiers of the Mind established the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke in 1935 which really launched the extensive research into this field.

"Do you have extrasensory perception?" a student asked Dr. Rhine.

"Yes, and so do you," was the answer.

The one who calls his friend on the telephone while the friend is looking up his number; the people one unexpectedly meets in strange places after thinking of them—"chance coincidence" is a convenient answer - but is it really?

'...Meet The Nicest People...'

Editor's Note: Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake has given a general endorsement to the motorcycle safety recommendations offered by Tex McGill, owner of the Travel-On Motorcycle Company.

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

So your daddy promised you a motorcycle for Christmas after you convinced him that "you meet the nicest people on Honzukis." What's next?

Tex McGill, owner of one of Chapel Hill's motorcycle shops, suggests buying a cycle under 150 c.c., "if you're interested in using it only on campus.

"This is the cheapest type in operation. It gets up to 200 miles per gallon.

"But if a person wants to ride long distances," he said, a larger bike is better.

"And there are special cycles for farming or hunting. One of our ads even shows a bike that can be used to round up cattle."

McGill said the price for bikes in Chapel Hill starts at $240 and continues up to $1,274.

He thinks the three major considerations to take into account before purchasing the cycles are:

—What purpose you have in mind.

—How much you can afford to invest in one (taking into mind the resale value).

—Dollar-for-dollar value of the model within the brand you're choosing (for instance, the parts' availability and the warranty should be compared with those of other cycles)."

He said most dealers will provide financing but the most inexpensive way is to pay cash because of what he considers unnecessary fire, theft and collision insurance requirements of the finance companies.

But the state of North Carolina insists all motorcycles have liability insurance before they may be licensed, McGill pointed out.

He continued: "The state regulates the rates, which are about $70 for the average student if the bike is under 300 pounds—and that covers about 80 percent of the cycles here.

"The rate's one-half of what it would be for an automobile."

He said you should go the Chapel Hill Merchant's Association on Franklin Street to get license plates after purchasing insurance.

Mc Gill explained that most students can learn to ride the bikes in 10 minutes, "but those 10 minutes should be spent with a qualified instructor."

He hopes cyclists will make a valid attempt to keep their machines as quiet as possible when traveling through town to enhance motorcycling's image and save themselves public disapproval.

"Use a muffler that works properly," he says.

Common sense is "the key to safety," according to McGill. "The bike is only as safe as its driver."

He advised cyclists to be cautious when turning corners lined with sand, loose gravel or wet leaves. "And constantly be on the lookout for drivers pulling out from parking spaces and side streets.

"Also, don't follow cars too closely, in case they make sudden stops."

McGill said safety helmets are "very advisable. When a person's wearing one, he's using good judgment; he's getting a little extra insurance.

He recommends that brakes, lights, horns, tires, suspension and engine be "maintained in top mechanical condition. This is important from a resale as well as a safety standpoint.

"And keep your cycle clean. If it is dirty, you won't be able to determine the need for repairs as easily as you could otherwise."

McGill said the ancient adage of the road—"If you drink, don't drive"—does not apply just to the drivers of four-wheel vehicles.

He agrees with the Chapel Hill Police Department that the bikes should be "governed under the same laws regulating automobiles.

"That means you don't run stop streets, you don't ride your bike on the sidewalk and definitely you don't squeeze between cars in traffic.

"Obey the speed laws," he warned. "If you get caught, it's expensive. The police department here is on the job; speed limits are highly enforced.

"Very seldom do you ever pay less than a $10 fine and a $13.30 court cost if you're convicted for a traffic violation.

"Many times, in fact, the expense is considerably more than that amount, and each conviction costs the cyclist loss of points on his license.

"This in turn increased his liability insurance rate."

And goggles?. "They are a good innovation for eye protection as well as for making riding more comfortable.

"Signal your intention to turn," he said, "for those behind you.

"Don't hesitate to make sudden stops if they are necessary for safety. Contrary to popular opinion, you won't get thrown off the handle bars."

McGill siad the bike and the rider are "a single unit—an extension of your own limbs" — because of its weight."

He added: "If you're new at cycling, please practice your skills on a lonely road for the benefit of all concerned."

No Evaluation Booklet This Year

There will be no course evaluation booklet this year, Bill Wall said today.

"Last year's publication was a pilot project," he said. "No plans were made for continuing publication."

There will be a publication next year. Last year's student legislature placed the project in the hands of the Publication Board.

An editor and editorial staff will be hired sometime after Christmas vacation.

The questionaires currently being passed around have no connection with the course evaluation project, Wall said.

Results of these questionaires are made known only to the instructor.

Wall said no booklet was published this year because the Academic Affairs Committee could not handle both the instructor evaluation project and the course evaluation project in one semester.

Research should have been made last semester if there was to be a publication this year, he said.

Discount Rate No Cause For Worry

"Foreign commercial bankers and central bankers may be reading more into the Federal Reserve's discount rate boost than is warranted," said Dr. James L. Knipe, visiting banking specialist in North Carolina's School of Business Administration, speaking on the reaction abroad as well as influence at home of the interest hike.

Knipe, former consultant to William McChesney Martin of the FRB, is author of "The Federal Reserve and the American Dollar", published by the University of North Carolina Press.

He has been appraising the reaction of FRB chairman Martin's increase in the discount rate, and the sharing of the stage with President Lyndon Johnson in the LBJ-Martin exploration of the meaning of the Martin act to the national and international economies, particularly with reference to possible inflation.

"One of the most interesting things about this discount rate episode," said Knipe, "is the difference between the way the rate is regarded here and abroad.

"In the United States, where member commercial banks borrow very little from the Federal Reserve, the raise of ½ of 1% really means nothing as a cost factor to most banks.

"In Europe, on the other hand, a central bank's discount rate is much more important. It actually affects many commercial banks' costs and, more to the point, is regarded as a clear signal of a switch in basic policy.

the Federal Reserve's lifting of the rate as a fore-shadowing of a truly tightened policy, put into effect through the open market, then they are most likely about 90 per cent wrong.

"The four members of the Federal Reserve Board who voted for the raise almost certainly could not turn the larger body, the Federal Open Market Committee, toward a truly restrictive policy.

"Therefore, this discount rate hike is not a signal for any substantial alteration of the extremely easy credit and monetary policy, unless and until inflation gathers quite a bit more speed."

Mighty Mo Or Maverick House–Who's No. One

By ALLEN WARREN
DTH Staff Writer

Out beyond Kenan Stadium, facing each other across Manning Dr., sit two massive brick buildings which faintly resemble Howard Johnson motels.

Morrison Residence College (Mighty Mo) and Craige Residence College (Maverick House) are close neighbors, but that is about as far as the closeness goes. Between these two, the largest residence buildings on campus, there is a hard-fought battle going on to establish which is number one among campus student housing institutions.

Last year, Craige was the undisputed leader. This was due mainly to the late Roger Davis's creation, "Maverick House."

Craige initiated such things as dorm nightclubs, cowboy hats, motorcycle rallies, and the famous gong and in doing so, developed a completely new concept of dormitory social life. It seemed that Craige would be the undisputed "number one" indefinately.

But this year brought the revolutionary residence college system, and Morrison reared its 10-story head across the street and set out right away to prove that the old adage, "The bigger, the better," was true.

Morrison incorporated many of Craige's ideas and came up with a few of its own. Not only did it have its own night-club, for example, but it included Go-Go girls.

Architectually, the two buildings are almost identical, the main difference being that Morrison is three stories higher and houses 1021 men to Craige's 713.

Morrison has a social room on each floor. This allows for a greater unity among the men on a floor than is possible at Craige. Using this advantage and its larger number of participants, Morrison is attempting to accomplish in one year what Craige did in three.

The rivalry sometimes causes problems for the residence advisors in both buildings who are trying to maintain quiet study periods, but overall, the war has been fairly bloodless. Except for perhaps the "gong incidence," in which several Morrison residents borrowed Craige's beloved football gong and returned it in a rather uncomplimentary fashion.

Russell Perry, manager of residence halls, says, "This rivalry is a real good thing, as long as it is kept in bounds. This kind of spirit is a vital factor in the resident college system."

Perry says that upon entering these two halls, he can sense a feeling of pride which is missing in other campus residence institutions.

Chuck Longino, Morrison house master, who was housemaster of Craige last year, has been in a position to observe the happenings in both buildings.

"Everybody said it couldn't be done. They couldn't believe so many people could have the spirit to get on their feet in their first year."

Longino says Craige suffered two years from apathy but had a tremendous surge under the leadership of Davis. Morrison has accomplished almost as much in one semester. The reason for this, according to Longino, is good organization.

Longino says that Craige is still the leader of dormitories, but now that it has become a resident college it must learn from Morrison. While Craige was a great innovator in dorm concepts, Morrison has a head start on the residence college level.

The chief difference is identification. In a dormitory a man learns to identify with his dormitory. In the college system he must not only identify with his house, but also with the whole college.

Craige has a great deal of identity with "Maverick House," but not with each each floor, which will now become houses in Craige Residence College. Morrison's problem is exactly the opposite, it had immediate house identification, but must develop identification with the college.

UNC Students Are 'Forgetful'

Court Needs Help

By RICK STOFF
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina students have been forgetting to appear in court on the days specified by their traffic violations according to Recorder's Court Judge L.J. Phipps.

Judge Phipps, along with Roy Cole, prosecuting attorney, and B.J. Hward, court clerk, urge Carolina students to recognize the limits and the requirements of the existing law and court procedures in Chapel Hill.

The major reason for the concern of these town officers is the fact that the students who had minor violations or tickets were cited to appear in court at nine a.m. and have failed to appear on the date set for the trial.

Students have the perogative of settling minor cases before noon the day before the trial by pleading guilty and paying their fine and court costs.

Even if the student decides to settle his case out of court through the clerk's office he must pay court costs as specified by law.

If the student decides to enter a plea of not guilty he must appear in court on the day set for his trial and wait for his case to come up on the calendar, which is the order of cases to be tried for that date.

If the defendant is found guilty he may pay his fine and his court costs following the trial to the court clerk, or during that week from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

If a person does not appear on the requested date Campus Police Chief Beaumont serves a warrant and takes the charged person to jail to post bond to insure his appearance in court.

'This undesirable action has caused a great deal of inconvenience for students in the past, because the warrants can be served at any time," Phipps said.

Most tickets are issued for minor traffic violations resulting from a misunderstanding of some of the finer points of the law.

Cole mentioned the law stating that cars or motor bikes must yield the right of way to any pedestrians crossing the street between the white lines marking a pedestrian crossing.

Phipps said that state law requires that all motor vehicles be equipped with mufflers which prevent the vehicles from emitting loud noise. The extent of this law is based on judgement of the police officers.

Phipps said the city ordinance against the display of beer or any intoxicating beverages in public including streets, public buildings or on private property which can be easily seen from the street is construed to be an open display of intoxicating beverages.

There is a city ordinance against loud and unnecessary noises between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. such as Frat combos late into the night. The law has not been enforced strictly unless there is a complaint.

Judge Phipps noted two fall innovations in Chapel Hill for traffic control.

The first of these changes is the new parking spaces provided for motor bikes in the downtown area. Many cyclists have broken the law by crossing the white line in the middle of Franklin St. to get into a parking space. Phipps said the cyclists could walk their bikes to the pedestrian walks when turning around.

The second change is the newly situated pedestrian crossing lanes. Students and others are breaking the law by crossing in between these lanes and causing traffic to yield at all points in the block.

Phipps urged the students to realize that, "Any criminal offenses could effect some future involvement, professional license, motor vehicle insurance or military service.

"Students have been brought to court on all offenses and the court has tried to cooperate with, and help, these students but our main complaint is that the students do not show up at the right times for their trial and sometimes they do not show up at all," Phipps said.

Conservative Club Lecture Wednesday

The Carolina Conservative Club will present Dr. Ludwig von Mises in a lecture on "The Problem of Private Property" at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Gerrard Hall.

Dr. von Mises, a well-known economist, was born in Lemberg, Austria, and received his doctorate in 1906 from the University of Vienna. He was professor there until 1938 when Nazi persecution forced him to leave.

Becoming naturalized in the U. S. in 1946, he has since been visiting professor of economics at New York University. He is author of The Theory of Money and Credit, Socialism, Omnipotent Government and Human Action.

A 6 p.m. dinner honoring Dr. von Mises will be held at The Pines preceding the lecture.

Historical Conference

Professor C. M. Foust, of UNC, is the chairman of an important session on "Russian - American Convergence in the Pacific area" at the meeting of the American Historical Association in San Francisco.

A seminar will be held Wednesday, Dec. 29, at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel. Some 300 historians are expected for the 80th annual conference.

The society is meeting on the west coast for the first time since 1915. Twenty - six smaller groups will meet during the three-day conference.

The effect of Russia on history will receive particular attention during the meeting. Four sessions are devoted to varying aspects of Russian influence, including the one headed by Foust.

THE BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS HAS FLOWN THE COOP

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery.

I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Knut Fusco.

Knut, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A," was awarded his B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, his M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and his D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Cutworms) in only four.

Academic glory was his. His intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was he happy? The answer, alas, was no. Knut—he knew not why—was miserable; so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, he was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that he flung himself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by, a liberal arts coed named Nikki Sigafoos came by with her Barby doll. She noted Knut's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said Nikki.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Knut peevishly.

"All right, I will," said Nikki. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy stuffing your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

Knut shook his head.

"Have you ever watched a sunset? Written a poem? Shaved with a Personna Stainless Steel Blade?"

Knut shook his head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now," said Nikki, and gave him a razor, a Personna Stainless Steel Blade, and a can of Burma Shave.

Knut lathered with the Burma Shave and shaved with the Personna and for the first time in many long years he smiled. He smiled and then he laughed—peal after peal of reverberating joy. "Wow-dow!" he cried. "What a shave! Does Personna come in injector style, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Gloriosky!" cried Knut. "And does Burma Shave come in menthol, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Huzzah!" cried Knut. "Now that I have found Personna and Burma Shave I will never have another unhappy day."

"Hold!" said Nikki. "Personna and Burma Shave alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Knut. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said Nikki.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Knut. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said Nikki and removed it.

"Land's sakes, what a relief!" said Knut, now totally happy, and took Nikki's hand and led her to a Personna vendor and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Knut is a perfectly fulfilled man, both intellectwise and personalitywise. He lives in a charming split-level house with Nikki and their 17 children and he rises steadily in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, he became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, he was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and he published a best-selling book called I Was a Slippery Elm for the FBI.

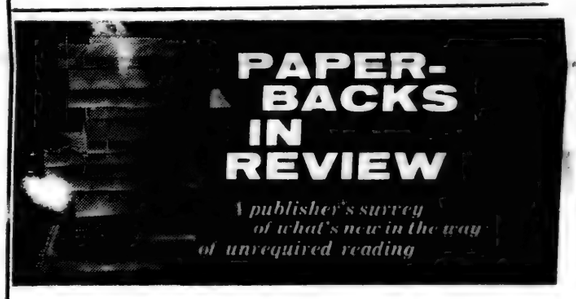
Hollingsworth's UNUSUAL CANDIES



Under review this month is a most provocative and timely book, The Worried Man's Guide to World Peace . . . provocative because it is not everyone's political cup of tea, and timely because it fits right into the current series of world-wide peace demonstrations.

Arthur Waskow's book amply achieves its purpose as a "guide" into peace politics for the uninformed. He discusses the current world situation—and the way Americans, in particular, look at peace. Mr. Waskow then outlines specific action levers available to the P.A. (Peace Actionist) like "Alperovitzing" (grass roots lobbying), and helps answer such questions as:

- How does one become effective in local political organizations?
- Are demonstrations an effective means of social protest and when are they put to their best use?
- How can I get "Peace" on page one of my local newspaper?
- How can I effectively translate my ideas to the average businessman or civic leader?

In this day and age of the bomb, The Worried Man's Guide to World Peace ($1.25, A Doubleday Anchor Original) is a must for the student of peace . . . or war.

In his autobiography, Child of Two Worlds (Anchor, $1.25), R. Mugo Gatheru describes his personal odyssey from tribalism to full citizenship in the world Mr. Waskow is worried about. Mr. Gatheru's story is a simple and straightforward one. He tells of ancient customs in which he participated as a young Kikuyu tribesman. He tells how he gradually adopted new values and new customs, especially as a student at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania. In so doing, he reveals to us what it has meant to one human being to be a Kikuyu, a Kenyan and an African amid the complexities of modern civilization.

To understand Mugo Gatheru's story is to understand the experience of thousands of other young Africans. It is to understand an experience that is a crucial one in a changing, troubled world.

Doctor Sessoms Could Be Number One Tar Heel Fan

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

It's a tough job to pick the best basketball fan in Chapel Hill. But if I had to, I'd cast my vote for Dr. Douglas Sessoms, Professor of Sociology here at UNC.

Last Wednesday night the doctor spent his evening the way he likes best — watching the Tar Heels play winning ball.

He sat happily on a courtside seat in Carmichael and focused his camera upon white uniformed athletes poised near the basket.

"I first became interested in the game when I was in high school in Wilmington, North Carolina," Sessoms said. "As a freshman I kept score for the junior varsity. My sophomore year the varsity won the state championship, and I was score keeper."

Dr. Sessoms

"Back then I was interested in becoming a sports writer, but I soon realized that I couldn't spell anything so I turned to broadcasting. I did halftime shows and some play-by-play for the school and some of the junior colleges in the area.

"I came to Carolina as an undergraduate in '51, and the basketball games weren't too exciting. Then we got Coach McGuire and he changed all that. I was here in '57 when we won the championship.

"It's too early to try to compare this year's team with the '57 champions. Those boys had great balance. In two years, today's freshman team plus Larry Miller will be as fine a squad. They could go all the way.

"Billy Cunningham was a good all-round player. But Lewis is a fantastic shooter. He's the finest offensive college player I've ever seen."

A couple of friendships also attribute to my interest in the Tar Heel teams. Ken Rosemond was a good friend of mine. Both he and Dean Smith lived on the same street and being neighbors, I came to know both of them. But they've both moved away now.

"As an individual, Dean is one of the finest representatives our athletic program could possibly have.

"As a coach, he's a great technician and strategist. His defense the last few games has been unique. It isn't a full court press or a man-to-man. And it's working well for us.

"Larry Brown had lots of talent and great heart as a player here. He was captain when Cunningham was a sophomore. Smith and Brown will take our basketball a long way.

"I'm also interested in the game from an academic standpoint. I teach an introductory course in group dynamics. Basketball is a perfect lab for this. It's a good example of leadership and group personality.

"It's tough to point to a leader in this year's team. Lewis provides the spirit and Miller sets them on fire. But I've got a feeling Johnny Yokley's the leader.

"Last year, Cunningham dominated every phase of the game. Billy would play and then he'd let up and so would the whole team. But now the Tar Heels have spirit. They can go a hell of a long way."

There aren't many certainties in college basketball. The ACC is a case in point. No team has managed to win a game away from home.

But there's one blanket that all us Linuses can still cling to. Dr. Sessoms will be at court side everytime the Tar Heels run onto Carmichael's floor. And he'll have a camera in his hands and his heart in his throat.

Blue Devils, Loud Fans Best 'Poor 'Ol' Bruins

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

When UCLA's starting lineup was introduced at Duke Indoor Stadium Friday night, the frenzied mob of students who filled the lower bleachers on all sides of the court responded to each individual name with a thunderous "Who's he?"

Then they verbally blasted their visitors with the repeated chant of "Go to hell, UCLA, go to hell!"

A few minutes later, when the Uclans set out to crush Duke's threat to their unbeaten, nationally top - ranked perch, the cool - as - could - be Blue Devils gave an inward "What's that?" response to the club's famed zone press defense. In the forty minutes of playing time which followed the Blue Dukes passed the ball over, around and through that fabled zone press.

A match supposed to see Duke scratching and clawing for every completed pass was ridiculously easy for the devils. After the first minute when their west coast opponent claimed a 6-0 lead, Duke rattled their bewildered defense with sharp passes, and the situation got so bad midway in the second half that Bruin Coach John Wooden removed his starters because "Well, if your first bunch isn't getting it done, you'd better start looking for someone who can."

It was the first time in a long time that the first group hadn't been able to "get it done" against the nation's finest teams.

Another thing that UCLA couldn't do with its spring-legged forwards was get rebounds. Oh, they got some—40 as a matter of fact. But Duke retrieved 64, with soph center Mike Lewis, who was about the most impressive individual in an overall unified Duke effort, snaring 21.

The usual picture under the boards would show Duke's Bob Riedy, Jack Marin, Warren Chapman and Lewis group together in two's to box out UCLA's Mike Lynn, Edgar Lacey, and Ken Washington. And when it came to straight one-on-one jumping, Duke was "first with the highest" two-thirds of the time.

As for Duke's own defense, Coach Vic Bubas stated after the game that the plan had been to force the Bruins to shoot from outside and hope they weren't hitting.

Duke did, and UCLA wasn't.

When Wooden came in to meet the press, he asked: "Boys, what kind of comment can you possibly make after your team has been thrashed in every way. We were beaten on defense, offense, ball handling, rebounding — you saw it. We were just completely ripped."

Incidently, Wooden had this to say when asked if the tremendous roaring by the somewhat partisan Duke fans had any psychological effect:

"Oh, you bet it did. When you come into a place like this which is stacked against you, you more or less expect it. It doesn't really matter what you say or do to prepare for it. It will get to you, especially if things start going wrong."

Then the calm, defeated coach, taking the whole thing surprisingly matter - of - factly, spoke a gem:

"It always affects you on the road. It gets us at San Francisco and Stanford. It gets some people at South Carolina."

When Duke's rugged Warren Chapman bursted through the door of the locker room, he shot both arms upward in a "V" sign, and shouted "How sweet it is! ! !"

Carmichael Draws Heel Comments

By JIM FIELDS

Carmichael Auditorium came alive with the sounds of victory Wednesday night as the Tar Heel basketball team officially christened their new home.

Many comments, good and bad, were made about the new building after the game. Here is what a few Carolina students think about Carmichael Auditorium:

Rosemary Maxwell, fr., — "I like it, but I think it will be a lot better when the temporary bleachers are finished."

Ronnie Aycock, 3rd year law, — "It's very nice, well lighted and picturesque, but from where I was seated, you couldn't hear the public address system to well."

Gayle Harmon, jr., — "I think it's great, but I believe that the seats should be elevated more so that it would be easier to see over the person in front of you."

Denny Brandon, jr., — "It's far superior to what we had, but it is still highly inadequate to meet the need for such a large and growing university as this."

Jeanie Farris, jr., — "It's very beautiful. I especially like the way it was built with no poles to obstruct your view and with the stage to transform it into an auditorium. However, I don't believe it's large enough to meet the demand here, and it will soon prove to be inadequate."

No Changes Made In ACC Play-offs

The ACC method of choosing its representative to the NCAA basketball tournament has been under critical fire for some time. A team can post a fine record during its season and then have a bad night in Raleigh, and that's that.

A case in point is the misfortune of the Duke cagers last season. They were the highest ranking team in the ACC, but were knocked out of their chance to prove themselves in Reynolds Coliseum.

The ACC had another conference last Friday and talked the problem over.

The Basketball Committee had suggested a playoff for the league berth in the national tournament. If the leader of regular-season play fails to win the ACC championship tournament champs in a playoff. Under the present system the tournament winner goes to the NCAA event.

Because each of the eight member schools is certain of playing only one tournament game, the NCAA has counted tourney play as only one game of the 26 permitted to a team. However, the proposed playoff plan would mean a thre-game assessment.

Critics of the present means of selecting teams to the national tournament point to the results of last season's ACC tournament.

Duke, who won the regular season championship with an 11-3 conference record and a 20-5 over-all mark, lost to N.C. State in the tournament finals.

State had finished second to the Blue Devils in the regular season with a 10-4 conference mark and 21-5 over-all.

State then went to the Eastern Regionals and lost their first game to Princeton.

That situation is not a new one. In 1960, North Carolina won the regular season championship with a 12-2 conference but lost in the semi-finals of the tournament to the ultimate champions Duke Blue Devils.

Duke had finished fourth in the league chase that season with a 7-7 record. They then went to the Eastern Regionals and placed second — beating Princeton and St. Joseph's then losing to NYU.

The same situation happened to N. C. State in 1959 as UNC won the conference tournament.

Duke was displaced in 1958 as a fourth-place Maryland team upset the apple cart.

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

Desk-Top Philosophy Popular Sport

If you're bored and looking for something to do you might try entertaining yourself by looking over the scribblings found on desk-tops in the classrooms of our university as Art Latham did the other day.

He found the traditional obscenities and the ubiquitous "Carolina, UNC," various and sundry Greek letters and "dedicated to the unfortunate souls who died waiting for the bell in Monkey wrench appreciation 101 scratched on the ageless desktops.

But as he went on he observed that the recent unrest at Berkeley and other places have focused the attention of desk-top scratching on political and social change.

The desk-tops produced the following graphite gems:

Beware the Rising Tide of Conformity.

The Great Society: Ever had the feeling that somebody was putting you on?

Johnson is a fat, ugly bear. LBJ is a socialist. LBJ is a warmonger. (Some days you just can't please anybody.)

From the left side of the desks came:

White man listen.

No political compromise. Down with the Speaker Ban. Down with the Britt Commission.

And from the right side:

War, war and more war (scrawled in boldface caps across the entire face of one desk).

The hopeful suggestion — Nixon in '68.

Then there were two real classics:

Down with Chapel Hill nuns, to hell with liberals, pinkos, civil rights workers, Catholics, Reds, perverts and South Building, to which someone had added: and bigots.

But neatly printed on one desk is the refutation of all the arguments that contemporary students are too serious. "Budweiser — Breakfast of Champions.

Santa Trades Beard For Bandages

The Pi Kappa Phi house had a red-hot Santa Claus at their Christmas party Saturday night in the form of Junior Class vice president Bill Nucciarone.

Santa came out with a few minor burns and now his beard has been replaced with white bandages.

Painful? Probably, but Nucciarone says he was feeling no pain. — Carol Gallent

Lights Burn, Burn, Burn and Burn

They did it again.

"They" is the Christmas decorations and "again" is caught on fire. Yes sir, that's the fourth time so far that Chapel Hill's wonderful new decorations have threatened Franklin St.

This time it was a group of lights in front of Suttons' Drug Store. The fire began about 10:45 Sunday night but the trusty fire engine showed up and squirted a beautiful stream of water on the hot wires.

The Chapel Hill Fire Department says it was the overheating of the lights that cause the material to catch fire. The fire was the worst of the four.

'Reject Klan' Advises Weltner

MERRY CHRISTMAS, DRIVE SAFELY—This was the message of a sign near this car in Y-Court. The car, in which a student recently rode to his death, attracted large crowds until late into the evening.

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Georgia Congressman Charles L. Weltner last night called on the people of North Carolina and the South to cease their support of the Ku Klux Klan and "organizations that drive our people apart," in a speech before 1,700 students in Memorial Hall.

Weltner, a liberal Democrat from Atlanta, Ga., is the member of the House Un-American Activities Committee who called for the recent House investigation of the Klan and its activities.

He participated in a panel discussion of the Klan which was also composed of Major L. P. McClendon, an attorney from Greensboro; Floyd McKissick, Chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality; and WRAL television newsman Peter B. Young.

Only one Klansman attended the meeting and identified himself to the panel.

A spokesman for the Klan contacted the Carolina Forum Chairman George Nicholson last week and reserved 60 seats for Klansmen expected to attend.

The Forum co-sponsored the discussion with the YMCA Human Relations Committee.

The audience viewed a CBS documentary film on Klan history and terrorism entitled "The Ku Klux Klan: The Invisible Empire" before the panel discussion.

"The Klan is an un-American organization," Weltner told the audience at the film's conclusion. "It deprives citizens of their rights by use of force and violence."

He called for the passage of "remedial legislation" which would "teach the Klan to make its decisions openly without accompanying acts of violencs."

Citing the Klans 100-year-old history of violence, Weltner said, "The time has come to sever the long chain of terrorism which was begun in 1865."

Young defended Klansmen as members of a "mocked, expointed, deprived white ghetto."

He claimed the First Amendment rights of the Klansmen had been deprived by the recent HUAC investigation.

He praised Klansmen as the "leaders" of the "white ghetto," who were investigated a "federal secret police apparatus of paid informers.

"This investigating unit can turn against any group," Young said.

"Who will it be the next time, Mr. Weltner," he asked. "Will it be the Black Muslims, whose mosque in Los Angeles was riddled by police bullets, or maybe even the Congress of the United States.

"There are now 204 regular Klan units and 70 women's auxiliaries active in 'variety vacationland,'" Young said.

"Klansmen ask, 'How come there's so much action for niggers and none for us,'" he said.

He called on Weltner and the audience to answer a "message of help coming out of the white ghetto."

"Problems are not solved by figuring out tricky things to say," Weltner said.

"I would be shocked to find that the best people of our country have come before our committee during the recent investigations.

Congress May Cite Klan For Contempt

Officials of the Ku Klux Klan who withhold Klan records from congressional investigators may be cited for contempt of Congress, according to Georgia Congressman Charles L. Weltner.

Weltner, a member of the House Un - American Activities Committee, said the possibility of citing uncooperative Klan officials for contempt was "under active consideration" by Congress in a press conference here yesterday.

Weltner spoke on Klan activities in an address to the student body last night in Memorial Hall.

The liberal U. S. Representative from Atlanta, Ga., said congressmen were also considering strengthening federal statutes against conspiracy to include Klan activities.

Information concerning the possession of firearms by Klansmen has been turned over to congressional committees investigating firearms control, according to Weltner.

Denouncing the Klan as "a terror organization" which was "structured along the lines of the Communist Party" Weltner said HUAC would continue its investigation of Klan activities in the next session of Congress.

"We will continue our investigation to include the activities of the Klan in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida and Louisiana," Weltner said.

He said there were 117 Klan claverns in North Carolina.

Citing HUAC's 30 year history, he said, "The committee is not overstepping its bounds in its investigation of the Klan."

Weltner said HUAC is "certainly not contemplating" an investigation of the civil rights movement in the near future.

He also said "an agency of the federal government" had warned him on two occasions that Klan members might harass him during his speech last night, but he said he was "happy to be here."

Weltner said he had received no harassment in the past for his role in the HUAC investigation of the Klan, but that he had received a few threatening letters. — JOHN GREENBACKER

A UNC student died and five other persons were hospitalized after a two-car collision Saturday night about 11:45 on N. C. Highway 86, one mile north of Chapel Hill.

James Richard Hammett, 20 - year - old junior Business Administration major of Concord, N. C., died at North Carolina Memorial Hospital of head injuries at 11:15 Sunday morning. He never regained consciousness.

Brenda Woodard, 21, a student at UNC at Greensboro, was reported in special care in "fair" condition late yesterday. She had been on the critical list since Saturday night, with a neck injury and a fractured arm.

Treated at the hospital and taken to the student infirmary were Miss Lafferty; Richard Lynn Starnes, 20, Charlotte; Salem Robert Suber, 19, Charlotte; and his wife, Barbara Elaine Suber, 19, Charlotte.

Suber, UNC sophomore, sustained slight lacerations on the back of his head and was described by his doctor as "diffusely sore."

Mrs. Suber who is not a student, received facial injuries and a fractured jaw.

Starnes, UNC junior, suffered burns on both hands and his left leg when he smothered a fire on Miss Woodard's clothing. Flames from the burning Ford had followed a trail of gasoline to the spot where he was lying.

Miss Lafferty had superficial lacerations of the hands and a slight injury to her left ankle.

All six persons were riding in the death vehicle.

Occupants of the other car — Jimmy Roberts and Charles Lawrence, of Route 2, Chapel Hill, and Doreta Council, Julia Ann Rigsby and Dela McMillan, of Durham — were treated at Memorial Hospital and released.

Investigating highway patrolman T. J. Hines said a 1957 Ford, driven by Roberts and traveling toward Chapel Hill, slowed to make a left turn onto rural paved road 1750 (intersection of Airport Rd. and Estes Dr.)

A Volkswagen, which belonged to Hammet but was being driven by his date, Miss Lafferty, slammed into the rear of the Ford, knocking it into a ditch on the right-hand side of the highway where it burst into flames.

Hines said occupants of the Volkswagen told him they were traveling about 45 m.p.h.

Chapel Hill policeman Tommy Snipes who witnessed the accident through his rear-view mirror, said he saw the Ford signalling to turn and realized the Volkswagen would not be able to stop.

He called for help, and he and other Chapel Hill policemen assisted with traffic until the fire was extinguished by the Chapel Hill Fire Department and the injured persons and their cars were removed from the highway.

Miss Lafferty will go before Chapel Hill Recorders Court for her preliminary hearing Jan. 8 and 9 a.m. She is charged with reckless driving and involuntary manslaughter in a warrant signed by Hones.

The men in the Volkswagen were all members of Chi Phi social fraternity. They were returning from a Chi Phi-Chi Psi party at Maltsby's Cabin, off Highway 86, about seven miles north of Chapel Hill.

Hammett is the second UNC student to be killed in an automobile accident in the Chapel Hill area this year.

Junior Roger Davis, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., died after a one-car crash on Highway 15-501 near Glen Lennox Shopping Center in October.

Funeral services for Hammett will be held today at 3:30 p.m. at Epworth Methodist Church in Concord.

Best Bargain Still Old Victory Village

JEAN ROBERTS
Special to the DTH

Not only will UNC married student housing rents remain steady, but by this summer 50 to 70 units in Odum Village will be furnished James Wadsworth, UNC Housing Director, says.

Wadsworth blames higher taxes and increased dormitory rents as the cause of the current rent increases by many of the commercial developments in Chapel Hill. Comparable housing to that now available in the new Odum Village (which rents for $72 to $82), costs $85 to $150 per month elsewhere. The old prefabs in Victory Village are still the best bargain with rents from $20 to $40.

Even with its low rents, Victory Village grosses about $98,500.00 per year reports James A. Branch, UNC business manager. The cost of maintenance are reverted a separate reserve fund. Odum Village rents are set according to the federal government's debt repayment schedule.

The University Trustees have allotted all of the land in Victory Village for long range expansion of the hospital complex. Bids will be let on January 10, 1966 for the first nine million dollar stage of the expansion. As soon as this building begins Victory Village will come down unit by unit.

Branch believes that since there in no suitable place to move the old wooden barracks and UK house they will probably be torn down — and with money from their reserve fund.

Presently, the University provides about 250 units in Victory Village and 300 units in Odum Village for a married student population of approximately 2200. Both Wadsworth and Branch expressed hope that at least this many units would continued to be provided.

Branch stated that the University hopes to include plans for additional permanent married student housing in the capital improvements budget for the 1967 General Assembly. While the state supplies no money for housing, it must authorize plans for building housing. The federal government will loan money for such self - liquidating projects.

Branch added "That with with the present cost of building, housing comparable to Odum Village could not be built and rented at the same figure."

The present community center, which also houses the Day Care Center for children, is considered part of Odum Village and therefore will not be replaced by hospital expansion. The new community center for married students is now in the planning stages and is expected to be placed near the present playground area.

Panty Raid Fizzles

BY ANDY MYERS
DTH News Editor

About 400 yelling men students stood outside Winston dorm Sunday night from 8:30 to 10 p.m. They just stood there.

Three campus police broke up the gathering, but not before Winston residents had pulled their shades and turned off their lights.

An occasional flicker of light from the windows prompted some healthy cheering from the men outside: (W-I-N-S-T-O-N: SEX!)

When a policeman showed up he was followed by two more. "Damn good cop! Damn good cop!" they chanted.

A shade suddenly rose before the mob's eyes. "More! More!" they chanted, but that was all. They just chanted.

Winston residents displayed mixed feelings yesterday. Here are some of their comments:

"How would the boys feel if we did it to them?"

"I didn't think they were going to come over."

"Are they going to do it again?"

"We figured if they tried to get in we'd all get in trouble."

"It was all in fun."

"It was a nice warm night for it."

"I tried to study, but it kept getting louder and louder."

"From the looks of Sunday night, it looks like they need some encouragement."

"One (girl) almost jumped out the window."

"No one got any studying done."

"A few girls were mad."

"It caused a lot of excitement."

"I was disappointed in them."

"I thought they were going to start up again."

"We're not very pleased with the boys."

"I don't even know what was going on!"

Alas, there was no panty raid.

Cyclist Hit By Car In Critical Condition

A 19 - year - old Carolina sophomore who collided with a car while riding his motorcycle late Saturday night is listed in critical condition at North Carolina Memorial Hospital.

Stephen Ellis Hyde, of Skillman, N. J., suffered severe head injuries, a fractured left leg and chest injuries. Hyde, who has been unconscious since the wreck, is in the intensive care unit of the hospital.

According to the Dean of Men's office Hyde was sitting still with his lights off in the right lane of 15-501 near Mann's Chapel Road when he was struck from the rear by a car driven by General Madison Pearson, 75, of Roosevelt Drive, Chapel Hill.

Pearson was headed toward Chapel Hill when the accident occured at 11:30 p.m.

The Highway Patrol, which investigated the accident, has made no charges.

Phi Sigma Kappa Kidnaps Housemothers For Charity

By BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

Housemothers from all seven sororities were "kidnapped Monday afternoon as Tau Epsilon Phi's annual "Christmas House" drive got under way.

TEP's "Christmas House" is a drive to collect food and toys for needy families.

Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity "kidnapped" the housemothers at 3:45 p.m., leaving the following note: "We have kidnapped your housemother and are holding her for ransom. Show your housemother how much you appreciate her by being the first to ransom her with either a box of canned food or a box of toys.

The housemothers had previously agreed to the "kidnapping."

In car and on foot about 110 girls descended on the fraternity house, bringing food and toys and singing rival rushing songs.

Six boxes of canned food and one large box of toys were collected.

The housemothers were well-treated. Each was given a corsage and a tour of the house.

By 5:15 p.m. the last of the housemothers had been ransomed.

"Each sorority did a very good job," Charles Worley, Phi Sigma Kappa secretary said. "We sure would like to be invited to their house."

Elliot To Address YDC

"The role of the reporter in the political arena" will be the topic of an address by Jerry Elliot, Gov. Dan Moore's Press Secretary, before the UNC Young Democratic Club tonight at 5:30 in the private dining room of Chase Cafeteria.

The former news director for WPTF radio in Raleigh, Elliott served as a reporter for WTVD television in Durham before assuming his present position.

Club members and interested students are invited to bring their trays to the private dining room and hear the speech.

Orne Receives Grant

Dr. Jerrold Oren, UNC librarian and chairman of the American Standards Associations libraries and documentation technical committee has been given a $34,150 three year grant by the National Science Foundation

The purpose of the grant is to help in developing standards acceptable to all libraries. The money will be used to tackle such problems as the classification of books, indexing, layout of periodicals, abstracts, and bibliographic references.

Law Librarianship

The School of Library Sciences of UNC will offer a course in librarianship in the first term of the 1966 summer session, June 9 - July 16.

The course is intended for those who are preparing for careers as law librarians and for others who may be now working in law libraries.

The course will carry three semester hours' credit.

Enrollment for the course will be limited, and applications to register for it must be submitted by May 1, 1966.

Applications and further information may be obrained from Miss Jean Freeman, assistant to the Dean, School of Library Science.

Show 'Em How, Girls

It isn't supposed to be "that time of year," but nobody has ever really put a seasonal limit on panty raids.

Some 300 fellows from the Joyner-Alexander residence halls area thought about it Sunday night, but that was about as far as they got. They made a visit to the nearby coed dormitory, Winston, paid their respects from afar and returned home with nothing but hoarseness.

With the thought in mind that no panty raid is better than an abortive panty raid, we implore these apparently half-hearted enthusiasts to cease their efforts before they ruin the reputations of us all.

Perhaps what we really need is a counter-raid by the girls, to show the boys just what they expect in a panty raid.

It is doubtful that coeds will be willing to participate in such an educational endeavor, however, because they know the fellows are likely to throw all their dirty laundry down to the girls, expecting to have it washed and returned.

Super Scrooge At Work?

He came by night, and left it a little darker — because he stole the Christmas lights from the 12-foot-high shrubs in front of Avery Residence Hall.

"We just got the lights up Saturday — two nights and they're already gone," said Avery housemaster Martin Lancaster.

Was the deed done by a Super Scrooge in a fit of bah-humbug rage?

"I don't know," Lancaster, "but we heard that some guy has been bragging about stealing Christmas lights to decorate a tree in his room. We're still trying to find him," Lancaster said.

So perhaps the thief was a Super Christmas Spirit, so determined to celebrate in style that he "borrowed" the first decoration he could find.

Either way, we do not think Santa Claus will come to see him, no matter how brightly his tree shines.

Harsh Rules At Paris U.

The University of Paris is taking drastic action to weed out what it calls "ghost students." These are the students who register for courses and never attend class. It does not matter if they flunk because they can repeat the courses by paying small tuition fees.

The ghost students like things that way because they receive benefits — such as discounts on food and subway fare — just as regular students do. They spend their time in cafes and avoid all that petty academic folderol of studying.

The University's Dean of Science estimates that the schools each contain from 12 to 22 per cent ghosts. Total enrollment is 120,000.

The University professors have just approved a plan which although extremely severe, will undoubtedly end the injustice of this situation.

Henceforth all students will be required to take final examinations, and those who do not make above 35 per cent will be thrown out of school.

We convey our deepest sympathy to those students who now will have to strive so diligently to achieve a grade of 35 on exams.

"A Panty Raid? So What?"

Movie Review

'Umbrella' Catches Showers Of Praise

BY SHARON FINCH

The rain in Spain might stay mainly in the plain, but in France "The Umbrellas of Cherbourg" are catching all the showers — and it is raining raves!

The Ely Landau film about young love, told completely in song and dazzling color, is one of the most charming boy - meets - girl - and - they - fall - in - love plots ever filmed. The miracle that Betty Smith accomplished with such a trite and oversentimental plot in "Joy in the Morning," Director Jacques Demy accomplishes with this sadly cynical musical about a garage worker named Guy who loves the daughter of the owner of a Cherbourg umbrella shop, Genevieve.

Guy lives with an invalid god - mother, Elise, who is cared for by Madeleine, a young woman of 20. Guy goes into service for two years, leaving Genevieve pregnant unknowingly. The umbrella business falls off and the shop is sold.

Guy does not write and Genevieve, certain he has forgotten her, marries a diamond merchant, Monsieur Casard. Guy returns, marries Madeleine; Elise dies; and in a final scene on a snowy Christmas Eve, Guy and Genevieve accidentally meet at a service station; then they part to go their separate ways forever.

Jacques Demy's transformation of sadness and cynicism into unique and haunting beauty has won the film five international awards: Grand Prix, Cannes Film Festival; Best Female Acting Award for Catherine Deneuve, French Film Academy; Prix Louis Delluc, French Critics Award; International Catholic Cinema Award; First Prize, French Film Commission for Superior Technique.

Demy, only 33, has a "magic touch" with characters and with total effect. Elise, for him, is the one touching character in the film. In French she signifies "tenderness, mulberry jam, lilac satin, resignation, modesty." With Demy it's the modesty that wins. His aunt Elise moves us but doesn't keep us from smiling even when she dies.

The dexterity of Demy in the area of total affect is even more striking. When you leave the Cherbourg of Demy you can never again ask a station attendant to "fill it up" without looking at him queerly as if he were going to start to sing.

Catherine Deneuve, a slight, ethereal-looking beauty, is wonderful as Genevieve. If ever a director had a perfect ingenue lead, she is it. The sister of French screen star Francoise Dorleac and the daughter of actor, Maurice Dorleac, Catherine was "born in a trunk." She is convincing on the screen, and has a natural beauty of face and figure that easily adapts to Demy's unadorned love story.

Nino Castelnuovo as Guy is quite good. He conveys the emotions of a boy in love for the first time, despite his 26 years of age. He has French good looks — very dark with expressive eyes. His voice is compelling in song, and his acting strong.

The supporting cast are all talented and well - cast. Anne Vernon, as Mme. Emery, Genevieve's mother, has a large part that she portrays effectively. She is the typical mother, has a large part that she portrays effectively. She is the typical mother, wishing the best for her daughter; she is forgiving of Genevieve's unfortunate circumstances and does not push her into her marriage with Monsieur Casard.

Roland Cassard, played by Marc Michel, is a small part but one requiring skill in reflecting a variety of character traits in short space: compassion, understanding, deep love, humility, and faith. Marc Michel is well qualified for the role.

Madeleine and Elise are seen infrequently in the film. Both are stereotypical roles: the girl who loves secretly and wins her loved one in the end; the dying aunt, who lingers on and on and finally passes away. Demy's direction, more than the capabilities of either Ellen Farmer as Madeleine or Mirelle Perrey as Elise, seems responsible for the lasting impression of these two characters.

Michel Legrand's musical score is lively at times, nostalgic and sentimental at others. The theme song, "I Will Wait for You," is the beautifully haunting love song Guy and Genevieve sing at Guy's departure into the service. It is the most memorable song in the score.

Jean Rabier's cinematography and J. Moreau's costuming complement each other nicely. Moreau's costumes are in vivid colors — hot pinks, oranges, bright aquas, rich emerald greens. Often the costumes pick up themes from Bernard Evein's sets, especially wallpaper patterns. Colors appear still moist form the artist's mixing.

Enchanting, tender, full of the "bouquet of youth," bold in concept, delicate in execution . . . . all the phrases describe "The Umbrellas of Cherbourg." But its special appeal is to "The young in heart" who can remember when the world stood still when someone held them, and walked with them in the rain and everything was wonderful.

Pay For Peeps At Jerkeley

John Greenbacker's DTH article on "scoping" was well writen, but it has produced a very unwelcome aftermath:

Carolina coeds are now a lot more cautious than in the past about pulling their shades down, thanks to Greenbacker's friendly warning.

Thus, they have deprived this school's male students of many long and enjoyable hours of lecherous fun.

No — there isn't any need for alarm. Just look what happened at Jerkeley University after the girls "wised up."

"I don't mind being seen, but I think it's a pity we're not paid for undressing in front of the windows," one coed said when she saw a "scoping" article in The Daily Cowlifornian.

So Sally Can-can and several comely friends organized an undressing service.

Under this arrangement, the girls in Cob Webb dorm agreed to undress 20 times each night for the boys of Conher provided they turned over to the coeds a substantial amount of their social fees.

Frosted windows went up whenever the boys defaulted on their payments. And this was quite often, too; for everybody in Con - her soon exhausted their spending money by purchasing binoculars.

Eventually, the girls became unionized. Any coed caught undressing without being paid was immediately expelled from the union.

During hot weather, union rules were relazed since it was assumed the girls would pull up the shades and windows even if they didn't receive money for doing this.

Girls who insisted on not pulling their shades all the way up were dismissed as "unsatisfactory workers."

Consultants from the local burlesque houses showed the coeds how to improve their service.

Before long, all rooms in the boys' dorm facing Cob Webb were turned into plush drinking clubs.

There was no danger, however, of the girls "fraternizing with the customers" since they remained a safe 100 yards away.

But students under 21 were prohibited from living in the vicinity.

Dirty films replaced the girls during exam time so they could devote full attention to their studies.

Even the flicks had to be seen with binoculars. To insure realism, the shades were pulled over the screens at the movies' conclusions.

Some of the more expensive rooms in the boys' dorm featured telescopes.

The coeds of Cob Webb hotly denied complaints that they were spying on the Conher boys. "That's not true," one girl protested. "We are honest. If we spied on the undressing men, we'd pay them for their services."

Meanwhile, the University passed a rule allowing faculty members to live in Con - her. Immediately, thirty PH.D's moved into the building — despite objections from their wives.

Several months later, part of Con - her dorm was converted into classrooms so students could receive first - hand instruction on "Marriage and the Family."

In fact, the Chancellor himself soon decided to move his office into Con - her. And once he established himself there, he suddenly discovered he had to spend more time working late at night.

But by this time, the girls had already been evicted from Cob Webb — so that they could be replaced by Playboy Bunnies.

No Mail In The Sunshine

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

"Neither rain nor hail nor sleet nor snow will stop these couriers from completing their appointed rounds."

So what gives? It's a beautiful, sunny day, but the postman's creed doesn't say anything about his completing his appointed rounds in sunshine. Evidently that must be what stops ths postman to South Campus. It's almost tomorrow and we're still waiting for yesterday's mail. We've heard of being slow and the Christmas rush, but this is ridiculous.

See Game, Not Drunks

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The following is an answer to Mr. John J. Foley's letter of Dec. 9 in which he complains about "certain specific instances" at a basketball game which make the title "Carolina Gentleman" ridiculous. He feels that the time has come to "explode" the "myth" of the " 'Carolina Gentleman.' "

For the purpose of drinking, some attend a game. In order to watch these get drunk, others do the same.

The drunks, while being obnoxious, at least know who's ahead.

Mr. Foley, ignoring the game, listens for ugly words said.

"Mr. Foley, what's the score?" someone kindly asks.

"Don't ask me the score," he says; "I am busy counting flasks."

I agree, Mr. Foley, it's bad for a fan to be loaded.

However, not the "myth" of the Carolina Gentleman, but your ways need to be exploded.

'Dixie' Must Go

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Today, one of my professors said that Dixie is dead. Unhappily, he is not yet right. The Old South, with its archaic ideas and lost causes, like the hooked fish, is now putting up the last desperate struggle before its inevitable engulfment into the twentieth century. It is only a short matter of time until its complete loss of identity.

The waving of the "Stars 'n' Bars," the "Fergit, Hell!" plaques, and the mesmerization by the song "Dixie" are in the same class with the nauseating harangues of George Wallace, Robert Shelton, etc. The deification of such symbols by certain students is a fleeting attempt at reinstating their rapidly dying ideals.

To ban these symbols, as has been suggested, is, however, as ludicrous as the symbols, themselves. It doesn't seem like too long ago that I was haranguing aoubt a ban, myself.

Executives Don Role Of Students

By MARY JO HESTER
Special to the DTH

Forty - seven major executives from North Carolina and neighboring states will once again don the role of students on the UNC campus on Thursday as they participate in the 13th annual Executive Program of the School of Business Administration.

This week's visit will mark the fifth of the alternate weekends in the Program, which includes two weeks of full-time residence and eight alternate weekends. The Program runs from October through March of each year.

During the period between 1943 and 1958 many universities in the United States and Canada began to offer management courses for men already occupying management positions. Today there are approximately 40 advanced management programs within the United States.

The University of North Carolina established its first Executive Program in 1953 with Dr. Willard J. Graham as initiator and director.

Before coming to North Carolina, Dr. Graham directed a successful program for 10 years at the University of Chicago.

"I would certainly put this (program) in the top five Executive Programs in the country, for several reasons," director Graham said in a recent interview.

"We get substantially more homework, individual work, than most other Programs because of the spaced schedule."

The men study at home between sessions, in small discussion groups, and in class meetings. This affords them "more total exposure to ever assignment, ease, and problem than most other programs," Dr. Graham said.

"Per class hour, this sort of operation has a greater, more lasting impact on the student," he said.

Another reason why UNC's Executive Program is among the top, Dr. Graham stressed, is that "we have close to the best faculty of any program with which I am acquainted, and I'm acquainted with quite a few. We really have a tough bunch of faculty members in the Program."

Other features which make Carolina's Program unique include the long - range plan and the Management Development, INC. (MDI). Upon application to the Program, each executive must develop and submit a written long-ranged plan for his company. Many have followed the plan through to its maturity.

MDI is a stock corporation chartered by the alumni of the Program to expand this contributions of the Program throughout the state.

MDI, by invitation, enters a community to conduct an Institute taught by alumni of the Executive Program. The alumni receive no pay but are awarded shares of MDI. Approximately 500 businessmen have studied in this Institute.

Although most of the executive students are from North Carolina, a considerable number come from Virginia, Tennessee, and South Carolina. Dr. Graham said that men as far away as New York City, Pittsburg, and Decatur, Ala. have attended the sessions.

During the first year of the Program a man from Murphy, N. C. drove a total of 9,100 miles to attend the 13 separate meetings.

"Rarely do we have anyone here who doesn't want definitely to do the work," said Dr. Graham. "No man has ever dropped out of the Program voluntarily."

Show 'Em How, Girls

It isn't supposed to be "that time of year," but nobody has ever really put a seasonal limit on panty raids.

Some 300 fellows from the Joyner-Alexander residence halls area thought about it Sunday night, but that was about as far as they got. They made a visit to the nearby coed dormitory, Winston, paid their respects from afar and returned home with nothing but hoarseness.

With the thought in mind that no panty raid is better than an abortive panty raid, we implore these apparently half-hearted enthusiasts to cease their efforts before they ruin the reputations of us all.

Perhaps what we really need is a counter-raid by the girls, to show the boys just what they expect in a panty raid.

It is doubtful that coeds will be willing to participate in such an educational endeavor, however, because they know the fellows are likely to throw all their dirty laundry down to the girls, expecting to have it washed and returned.

Super Scrooge At Work?

He came by night, and left it a little darker — because he stole the Christmas lights from the 12-foot-high shrubs in front of Avery Residence Hall.

"We just got the lights up Saturday — two nights and they're already gone," said Avery housemaster Martin Lancaster.

"I don't know," Lancaster, "but we heard that some guy has been bragging about stealing Christmas lights to decorate a tree in his room. We're still trying to find him," Lancaster said.

So perhaps the thief was a Super Christmas Spirit, so determined to celebrate in style that he "borrowed" the first decoration he could find.

Either way, we do not think Santa Claus will come to see him, no matter how brightly his tree shines.

Harsh Rules At Paris U.

The University of Paris is taking drastic action to weed out what it calls "ghost students." These are the students who register for courses and never attend class. It does not matter if they flunk because they can repeat the courses by paying small tuition fees.

The ghost students like things that way because they receive benefits — such as discounts on food and subway fare — just as regular students do. They spend their time in cafes and avoid all that petty academic folderol of studying.

The University's Dean of Science estimates that the schools each contain from 12 to 22 per cent ghosts. Total enrollment is 120,000.

The University professors have just approved a plan which although extremely severe, will undoubtedly end the injustice of this situation.

Henceforth all students will be required to take final examinations, and those who do not make above 35 per cent will be thrown out of school.

We convey our deepest sympathy to those students who now will have to strive so diligently to achieve a grade of 35 on exams.

Pay For Peeps At Jerkeley

John Greenbacker's DTH article on "scoping" was well writen, but it has produced a very unwelcome aftermath:

Carolina coeds are now a lot more cautious than in the past about pulling their shades down, thanks to Greenbacker's friendly warning.

Thus, they have deprived this school's male students of many long and enjoyable hours of lecherous fun.

No — there isn't any need for alarm. Just look what happened at Jerkeley University after the girls "wised up."

"I don't mind being seen, but I think it's a pity we're not paid for undressing in front of the windows," one coed said when she saw a "scoping" article in The Daily Cowlifornian.

So Sally Can-can and several comely friends organized an undressing service.

Under this arrangement, the girls in Cob Webb dorm agreed to undress 20 times each night for the boys of Con-her provided they turned over to the coeds a substantial amount of their social fees.

Frosted windows went up whenever the boys defaulted on their payments. And this was quite often, too; for everybody in Con - her soon exhausted their spending money by purchasing binoculars.

Eventually, the girls became unionized. Any coed caught undressing without being paid was immediately expelled from the union.

During hot weather, union rules were relaxed since it was assumed the girls would pull up the shades and windows even if they didn't receive money for doing this.

Girls who insisted on not pulling their shades all the way up were dismissed as "unsatisfactory workers."

Consultants from the local burlesque houses showed the coeds how to improve their service.

Before long, all rooms in the boys' dorm facing Cob Webb were turned into plush drinking clubs.

There was no danger, however, of the girls "fraternizing with the customers" since they remained a safe 100 yards away.

But students under 21 were prohibited from living in the vicinity.

Dirty films replaced the girls during exam time so they could devote full attention to their studies.

Even the flicks had to be seen with binoculars. To insure realism, the shades were pulled over the screens at the movies' conclusions.

Some of the more expensive rooms in the boys' dorm featured telescopes.

The coeds of Cob Webb hotly denied complaints that they were spying on the Con-her boys. "That's not true," one girl protested. "We are honest. If we spied on the undressing men, we'd pay them for their services."

Meanwhile, the University passed a rule allowing faculty members to live in Con - her. Immediately, thirty PH.D's moved into the building — despite objections from their wives.

Several months later, part of Con - her dorm was converted into classrooms so students could receive first - hand instruction on "Marriage and the Family."

In fact, the Chancellor himself soon decided to move his office into Con - her. And once he established himself there, he suddenly discovered he had to spend more time working late at night.

But by this time, the girls had already been evicted from Cob Webb — so that they could be replaced by Playboy Bunnies.

Movie Review

'Umbrella' Catches Showers Of Praise

BY SHARON FINCH

The rain in Spain might stay mainly in the plain, but in France "The Umbrellas of Cherbourg" are catching all the showers — and it is raining raves!

The Ely Landau film about young love, told completely in song and dazzling color, is one of the most charming boy - meets - girl - and - they - fall - in - love plots ever filmed. The miracle that Betty Smith accomplished with such a trite and oversentimental plot in "Joy in the Morning," Director Jacques Demy accomplishes with this sadly cynical musical about a garage worker named Guy who loves the daughter of the owner of a Cherbourg umbrella shop, Genevieve.

Guy lives with an invalid god - mother, Elise, who is cared for by Madeleine, a young woman of 20. Guy goes into service for two years, leaving Genevieve pregnant unknowingly. The umbrella business falls off and the shop is sold.

Guy does not write and Genevieve, certain he has forgotten her, marries a diamond merchant, Monsieur Casard. Guy returns, marries Madeleine; Elise dies; and in a final scene on a snowy Christmas Eve, Guy and Genevieve accidentally meet at a service station; then they part to go their separate ways forever.

Jacques Demy's transformation of sadness and cynicism into unique and haunting beauty has won the film five international awards: Grand Prix, Cannes Film Festival; Best Female Acting Award for Catherine Deneuve, French Film Academy; Prix Louis Delluc, French Critics Award; International Catholic Cinema Award; First Prize, French Film Commission for Superior Technique.

Demy, only 33, has a "magic touch" with characters and with total effect. Elise, for him, is the one touching character in the film. In French she signifies "tenderness, mulberry jam, lilac satin, resignation, modesty." With Demy it's the modesty that wins. His aunt Elise moves us but doesn't keep us from smiling even when she dies.

The dexterity of Demy in the area of total affect is even more striking. When you leave the Cherbourg of Demy you can never again ask a station attendant to "fill it up" without looking at him queetly as if he were going to start to sing.

Catherine Deneuve, a slight, etherealooking beauty, is wonderful as Genevieve. If ever a director had a perfect ingenue lead, she is it. The sister of French screen star Francoise Dorleac and the daughter of actor, Maurice Dorleac, Catherine was "born in a trunk." She is convincing on the screen, and has a natural beauty of face and figure that easily adapts to Demy's unadorned love story.

Nino Castelnuovo as Guy is quite good. He conveys the emotions of a boy in love for the first time, despite his 26 years of age. He has French good looks — very dark with expressive eyes. His voice is compelling in song, and his acting strong.

The supporting cast are all talented and well - cast. Anne Vernon, as Mme. Emery, Genevieve's mother, has a large part that she portrays effectively. She is the typical mother, has a large part that she portrays effectively. She is the typical mother, wishing the best for her daughter; she is forgiving of Genevieve's unfortunate circumstances and does not push her into her marriage with Monsieur Casard.

Roland Cassard, played by Marc Michel, is a small part but one requiring skill in reflecting a variety of character traits in short space: compassion, understanding, deep love, humility, and faith. Marc Michel is well qualified for the role.

Madeleine and Elise are seen infrequently in the film. Both are stereotypical roles: the girl who loves secretly and wins her loved one in the end; the dying aunt, who lingers on and on and finally passes away. Demy's direction, more than the capabilities of either Ellen Farmer as Madeleine or Mirelle Perrey as Elise, seems responsible for the lasting impression of these two characters.

Michel Legrand's musical score is lively at times, nostalgic and sentimental at others. The theme song, "I Will Wait for You," is the beautifully haunting love song Guy and Genevieve sing at Guy's departure into the service. It is the most memorable song in the score.

Jean Rabier's cinematography and J. Moreau's costuming complement each other nicely. Moreau's costumes are in vivid colors — hot pinks, oranges, bright aquas, rich emerald greens. Often the costumes pick up themes from Bernard Evein's sets, especially wallpaper patterns. Colors appear still moist form the artist's mixing.

Enchanting, tender, full of the "bouquet of youth," bold in concept, delicate in execution . . . . all the phrases describe "The Umbrellas of Cherbourg." But its special appeal is to "The young in heart" who can remember when the world stood still when someone held them, and walked with them in the rain and everything was wonderful.

No Mail In The Sunshine

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

"Neither rain nor hail nor sleet nor snow will stop these couriers from completing their appointed rounds."

So what gives? It's a beautiful, sunny day, but the postman's creed doesn't say anything about his completing his appointed rounds in sunshine. Evidently that must be what stops ths postman to South Campus. It's almost tomorrow and we're still waiting for yesterday's mail. We've heard of being slow and the Christmas rush, but this is ridiculous.

See Game, Not Drunks

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The following is an answer to Mr. John J. Foley's letter of Dec. 9 in which he complains about "certain specific instances" at a basketball game which make the title "Carolina Gentleman" ridiculous. He feels that the time has come to "explode" the "myth" of the "'Carolina Gentleman.'"

For the purpose of drinking, some attend a game. In order to watch these get drunk, others do the same.

The drunks, while being obnoxious, at least know who's ahead.

Mr. Foley, ignoring the game, listens for ugly words said.

"Mr. Foley, what's the score?" someone kindly asks.

"Don't ask me the score," he says; "I am busy counting flasks."

I agree, Mr. Foley, it's bad for a fan to be loaded.

However, not the "myth" of the Carolina Gentleman, but your ways need to be exploded.

'Dixie' Must Go

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Today, one of my professors said that Dixie is dead. Unhappily, he is not yet right. The Old South, with its archaic ideas and lost causes, like the hooked fish, is now putting up the last desperate struggle before its inevitable engulfment into the twentieth century. It is only a short matter of time until its complete loss of identity.

The waving of the "Stars 'n' Bars," the "Fergit, Hell!" plaques, and the mesmerization by the song "Dixie" are in the same class with the nauseating harangues of George Wallace, Robert Shelton, etc. The deification of such symbols by certain students is a fleeting attempt at reinstating their rapidly dying ideals.

To ban these symbols, as has been suggested, is, however, as ludicrous as the symbols, themselves. It doesn't seem like too long ago that I was haranguing aoubt a ban, myself.

Executives Don Role Of Students

By MARY JO HESTER
Special to the DTH

Forty - seven major executives from North Carolina and neighboring states will once again don the role of students on the UNC campus on Thursday as they participate in the 13th annual Executive Program of the School of Business Administration.

This week's visit will mark the fifth of the alternate weekends in the Program, which includes two weeks of full-time residence and eight alternate weekends. The Program runs from October through March of each year.

During the period between 1943 and 1958 many universities in the United States and Canada began to offer management courses for men already occupying management positions. Today there are approximately 40 advanced management programs within the United States.

The University of North Carolina established its first Executive Program in 1953 with Dr. Willard J. Graham as initiator and director.

Before coming to North Carolina, Dr. Graham directed a successful program for 10 years at the University of Chicago.

"I would certainly put this (program) in the top five Executive Programs in the country, for several reasons," director Graham said in a recent interview.

"We get substantially more homework, individual work, than most other Programs because of the spaced schedule."

The men study at home between sessions, in small discussion groups, and in class meetings. This affords them "more total exposure to ever assignment, case, and problem than most other programs," Dr. Graham said.

"Per class hour, this sort of operation has a greater, more lasting impact on the student," he said.

Another reason why UNC's Executive Program is among the top, Dr. Graham stressed, is that "we have close to the best faculty of any program with which I am acquainted, and I'm acquainted with quite a few. We really have a tough bunch of faculty members in the Program."

Other features which make Carolina's Program unique include the long - range plan and the Management Development, INC. (MDI). Upon application to the Program, each executive must develop and submit a written long-ranged plan for his company. Many have followed the plan through to its maturity.

MDI is a stock corporation chartered by the alumni of the Program to expand this contributions of the Program throughout the state.

MDI, by invitation, enters a community to conduct an Institute taught by alumni of the Executive Program. The alumni receive no pay but are awarded shares of MDI. Approximately 500 businessmen have studied in this Institute.

Although most of the executive students are from North Carolina, a considerable number come from Virginia, Tennessee, and South Carolina. Dr. Graham said that men as far away as New York City, Pittsburg, and Decatur, Ala. have attended the sessions.

During the first year of the Program a man from Murphy, N. C. drove a total of 9,100 miles to attend the 13 separate meetings.

"Rarely do we have anyone here who doesn't want definitely to do the work," said Dr. Graham. "No man has ever dropped out of the Program voluntarily."

Army, Navy Next For UNC Dolphins

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

With five straight victories under their belts the UNC varsity swimming teams hits the road today along with the freshmen for meets later this week at Army and Navy.

The Dolphins and Baby Dilphins leave this afternoon and will arrive in Annapolis, Md., late tonight. They will swim against Navy's Midshipmen on Wednesday, spend the night again, then travel to West Point, N. Y. The frosh will swim against Army on Friday and the varsity takes on the cadets Saturday.

Varsity coach Pat Earey says his team is in good physical and psychological shape for the two meets, which will be UNC's toughest of the year.

"These boys have enough experience so that swimming away from home shouldn't bother them. The question is whether or not we have enough material to take Army and Navy.

"Army finished second last year to Yale in the Eastern Intercollegiate meet and has the material to do it again or even beat them this year. As for Navy, we have an outside chance to beat them. We're going to give both of them a good meet and we're looking for good efforts that will be valuable later on this year."

Ond Dolphin who will be left behind is diver Rob Aydelette. Working out on the high parallel bars last week, Aydelette broke his wrist and will be out for six weeks. His loss leaves Carolina without a diver for that period of time.

"We're not too worried, this will be our toughest competition of the year, but the boys are up for these meets. Army and Navy both have several good boys, but we have 12 real good ones."

In a meet on Saturday against Mcihigan State by mail, Randy Wade set a freshman record in the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 5:16.1. The medley relay team also broke a record with a 3:43.8 time. Canon said these records were particularly impressive since they were set against the clock. Results of the meet will not be known for awhile.

The varsity trounced East Carolin 'a rueday night, 66-28. Coach Earey praised Jim Bernuth for his 5:31 time in the 500, his first effort at that distance this year. Bernuth could be a big help in that event with a little more experience.

Grapplers Win, Then Lose

In a busy weekend of wrestling the UNC grapplers posted a win against Washington and Lee but bowed to the Cavliers of Virginia.

Friday's action saw Virginia, the titans of ACC wrestling, win 19 to 16. The Tar Heels jumped to an early lead but faltered in the finale.

"Virginia's heavyweight pinned Mundy in the last bout," Coach Barnes explained, "and they edged us out."

"We came back Saturday and posted a 17 to 11 win against Washington and Lee. It's the first time in five years that we've managed to beat them."

Last weekend's split brings the season record to three victories against one defeat.

Chris Hanburger Accepted With Professional Ranks

BY SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

During the last few months three North Carolina athletes have struggled through rigorous training sessions. All three survived the cold and harsh cuts. And now all three are established stars in the world of professional sports.

Ken Willard runs the ball for a west coast football team and is the third leading ground gainer in the NFL.

Billy Cunningham has astounded his teammates and horrified his opponents. And already he's the favorite for rookie - of - the - year honors in the NBA.

The third man doesn't get the headlines shared by the other two. But his success in the world where big men play for big money and play for keeps sets him apart from his famous friends. Chris Hanburger has done the impossible. He has made a professional team with a height of six feet and a weight under the two hundred mark. And in his first year as a pro he has earned a starting defensive berth.

Two Sundays ago the Redskins played the Cleveland Browns. If you tuned in your TV set you saw Hanburger. You could hardly have missed him. Number 55 was all over the screen. When he wasn't making tackles he was, at the very least, in on them.

Last Sunday was the first game that Chris has started. And after his performance against the finest team in the Eastern Division one thing is certain — it was the first of many.

"I was really happy to sign a pro contract," Hanburger said. "A lot of people told me that I was too small for the big league. I was lucky Washington gave me a chance.

"Summer camp wasn't as tough as I thought it would be. The coaches don't tell you if you're going to get axed. Bill McPeak, our head coach, sneaks up on you and draws you into his office. It's a very private ceremony.

"I was worried about having Bill drag me into that office. But the butterflies only lasted for the first week of tryouts. I realized that worrying wasn't helping me any so I just concentrated on playing football.

"The NFL is just as fine as I thought it would be. I'm not tired at all, either physically or mentally. I'm playing football. And I could never grow tired of doing that.

"I've been delt some pretty good blows. But football's rough wherever you go.

"The Browns are the toughest team we've played, and it is not hard to guess whose the best man that I've tried to tackle. Jimmy Brown has great balance. He's real tough to bring down."

Then Hanburger talked about the differences between college and pro football.

"The main one I've experienced is that the college game is a lot less complicated. Up here we change our defense from week to week. Sometimes we alter it drastically. It depends on who we play. I have lots of homework to do.

"After the season I'm coming back to Carolina to finish up some courses that I still need to graduate. But my long - range, off season plans are still up in the air. No matter what I do I'll concentrate on my football.

"I've got an awful lot to learn. Experience will be my best teacher. I hope to play ball up here for a good many years."

And for a long time we'll be able to sit back in a soft easy chair with a beer clutched between our hands in front of the TV screen. And for a lot of Sundays we'll proudly share Chris Hanburgers' grueling experiences right along with him.

Lenoir Hall Food 'Bugged'

The fears of a generation of Lenoir Hall customers came to life this week when a cockroach-sized bug popped up in John Guard's spinach.

The Popular Branch senior, who has worked in bean processing plants is sure the insect was in the can to begin with.

"It was the type bug you normally see in the fields," Guard said. "I don't think it was added at Lenoir."

The Lenoir Hall manager apologized and told him to get another plate. "He was very nice about it and I was too.

What Color Is God?

"What color is God?" the Negro student asked.

"White," the Klansman replied. He was B. H. Ingle, a lay Baptist preacher from Raleigh.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes," the Klansman said as the two confronted each other after Congressman Charles Weltner's appearance here Monday.

"Why?"

"Because your race has sinned."

"Can we be cleansed of sin?" Phil Clay, the Negro, asked?

"Yes . . . and when you are, you will be white."

"He isn't a typical Klansman," Clay said afterwards. "He spoke to me."

Climbers Seek Danger

BY JOHN GLEN
Special To The DTH

The climber whipped out his hammer and drove a piton as a safety measure. He swiftly attached his rope to the piton and began to climb the sheer face.

Suddenly the ledge beneath him disintegrated. The climber pushed away from the cliff and dangled from his rope.

He reached for a new hanghold and took a deep breath as his feet found solid rock beneath him.

This may not be an everyday happening for climbers, but according to members of the Carabiner Club of Carolina, it's something to expect every day when you go climbing.

The 35 - member group also has a faction at UNC-G of 20 girls.

The club was formed in 1961 by Forrest Green and David Dantzler. Their first outing consisted of rappelling down the side of Mangum Dorm.

The club now meets on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m., room 205 Mitchell Hall to plan the following weekend's outing.

Hugh Owens, president of the club, explained why people climb. "Its not just because its there that we climb. Most of the climbers are afraid of heights. We climb to overcome our own fears and to develop the courage to face lifes hardships."

Safety and teamwork are the main points stressed by climbers. "Each climber is expected to do his part to protect the lives of others. If this fails then someone will get hurt," Owens said.

A trip starts at 6 a.m. on Sunday from South building. The climbers stop by Greensboro to pick up the girls and usually drive to Pilot mountain or to Hanging Rock State Park.

A MEMBER of the Carabiner Club of Carolina shows how.

The climb does not begin when they reach their destination. Instead lecutres in rope handling and the proper techniques of securing hand and footholds are given.

'No climber goes on the cliffs until he can secure his own rope and has taken several practice falls to get used to having his life dnagling from a rope," Owens said.

Climbers don't hurry to get to the top. They take great pains at making sure the next foothold will support their weight.

"We can't make mistakes in this business," Owens said. His job is to find the safest route to the top. If he makes a mistake it will be his last one. Never more than one man climbs at a time, so that if a member falls the lead man will arrest him with the rope.

One climb usually takes several hours. The leader has to determine how difficult the climb is and how long the climb will take.

The worst thing that can happen to a team is to get caught in a rain storm or to have darkness set in while climbing. Either condition makes climbing extremely dangerous.

The condition of the rocks, the weather and the amount of daylight we have are factors in determining the success and amount of enjoyment the club will have in a climb."

But for members, climbing is not only a great sport. It is a good physical conditioner. And the energy spent on a climb is shown by the way they wolf down food after a day on the rocks.

Campus Radio Bill Stalls In Committee

BY JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

A bill to establish a Campus Radio Board of Directors, which was defeated by Student Legislature five weeks ago and reintroduced last week by its sponsors, was declared held indefintely in the Rules Committee of SL yesterday.

Rules Committee Chairman Bill Long (SP) made the announcement after 15 minutes of closed deliberation by the three committee members present for the meeting.

The committee reached its decision after hearing testimony by Campus Radio Committee Chairman John Stupak and Rep. Hugh Blackwell (SP).

Blackwell, former chairman of the SL Finance Commtitee, has led the fight against Stupak and campus radio since last spring.

Under original plans a campus carrier current radio station would broadcast low - power, non - commercial AM-FM radio programming of student interest to campus living units.

It would cost an initial outlay of over $24,000 and nearly $11,000 annually to operate.

Stupak told the committee he was withdrawing the campus radio financial bill pending further investigation of finances, which he said could only effectively be conducted by the Campus Radio Board.

Blackwell opposed forming the Radio Board, because he claimed passage of the Radio Board Bill might "oblige" legislature to vote money to campus radio in the future.

"We can't pass this bill and disregard the financial issues which may come up in the future," Blackwell said.

He quoted figures which he said indicated Student Govment suplus funds of nearly $65,000 which took nearly 20 years to accumulate.

Blackwell urged that the Campus Radio Committee of Student Government conduct the investigations which Stupak claims a campus radio board could only do.

– "Let's dispose of the campus radio issue once and for all," Blackwell said.

Stupak said only a radio board could act officially as a financial investigator for campus radio, in the eyes of the UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

Stupak said no investigations could be conducted without the assistance of the radio department.

He urged passage of the bill in light of the results of last October's student referendum, which supported campus radio by a vote of nearly three to one.

Long said the committee postponed action on the bill because further investigation was necessary.

Long also said reintroduction of the same bill five weeks after its defeat by the legislature made consideration "dilatory."

Libertarian Economist Will Speak Tonight In Gerrard

Dr. Ludwig Von Mises, world famous libertarian economist, will speak on "The Problem of Private Property" tonight at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

Von Mises, who advocates a laissez faire capitalistic economy, is professor of economics at the Graduate School of Business Administration of New York University.

From 1934 to 1940 he occupied the chair of International Economic Relations at the Graduate Institute of International Studies at Geneva, Switzerland.

In 1940 he came to the United States.

Von Mises' most famous works include "Human Action," "Planning for Freedom," "Omnipotent Government," "Bureaucracy," and "The Anti - Capitalistic Mentality."

LUDWIG VON MISES

Students from Duke, the University of Virginia and N. C. State are expected to attend the address, which is sponsored by the Carolina Conservative Club.

Von Mises will come to Chapel Hill after addressing the student body of Davidson College.

"Dr. Von Mises' lecture should prove interesting to students in all academic persuits," Conservative Club President Wilson Clark said yesterday.

"Professor Mises has over 60 years of experience in the humanities and social sciences," he said.

Baptist Says Klan's Hate Is Religious

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

North Carolina students got a dose of Klan teachings combined with old - time religion when B. H. Ingle, a lay Baptist preacher from Raleigh, showed up at Congressman Charles Weltner's Monday night talk.

Ingle, an elderly man about 5 feet 6 inches tall, explained to about 40 UNC students clustered around him why members of the Klan commit violence despite their interest in religion.

"Your pastor tells you what to do," he said, "but he can't control you. Only the blood of Christ can do this — which is why the Klan sometimes has troubles with members."

Ingle explained that his group burns crosses because they are "evil. The Romans and the Jews crucified Christ upon a cross; that's the reason the Klan has its present attitude toward them."

Phil Clay, a Negro UNC sophomore from Wilmington, asked Ingle if he could come to a Klan rally.

"No you can't." the preacher replied. "But you're welcome to form a Klan chapter of your own."

The crowd laughed.

Ingle suggested that God has punished the Negroes "by making their skins black.

"But when they enter the Kingdom, they'll be white."

Clay said the Klan "twists the Bible to suit its own twisted ideology."

Explaining why the Klan is secret, Ingle said: "Well, when you have a sweetheart or get married you'll find out soon enough what I mean."

More laughs from the crowd.

"The believer in quality education," he said, "will get farther and farther from the glories of God. I'm convinced all these people really know is a little bit of psychology."

Ingle insisted the Devil "causes every pain. I know this for sure. The image of God is glory."

Low Q.P. Average Doesn't Mean KP

UNC students whose QP average is below 2.00 and who are worried about being drafted can relax.

The State Headquarters for the North Carolina Selective Service in Raleigh says that low quality point averages and class standings are no longer used as classification requirements.

The new requirement states that North Carolina students have to carry a full academic load of 15 hours or in some cases 12 hours, depending on the college rules.

There are exceptions to this rule however. Local boards can draft students who have been in college for five years or more and have not received their undergraduate degree.

The State Board also said that many students failed to fill out 109 Forms (application for II-S status).

The Selective Service considers II-S students as those "whose activities and studies found to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety or interests."

Dates Corrected

Dates that were incorrectly listed in the General Catalogue and the Student - Faculty Directory have been corrected.

Charles Bernard, Chairman of the Calendar Committee, announced that the following dates will be followed.

Classes will end for Spring recess at 12 noon, April 2, 1966. Instruction will resume at 8 a.m. April 12.

The first summer session will begin with registration on June 9, 1966 with classes the following day. The second session registration is scheduled for July 18 and ends with exams on August 24-25.

Students Discuss Campus Sex

A group of psychatrists said yesterday, "Colleges should not worry about student 'sexual activity' practiced with appropriate attention to the sensitivities of other people."

Here are a few student reactions:

Ann Livingston, senior, Raiford — "I agree with the psychiatrists. I don't approve, however, of public displays of affection."

Richard Creel, grad student, Salisbury — "It's a private affair and no concern of other people."

Wolfgang Witz, senior, Montgomery, Ala. — "It's an individual's responsibility to take into consideration all his acts—be they sexual or otherwise."

Robert Adams, sophomore, Arlington, Va. — "I agree with the psychiatrists."

Carol Gallant, senior, Charlotte — "It's impossible for a university to set the moral standards for 12,000 students."

Need A Ride Home? Better Take A Bus

The transportation situation out of Chapel Hill for the Holidays is jammed as usual this year with the only relief in sight coming from the bus station.

"We understand the situation completely," said terminal manager Hubert Pearce yesterday afternoon. "Everything is completely full on most scheduled busses and were are adding several more to handle the demand."

Seaboard Railway out of Durham and Raleigh has had most of their trains booked solid for several weeks. Requests have dated back to the first week in September and no more reservations are being accepted on several trains. Particularly crowded are those going to Florida. The return situation is the same.

Holiday flights out of Raleigh - Durham Airport to such places at Atlanta, Charlotte, and Washington have been filled up for months but cancellations may come at any time.

An agent at Continental Travel Agency said that students should not be discouraged if they cannot get a seat on a flight leaving Friday or Saturday because there are often last minute cancellations.

Flights still open are: for Friday — Flight 323, leaving at 11 p.m., and Flight 553, leaving at 8:10 a.m.; and Flight 645 to Atlanta, leaving at 9 p.m.

On Saturday there are still seats on Flight 559 to Charlotte, and Eastern flight 501 to Charlotte leaving at 9:02 a.m.

All Eastern Airline flights to Chicago and surrounding areas are closed.

Students needing rides to and from the airport can contact the Tar Heel Cab company for limousine service that leaves from the Carolina Inn. The price is $3. The Carolina Cab company has a special group rate of $5.50 for five persons.

Extra busses to accomodate the holiday rush have been scheduled to insure that everybody has a seat.

The following will go to New York, by way of Richmond and Washington. Friday at 7:45 a.m., 3:35 p.m., 5:35 p.m., and at 9:30 p.m. More will also leave on Saturday and will be scheduled as the need arises.

These special busses are by reservation only to insure that everyone will also have a seat on the return trek. Prices are the same as regular fares.

Girls, Telephone Spell Poverty For Students

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

The telephone ads promised: "You can call anywhere, anytime you feel the need or wish," but Rick Dennehy is not so sure.

The Alexandria, Va., freshman may have to sell his motorcycle to pay the $95.05 phone bill he accumulated from Sept. 20 to Nov. 14.

And he still hasn't been billed for long distance conversations after Nov. 14.

"I sorta got carried away," he said during a telephone interview. "I have a girl at Wake Forest, a girl in Raleigh, a girl at Madison College and one back home, and when I am alone, I like to hear a female voice."

Dennehy reports he's not the only Morrison resident to succumb to temptation.

"You can spot people like me at the dorm snack bar," he said. "The day the phone bills arrive, you see people who normally buy milkshakes sharing their woes with each other over five - cent cokes.

"My roommate had a bill of $70 one month, though I think I'm now ahead of him. Many other students here have bills of $20 or more."

Dennehy claimed he had spent $51 on one girl alone, "And that's not counting the $35 person - to - person call.

Dennehy and the girls talk about "what's not mentioned in our letters."

The longest of his 36 long distance conversations was a 75 - minute chat with the Madison College coed. His farthest was to New York.

Dennehy's interest in the exact cost of phone bills is perhaps due to his being a mathematics major with an with an estimated 3.4 average.

"It would work like this," he said. "Whenever you felt like calling somebody out of town, you'd telephone a member of the group at UNC. Then you wouldn't have to pay the long distance charge.

"I think it's important," Dennehy said, "to learn to use the telephone properly. In fact, sometimes I believe I've had too much practice."

He ended the nighttime interview by saying: "I'm glad you called when you did. The phones at Madison College close at 11 p.m."

Student To Be Tried

The trial for UNC student William R. Bullard III, 21, is scheduled before the Orange County Superior Court sometime this week.

The Wagram youth was charged with possession of 3,000 peyote "buttons" and a few ounces of marijuana when Chapel Hill police raided his apartment at 127 W. Rosemary St. earlier this month.

Police Chief William D. Blake said initial bond was set at $5,000. Blake said the boy's father signed the bond. Bullard faces a maximum penalty of $1,000 fine and a five-year prison sentence if convicted.

Ugly Man Contest

The Ugly Man Contest ends Saturday at 1 p.m., so any fraternities and dorms wishing to submit "sealed bids" to support their candidates have to get them in by Friday, midnight.

Contest sponsors said entrance fees must be paid by Friday, also. Sealed bids may be brought to Merv Sessoms, 1206 Morrison.

Yesterday's totals: Honey Bun Hodges, first with 1,480 votes; Lambda Chi Lamb Chop, second with 1,239 votes; Joyner Coed, third with 885 votes; Delta upsilon, fourth with 711 votes; Morrison, fifth with 655 votes; Stacy, sixth with 628 votes; Manly, seventh with 559 votes; Phi Sigma Kappa, eighth with 212 votes; Parker - Teague - Avery, ninth with 186 votes.

Professors Speak

Four will present papers at the Modern Language Association Convention Dec. 27-29. Dr. Jacques Hardre, chairman of the Department of Romance Languages, will give a paper on "Albert Camus on Christian Metaphysics and Neoplatonism" in the Romance Section of the convention.

Dr. Joseph R. Jones will present a paper on "Guevara's Lost Chronicle" and Dr. John E. Keller will discuss "Folkloristic and Popular Elements in the 'Cantigas' of Alfonso the Wise."

The Spanish Literature of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries Section will feature a paper by Dr. Nicholson B. Adams. His topic is "Greetings From the Real Academia de Cordoba."

In addition, Dr. Sterling A. Stoudemire will attend a meeting of the American Name Society in Chicago Dec. 30. He will discuss "Guadalupe: The Transfer of a Hispano-Arabic Name."

Flying Club

Carl S. Travis, a senior in accounting, succeeded Rev. P. D. Midgett a president of the Chapel Hill Flying Club Monday night.

Most of the club members are student pilots working toward their private pilot's license.

Other officers elected were Grover Wrenn, vice president; Joanne Johnson, secretary and Chuck Rogers, Treasurer.

Christmas Lights

Chapel Hill's Christmas lights will remain up until after the holidays when they will be returned to the factory for check-up Merchant's Association's Executive Director Joe Augustine said today.

He said the lights were separately fused so there would be no danger of a black-out in Chapel Hill.

The lights have caught fire four times.

Augustine said he thought the fires resulted from electricity making contact with the decorative material.

Radio Speech

WUNC-FM will broadcast a taped recording tonight of a speech made here Monday by Dr. Robert J. Anderson, assistant surgeon general and chief of the Bureau of State Services. The half-hour program will begin at 7:28 p.m.

Anderson discussed the types of problems to be tackled at the National Center for Environmental Health Sciences now under construction in the Research Triangle Park.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

Of Black And White Ghettos

"Within the white ghetto of North Carolina, the best people — 'best' in terms of common sense, integrity, sanity — the best people in this white ghetto are Klansmen."

This statement by Pete Young, WRAL-TV newscaster, was perhaps the only new concept of the Klan offered at Monday night's panel discussion in Memorial Hall

More than 1,600 students, and a number of quiet Klansmen, heard Congressman Charles L. Weltner, CORE Chairman Floyd McKissick, Major L. P. McLendon and Young discuss the Klan, why it exists and what can be done about it.

Weltner, a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, said he attacks the Klan because of its terrorist activities, not its beliefs. McLendon, a Greensboro lawyer, said the South is not wholly to blame for the Klan because it all really began up North. McKissick, a Durham lawyer and civil rights leader, said the Klan is here because we allow a climate to exist where it can and will grow.

We have heard all this before.

But Young referred to President Johnson's personal attack on the Klan and his plea for a "return to decent society." Young denied that we have a decent society, "and until we do, the suffering people of the Carolina Klan will stay right where they are," he said.

Our society is indecent, he said, and it is looking for a scapegoat — which happens to be the Klan.

"That's the easy road, and the fatal one," he said. He issued a "desperate message for help" from the "white ghetto of the Carolina Klan."

His point is one which is seldom made, and although his broad assumptions about the "best" people in white ghettos and the decency of society are at best questionable, we cannot go so far as Major McLendon and deny that white ghettos exist.

All Rise For 'Dixie'

Greensboro Daily News

The editors of th North Carolina State Technician who stuffily call upon performing groups to ban "Dixie" from public rendition utterly miss the point. So, for that matter, do their somber critics who angrily urge its preservation, along with grits and battle flags, as regional museum pieces.

Their ambitions are unduly modest. Far from being banned because "Dixie" stirs a response "that might be termed Pavlovian" of shouts and stomps and song, it really should be pushed to replace "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the national anthem.

If a moment of irreverence may be pardoned, "The Star-Spangled Banner" has no equal as a wet blanket of an anthem. This musicological monstrosity, refurbished from an old English drinking song, always leaves the question whether its composer, writing for the grog trade, had not rather heavily partaken before setting quill to paper.

The world has its fine patriotic anthems — some somber and stirring like "God Save The Queen" or Haydn's "Deutschland Uber Alles"; some vigorous and bracing, like "Dixie" and "La Marseillaise." But it was a bad day on Capitol Hill those three-odd decades ago when Congress capitulated to whatever tone-deaf lobby inspired the adoption of "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the national anthem. To sing one verse of it is to risk hospitalization for laryngitis or ennui or both, and all four verses shouldn't have happened to George III himself.

What a musical marvel, by contrast, is "Dixie"! Written as a Yankee spoof on the eve of Fort Sumter, its stirring melody and agreeable lyrics caught on and quickly gave it quasi-official status as an anthem of the Lost Cause.

Now we think the era of Lost Cause parachialism for "Dixie," which is unworthy of it, is outdated.

The Technician editors were commendably concerned lest it comfort "unreconstructed Southerners" and discomfort their enemies. But the history of a rousing anthem can't be held against it. In France the royalist today sings "La Marseillaise" with all the fervor of the sanscullot; and in America, there is as much to be said for "frosty mornings" in Dixieland as for a symbolic triumph over the British in Baltimore harbor.

If "Dixie's" friends — as stirred by its strains as they are bored by those of "The Star-Spangled Banner" — should push it seriously as a competitor for national song there would really be no contest. On musical merits, it would topple "The Star-Spangled Banner" tomorrow.

And why not?

The Student Speaks

Capitalism Belongs In World Today

Editor's Note: Ludwig von Mises speaks tonight in Gerrard Hall at 8, sponsored by the Carolina Conservative Club.

By WILSON CLARK, JR.

Perhaps the most common, and certainly most persistent complaint, that the advocates of capitalism must contend with is the argument that "capitalism was fine for a simple, agrarian society, but surely one must recognize the necessity for strong governmental planning in today's complex world."

This argument appears reasonable on the surface, but looking underneath this clever rubric, one discovers that it is only a paper argument, that in actuality, this example overlooks the long-range significance and consequences of capitalism.

Again I turn to the most distinguished advocate of the capitalist system, Dr. Ludwig von Mises, and particularly his small but powerful volume, Bureaucracy (Yale, New Edition, 1962). In this book, first published in 1944, Dr. von Mises examines the fundamental aspects of the free economy versus the planned economy.

His interesting analysis concerns the perennial problem of the socialists and interventionists, the actual mechanism of state planning. Professor Mises contrasts this form of planning, which he terms "bureaucratic management," with the structure of planning evidenced by the captalist system, or "profit management."

Mises observes that in the capitalist system, the entrepreneur depends on the mechanism of the free market, as it is affected by his economic decisions, whereas under the socialist system, in which there is no be made by the state. Herein lies the fracture. How does the state know how to set prices, for example?

Before answering this, let us return to the capitalist system, and examine the nature of its economic decisions and calculations.

The capitalist entrepreneur must produce according to the wishes of the people, the consumers, or he loses his job. As Mises observes, "The capitalists, the entrepreneurs, and the farmers are the people's mandatories. If they do not obey, if they fail to produce, at the lowest possible cost, what the consumers are asking for, they lose their office."

On the other hand, in the socialist system, no such automatic check and balance regulator is present. Instead of one's success depending on profit and loss, the system shifts to the bureaucrat's whim. Mises states: "A government is not a profit-seeking enterprise. The conduct of its affairs cannot be checked by profit-and-loss statements. Its achievement cannot be valued in terms of money."

Carrying the argument to its predestined conclusion, Mises reveals the true weakness of planning, the stigma of socialism, with his analysis of "the unaboidable weakness of any administration of public affairs.

"The lack of standards which could, in an unquestionable way, ascertain success or nonsuccess in the performance of an official's duties creates insoluble problems. It kills ambition, destroys initiative and the incentive to do more than the minimum required. It makes the bureaucrat look at instructions, not at material and real success."

Thus, von Mises concludes that the system best adapted to the fulfillment of man's needs is not socialism, with its corollary, "bureaucratic management," but capitalism and "profit management."

The argument proposed by modern collectivists, which I mentioned originally, merely states that increasing size (of the economy and state) renders capitalism impotent.

Professor Mises clearly and succinctly reduces this thinly conceived contention to shreds, simply by illustrating that it is socialism, with its bureaucratic torpor, which cannot administrate the expanding economy of today, not capitalism, which can adapt to the situation.

Many socialists have begrudgingly recognized this monumental achievement in the science of economics, including the Polish socialist Oskar Lange (whose remarks are probably the most interesting). In his treatise, "On the Economic Theory of Socialism," Dr. Lange writes:

"A statue of Professor Mises ought to occupy an honorable place in the great hall of the Ministry of Socialization or of the Central Planning Board of a socialist state . . . both as an expression of recognition for the great service rendered by him and as a memento of the prime importance of sound economic planning."

Quarterly Can Speak For Us

You know what I'd like to see in the Carolina Quarterly? I'd like to see a story about a couple who falls in love playing sex bowl football.

You know what else I'd like to see in the Carolina Quarterly? I'd like to see a story about what happens when a fire breaks out in a girls' dormitory. I'd like to read a story about a student politician who breaks down, or about Silent Sam, or sex in the Arboretum, or about love and hate and passion and jealousy in general at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

I probably won't get to read those stories. I think that's because the kind of people that could write them don't. The people that like to sit alone and spin out stories from their own minds do write. The people who get out and and see, feel, touch, hear, smell and give don't write.

At least they don't write for the Carolina Quarterly. They may write for their English classes or for their dorm newspaper, but not for the Quarterly.

Well, some of them ought to write for the Quarterly, because the Quarterly can do something that themes and newspapers can't. It can capture and crystallize the spirit of this generation of Carolina student.

But people that feel that spirit never think of writing stories about it. There are plenty of people who could write them. Let's take a hypothetical, semi-literate business administration major named Bill who thinks a plot is something a homesteader gets from the government.

Bill can't spell a lick. But if his heart goes out to the fellow down the hall who washed out of school, to the economics professor who skips his dinner to drive the marginal propensity to consume through Bill's thick skull, to the boys in Conner sighting in on the girls in Winston—if he loves this old campus with all he's got, then Bill's a born writer. I wish he'd write for the Carolina Quarterly.

The Quarterly isn't exactly a topic of burning interest around here, but it could be. It could be if old Bill would write a story in five to ten-letter words about the time his car wouldn't start at W. C. and he had to ask to sleep in a girls' dorm lobby because he was broke and it was cold and all the girls mothered him in the morning.

If people like Bill would get together and put out a Carolina Quarterly, we'd have a publication that spoke for us, that told how we feel. It could tell our parents, the Legislature, posterity—and ourselves—just what we are.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Letters To The Editor

Court Ruling Is Right

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Before everyone begins ranting and raving about the Supreme Court's "one man-one vote" ruling as being, in Barry Jacobs' words (DTH, Dec 10), "illogical", "unfair", "a bad decision',, and "not making sense,,' let us remember that the United States Congress was set up with one house apportioned according to population and the other by state as a compromise between federal authority and state sovereignty.

Towns, cities, counties and districts, however, have never been vested with any sovereignty rights under the state. Therefore, on this basis the Supreme Court can logically and understandably order any state which has apportioned its legislature on the basis of any other model than "one man - one vote" to make the necessary changes.

Ehringhaus Here, Too

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We in Ehringhaus do things in a slower more deliberate manner. We have never and never will stoop to compete with other dormitories or residence colleges. We sit back, struggle forward, and learn. In the Dec. 12 article written by Allen Warren, we were ignored, and the campus was given a thrilling report on the activities of our near neighbors.

We have never considered ourselves to be in a death race with any other living unit. We do not spread over campus every minute detail of what we do, we don't feel that it is necessary to advertise.

We do hold several unique positions! We feel that in the case of Morrison as a mother feels when her children grow up and leave home. Byron McCoy, the present Governor over there, had his dynamic beginning as a leader in Ehringhaus, and gained many of his talented abilities while serving here last year as President, as well as stylist of a small unique "in crowd" leadership group.

Architecturally, we are not the same as Craige and Morrison, in that we lack numerous areas for study and social functions on the numerous floors of our unit. We gave up our recreation room so that South Campus might have a dining facility, which is now the athletic dining hall, with the completion of Chateau Chase.

We are allowed to use our small study room for dances, but this eliminates any place to study. There is a small room on our ground floor which should be used as a Go Go Club or a Cowboy lounge, but it is presently being used as an occasional study area for various athletic groups, although the sole use of this facility has been begrudgingly promised us over and over again.

We have suffered from apathy, but this is due to many reasons. This year, however, we have many active people, especially among our 400 freshmen. As for rank we may not be on top, but let's just set the record straight. We are number one in the production of campus leaders, we are first to have a legal residence hall Constitution (which has been copied at times almost verbatum by Craige, Morrison, and Scott Colleges), and we are number one as far as dormitory newspapers are concerned.

Furthermore we were the first to have a Residence College Senate, and we presently hold more dorm offices, class offices and student govenment committee positions than any other campus group.

And finally we will be the first to enter the Residence College system Constitutionally and on our own without the help or pushing from any other campus group.

Hints For Jennings

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to comment on Mike Jennings' Sunday column, "Quarterly Has Bad Fiction". It is encouraging to see that the Tar Heel had found a place for literary criticism. Now it needs only to find a literary (or even literate) critic.

Certainly Mr. Jennings is entitled to his opinions, because the final critic of any story (or newspaper column) is the reader. But his criticism, rather than being incisive or constructive, merely consists of a series of wildly thrown barbs and sophomoric statements on "what good fiction should be."

He refers to the Quarterly's short stories as incoherent, pop art, and "totally incomprehensible." In reading the stories in question, I found these remarks to reflect more on Mr. Jennings than on the work he attacks. He concludes by calling the authors "beatniks," which I suppose these days is "The unkindest cut of them all."

I have a few suggestions for Mr. Jennings. He asks, "What's the good of mirroring our culture?" I suggest that he reconsider his role of journalist if he cannot answer that question himself.

He states, "Good writers—and great writers—don't preach the doctrine of despair." I suggest he read a little thing called "Hamlet."

He decides, "Our great American writers are gone." I suggest he read some Bellow, some Nabokov, or some Malamud. I suggest that he talk less about great writing and art and that he sit down at his typewriter and try to turn some out.

I suggest that he, rather than labeling people whom he doesn't know as "beatniks," go out and find what makes an individual tick, what motivates an individual who could write a story he doesn't like. He may find the material for a fine short story.

Griffith House Adopts Korean Orphan

House President Tommy Spencer announces the adoption of a nine-year-old Korean orphan by the men of Griffith House, Morrison Residence College. Shin Dahl Shik, the new addition to the Griffith House family, is described to us as a lively, manly, honest and faithful boy. He was born on November 22, 1956 in Seoul, Korea, in a family of poor Korean farmers. When his father died of an unknown disease in 1959, the family was reduced to poverty. As a result of these harsh conditions his mother died three years later when Dahl Shik was six, and he was taken in by neighbors. Then a while later a local official took him to the Nam Book Ye Yook Won home for orphans where he is now living.

Following the path of his newfound brothers at Griffith House, Dahl Shik is a good student in the fourth year of Primary School. His favorite subjects are reading and arithmetic. His teachers describe him as a healthy boy making good progress. Aside from the books, he is interested in handicrafts.

We, the men of Griffith House want to wish everyone a Merry Christmas and a Happy New year. This adoption is only a small part of our task to try to promote Peace on Earth and Good Will to Man, giving to others as we ourselves feel we have received.

Penn Coed Rapped For Attacking Cop

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A University of Pennsylvania coed accused of attacking a campus guard must devote five hours a week next term to working for the guards.

Penn's committee on discipline imposed this penance on 21-year-old Amy Lowenstein, treasurer of the senior class and a member of the university committee to end the war in Viet Nam.

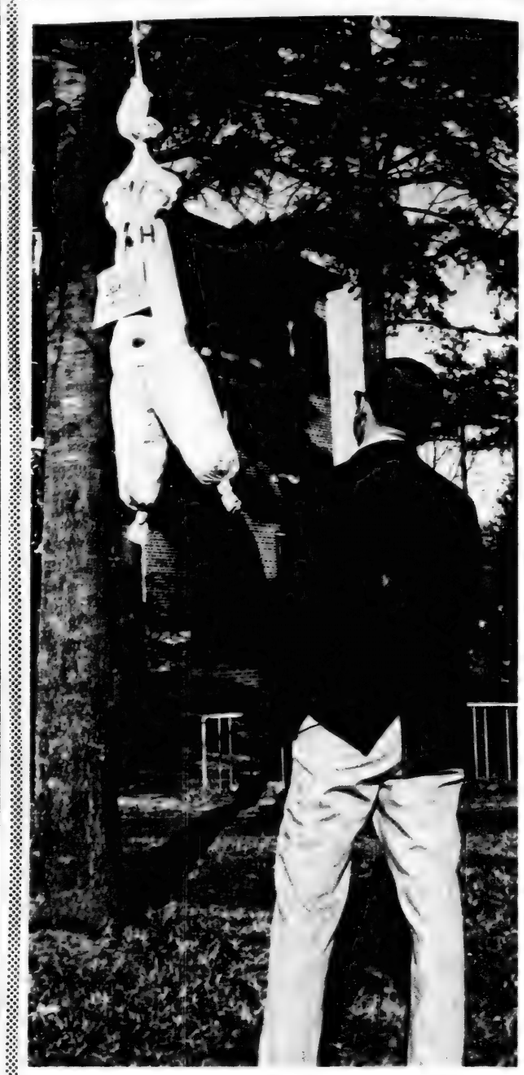
Miss Lowenstein and Theodore Fagin, 26, were arrested Oct. 24, after an altercation with campus guards. The guards said the two were trying to sell a socialist magazine in a men's dormitory, that they refused to identify themselves, and fought with the officers seeking to arrest them. This is forbidden in Penn dormitories.

Magistrate Ralph Dennis held them for the grand jury on charges of resisting arrest, assault and battery on a policeman, trespassing and conspiracy. Dennis acted over the objections of the state, Penn officials and the defense attorney, who agreed the charges should be dropped. The grand jury later did drop them.

The University's discipline committee, made up of administration, faculty and student members heard the case against Miss Lowenstein last Friday and disclosed its decision today. Since Fagin is not a student no action was taken against him.

For 15 weeks starting next month Miss Lowenstein will be assigned chores by the guards. She is also prohibited from taking part in extracurricular activities for the 15-week period.

She said she would appeal her case to a Vice Provost, who has primary responsibility for student affairs. She said that working five hours a week without pay "is tantamount to slave labor."



DTH staffwriter John Greenbacker has reason to contemplate this effigy left hanging in a tree near Alexander residence hall. It's his effigy. 'Young Man, You Get Out Of Here!'

By CURTIS PATTON
Special to the DTH

It was a relatively warm night. Alderman Hall was the scene. "Forward!" shouted the mob of rowdy males as they stormed the women's residence hall.

Down went the French doors between the terrace and the living room. Students at the front of the mob hesitated, while those at the rear continued to shout "Forward!"

"Young man, you get out of here!" shouted Mrs. J. C. Clamp, the housemother.

"Don't push me, Mrs. Clamp," he answered. "I'm the assistant to the Dean of Students. I'm here to try to break it up."

It was broken up, and Carolina had experienced its first panty raid on that late winter night of the 1951-52 academic year.

The height of such scurrilous activity came in the early '50's. During that period they spread like wild fire across the nation's campuses.

Carolina was no exception.

Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael was not here that year. Upon here return Mrs. Clamp told her of the event. "I felt like the rabbit that faced the north," Mrs. Clamp said.

Stories from the English newspaper in Beirut, Lebanon, and the Manila Bulletin were sent to Dean Carmichael in the spring of 1953 about panty raids that had occurred on the UNC campus that year.

Warnings of possible panty raids were issued in 1959 because of wide-spread activity at the University of California at Berkley. The Berkley campus was the scene of thousands of dollars of water damage to buildings, resulting from water hose used by students.

The panty raid appears to be a spontaneous event in which male students on campus are swooped up by mob action, Dean Carmichael said.

Co-eds spark the pilot light occasionally, which doesn't help matters for campus police.

The last panty raid that Dean Carmichael remembers occurred in 1961 during spring exams.

"It was awful," she said. "It tied up the whole police force while there was a psychiatric case urgently needing police assistance."

Vandalism has never been a major problem here. Carolina gentlemen seem content with rowdy fun. Carolina co-eds usually accommodate.

Davie Hall To Bring New Look To Cameron Avenue

By LARRY MURCHISON
Special to the DTH

A new look will come to Cameron Ave. when the new Davie Hall is completed in the fall of 1967.

The building, of soft-textured grey brick, will be occupied by the Department of Psychology. It is being planned as a laboratory-research building with few classrooms.

Plans call for the demolition of the front part of Davie. The newer north wing, built in 1925, will be remodeled. A new front wing, three stories high, will be built along Cameron Ave. The entire building will contain over 68,000 square feet.

The architects tried for a design that, while functional, would blend in with the existing structures in the area, according to Dr. Marcus Waller, assistant chairman of the Psychology Dept. and head of the building committee.

Included in the building will be facilities for research in clinical, developmental, experimental, guantitative, and social psychology.

The new structure, along with New East and Howell halls, will form a small quadrangle which will be landscaped.

The building will cost about $1,600,000, of which 60 percent will be state funds and 40 percent Federal funds.

Bids are to be opened on Dec. 21, and work should begin about Feb. 1, 1966.

Puritan Now Sports Beard Like Beatnik

DURHAM — If you burn your draft card to protest U.S. Viet Nam policy, you're a beatnik, a Duke professor of Christian ethics claims.

But if you picket for civil rights or register Negro votes, you're a "New Puritan," he says, even though you might have a beard.

And there is a significant difference between the beatnik and the New Puritan, according to Dr. Waldo Beach, professor of Christian ethics and author of several books on morality among students and youths.

The beatnik, Dr. Beach insists, protests the crowd, authority and day-to-day conventions. Essentially, his pholosophy is to say "no" to conventions and authority.

But the New Puritan, Dr. Beach asserts, is very much concerned about social morality and is very much committed to moral ideals and Christian principles. These are the faces that are seen in the civil rights movement and in voter registration drives in the South, he says.

Dr. Beach traces the rise of the New Puritan movement from the early 1950s, when the campus ideal was "The Operator."

"The Operator is the smooth guy. For him, popularity is every thing and he wants to look good above all. His god is the crowd — the crowd that puts him on the pedestal," Dr. Beach says.

In the next decade, the early 1960s, came the beatnik movement, represented by individuals who are "tired of looking good" and who find the crowds boring and tiresome, Dr. Beach explains.

"The beatnik is a protest against the operator. He rebels against the crowd and against authority. But in actual practice, he is a conformist with long, droopy hair, corduroy jacket and a guitar," Dr. Beach asserts.

"These beatnik students are always demanding their rights and see it as their duty to demand their rights to nonconformity. This is what leads to ferment on campus and results in such as we saw in the Berkeley riots earlier this year," Dr. Beach continues.

From the beatnik movement came the New Puritans who represent more than just negative attitudes. "Actually, the New Puritan movement is a reversal of the beatnik field," Dr. Beach argues.

"There is a latent idealism in youth, and generally these New Puritans are looking for positive goods and positive goals. To the New Puritan, the beatnik is a very sad character."

The Duke educator says the New Puritans will always be in a minority on college and university campuses.

"They are called upon to make sacrifices. They are the ones who join the Peace Corps . . . who are looking for humanitarian causes . . . for ways to help their fellow man.

"It's a secular missionary spirit. It's on fire with the enthusiasm of the late President Kennedy."

Dr. Beach sees the Viet Nam protest as an issue that attracts both beatniks and New Puritans.

"There is something of the beatnik movement in what the New Puritans call the deception of White House glamour for military service and U. S. involvement in Viet Nam.

"But the problem is there is no positive goal. On racial issues, the Puritan can find something positive. But in the Viet Nam issue, he has difficulty in answering the State Department's question: 'What alternative do you suggest?' "

As for the individual who burns himself with gasoline, Dr. Beach insists, "That action is so extreme it does not fit into any movement."

Santa Gets Church Offering – Exits

AMHERST, Mass., (AP) — A Santa Clause attending a First Congregational Church service emptied the contents of the collection plate into his sack and walked out to the astonishment of the congregation.

The Rev. Richard Greene said it was a stunt connected with a sociology course at the University of Massachusetts, which asks students to test group reaction to bizarre behavior.

The student dressed like Santa Claus waited at the ministers office after walking out and explained the experiment. He also returned the money from the collection.

Not a joke, however, was a theft that occurred at an earlier service. Four wallets were removed from coats in the choir room.

Seniors Receive Awards At Annual Grid Banquet

Three North Carolina seniors received special awards at the annual football banquet held here at the Carolina Inn. They are John Atherton, Joe Churchill, and Ed Stringer.

Atherton, a right end from Burke, Va., has played steady football for three seasons and his worth was cited when he received the Carrington Smith Trophy as the Most Valuable Player.

Churchill, a tall tackle from Roanoke, Va., was recipient of the Educational Foundation watch, given to the senior who best fulfilled his duties on and off the field. Churchill has been a regular for two seasons.

Ed Stringer, co - captain and center, was chosen for the Prouty Award, which is based on scholarship, leadership and athletic ability. Stringer moved into the starting lineup three seasons ago. He is from Ardmore, Pa.

Atherton, who has played both offense and defense, was utilized as a right end on offense and led the team in yards gained by pass receiving with 443. He caught 29 passes, one good for a touchdown. In the Ohio State contest, Atherton was a key receiver on numerous "must" plays.

Churchill stands 6-3 and weighs 216, not physically awesome as a defensive tackle. But no Tar Heel played harder or worked more. Assistant Coach Vito Ragazzo terms Churchill an exceptionally smart player who thought out his moves and seldom was fooled.

Stringer, a top - notch student, was named to the Atlantic Coast Conference All-League team as an offensive center. He becomes the eighth Carolina center to gain All-Conference recognition since the formation of the ACC in 1953.

Bob Cox, former UNC end who now is an executive in New York, was the principal speaker. Talks were made by Athletic Director Chuck Erickson and Coach Jim Hickey.

Heels Score In Academics

Three UNC gridders have been named to the 1965 Academic All-Atlantic Coast Conference Football Team as announced by ACC Commissioner Jim Weaver.

Carolina's representatives to this 13th annual ACC team are end John Atherton, guard John Harmon and center Ed Stringer. Stringer repeated from the 1965 team and made all-conference as well.

Before the season began, players with a B average or better were nominated for the Academic All - Conference squad and a six-man board of football writers selected the official team from this group.

Atherton, a senior from Burke, Va., has an overall B average in physical education while Harmon, a senior from Statesville has an A average in history. Ed Stringer, senior from Ardmore, Pa., rounds out the group with a B-plus average in business administration.

First Space Meeting Succeeds

Space Capsules Fly Closer Than Ten Feet Apart

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON (AP)—Four excited U. S. astronauts scored America's greatest space success Wednesday with a historic rendezvous in their two spaceships. Then they set out on a happy formation flight 185 miles above the earth.

The six-hour space hunt ended dramatically with two teams of astronauts only six to 10 feet apart—after Gemini 7 had flown more than 4 million miles and Gemini 6, the hunter, more than 106,000.

They nudged so close that Gemini 6 Command Pilot Walter M. Schirra could see the 11-day beard growth of the second craft's commander, Astraonaut Frank Borman.

Schirra and Pilot Thomas P. Stafford masterfully flew up for visit with Borman and James A. Lovell Jr., who had not seen an Earthling since they embarked on a 14-day voyage Dec. 4.

Schirra said the space chase and rendezvous was so easy "We would have no trouble docking." An actual link-up — or docking — is one vital maneuver the United States has yet to accomplish, but neither spacecraft was equipped for it on this flight.

"You're up close," Schirra told Lovell early in the formation flight.

"I can see your lips moving," Lovell replied.

"I'm chewing gum," said Schirra, a 42-year-old Navy Captain and oldest of the nation's active astronauts.

"Oh, okay," Lovell said. "Can you see Frank's beard, Wally?"

"I can see yours better right now," came the reply.

First word the maneuver was successful came from Stafford. He calmly reported to anxious ground controllers over a noisy communications channel shortly after 2:30 p.m.

"We're about 120 feet apart and sitting."

The meeting occurred high over the Pacific Ocean during Gemini 6's fourth orbit of the Earth and Gemni 7's 165th.

A busy worldwide tracking network, for the first time in history keeping tabs on two spacecrafts at once came to a virtual standstill during the final breath-taking minutes of the momentous and dramtic meeting in space.

"This is the waiting time," mission control said as the final, tricky maneuvers to bring them only feet apart started. "It's all up to them."

Even though they were traveling 17,500 miles an hour over a 103,000 mile chase course, Schirra cautiously maneuvered the spacecraft's relative speed only a few feet a second nose-to-nose with Gemini 7 — not risking a collision.

"We did it," someone said over the command channels.

Thus, the United States claimed title to man's greatest space adventure, one that represents another giant step in its race to put men on the moon by 1970.

At the moment of blastoff, these elated words were heard from Gemini 6: "I should say. This is a real one."

Yes, Virginia, There Is A Santa Claus

Editors note Francis P. Church wrote this letter about Santa Claus before the turn of the century. It has been reprinted many, many times yet is something that has never grown old.

Dear Editor: I am eight years old. Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus. Papa says, "If you see it in the New York Sun it's so." Please tell me the truth, is there a Santa Claus?

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except what they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehended by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world around him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to our life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childish faith then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies. You might as well get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see him coming down, what would tha prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they aren't there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

You may tear apart a baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest men, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only fancy, poetry, love, romance can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory behind. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God! He lives and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

'Groaning Bored' Honor Buck Taylor

A jubilant ride on a mule - drawn wagon ended an evening of festivities Tuesday night for the Society for the Preservation of Buck Taylor's Mutton and Shoats.

The organization, which describes its ten members as "the Groaning Bored," was formed recently in an effort "to exonerate the decent and God - fearing name of the Honorable Buck Taylor."

Taylor, a Revolutionary War veteran, was hired in 1795 as the University's first steward.

According to the Mutton and Shoats Society, he was "viciously and unfairly" attacked for the quality of the food he served.

As a tribute to Taylor, the Society resolved to meet several times a year and "partake of the most delectable potations and vitles to be found in the region."

Preparations for the formal Christmas banquet began at the Goody Shop at 1 p.m. Thursday. This was followed by a cocktail party at the home of Dr. Stephen Baxter.

Goodykoontz Is With Job Corps

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Prof. William F. Goodykoontz, object of last year's "publish or perish" controversy, says politics interfered with his search for employment after the expiration of his contract here.

Goodykoontz is now with the Job Corps at Ft. Custer, Mich., near Battle Creek.

Interviewed by telephone, he said he was pressured to leave the North Carolina Advancement School "after my superiors there talked with Dr. George Harper."

Harper heads the UNC English Department, whose alleged "publish or perish" policy led to the formation of "Students for Teachers." SFT protested the termination of the former professor's contract.

Harper denies being contacted "by any of the schools at which Mr. Goodykoontz was seeking employment."

Goodykoontz claims he has enjoyed "more academic freedom" in the Poverty Program than he did at this university.

"I'm thinking in terms of the rights of students and teachers to freedom of expression and freedom to use unconventional techniques," he said.

Would he return to UNC if invited back?

"I like Chapel Hill," Goodykoontz said. "I like the University. But I think it was a much greater school under Dr. Frank Graham (former Consolidated University president) than it is now.

"Both the Chancellor and the President are now more conservative," he continued.

"Obviously, I probably won't be invited back," Goodykoontz said, "but if I were, I'd want freedom to teach freely."

Would he participate in the "publish or perish" controversy if he could relive last spring?

"Yes. We set out to raise important questions about teaching and its role in the university.

"In the controversy that developed, the questions and principles involved somehow got buried in the discussion of personalities and other things."

Goodykoontz left UNC after finishing the first summer school term.

He sought employment in New York and elsewhere before being hired by the Advancement School, about which he said:

"My superiors warned me there would be controversy that might wreck the school if I stayed on. This was the last thing I wanted to do, so I withdrew voluntarily.

"But if I hadn't withdrawn, I don't know what might have happened."

He claimed his job opportunities in New York had also been jeopardized by pressure.

"Kingsborough Community College in Brooklyn was one of the places I thought I was going, but things fell through because of politics."

He praised the work being done at the Advancement School, speaking highly of his superiors there.

Goodykoontz claimed that "a number of UNC faculty members, including some in the English Department," told him privately they "were sympathetic to my position."

"I'm basically a teacher," he said. "I'd rather be teaching than doing anything else, but I'd like to teach at a school where scholarship would not be measured in terms of publication for publication's sake."

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

Santa's Cards And Letters

Santa Claus made an urgent call to the DTH office yesterday. He is really worried.

He says he can't figure out some of the letters he has been receiving from our community.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday asked for a new Speaker Ban so he will have something to keep him busy for the next couple of years.

After a year and a half of dullness and peace, Chancellor Paul Sharp would like to return to the controversial Hiram College.

Dean of Men William Long wants 2,000 additional cars on campus so he can come up with another brilliant parking plan.

Campus Security Officer Arthur Beaumont would like Morrison College to show some more pornographic films so he can "investigate" them.

Hickey Asks St. Nick For Win

Football coach Jim Hickey wants a schedule that does not include Michigan, Wake Forest, Virginia, Georgia, Notre Dame or Duke.

Ray Strong, director of the office of records and registration, would like enough courses to go around.

The KA's would like to ban 'Dixie' and replace the Stars and Bars with Old Glory.

The Student Legislature would like something to debate instead of agreeing on everything.

The UNC Marching Band will take anything it can get (Sorry, but I just couldn't resist).

The managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel, Pat Stith, would like to congratulate Mr. Ben Day on his wonderous invention.

DTH Editor Ernie McCrary wants a recurrence of mono so he can skip exams and catch up on the work he owes since the last time he had the disease.

Residents of Alexander would like to thank whoever is responsible for the lead shades over Winston windows.

Chapel Hill Police want a case they can solve.

A certain member of the Chapel Hill Fire Department wishes someone would get rid of those $!¾*&?)(Christmas decorations.

Merry Christmas, Carolina Style or any style.

Two Out Of Every Three Students Don't Graduate

Whether the drop - out problem at UNC is actually this bad is the subject of an extensive study made recently by the Admissions Office and the University Testing Service.

Their report, released last Friday, indicates that the 33 per cent fatality rate is no overstatement.

The study was made from the records of the class of 1964, and included sophomore and junior transfers. It indicates that of the 1,426 students enrolling in the fall of 1960, only 859 have graduated.

A total of 711 withdrew at some time during the four years, but 144 of these returned.

Although the regular four - year students had almost a 40 per cent drop - out rate, the transfer students had only 25 per cent of its 633 students to drop out and fail to return for a degree.

The University has no record on what these students do after leaving Chapel Hill, but year so that they may meet ed in other schools to graduate.

According to D. W. Campbell of the Testing Service, 42.6 per cent of the students leaving Carolina do so because of ineligibility, and another 12.9 leave because of borderline grades.

Other reasons for withdrawals are marriage, health, finances, lack of interest, or suspension. Only 1.5 per cent of those leaving were suspended.

Correlation was found between the high school record and SAT scores of the student and the likelihood of dropping out.

Richard Cashwell of the Office of Admissions says that those students with a poor record and a high SAT were more likely to leave than a student with a good high school record and low SAT.

The size of the city the student comes from has little to do with his success in college. There is some connection between the type of secondary school a student graduates from (public schools have fewer drop outs than do private schools), but this probably fluctuates from year to year.

A student's rank in his graduating high school class seems to be a good indication of his college potential.

Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions, stated that even top rated students have become ineligible from time to time, and that students with the least acceptable potential have become good students with high grades.

Bernard feels that the student here will get no more than he works for. Some men come here and simply fail to make the adjustment to college life. This is especially true of those who "coasted" through high school and expect college to be the same.

The Admissions Office is doing what it can to prevent additional drop - outs by trying to accept only those people show good scholastic promise. This has been successful to an extent because the withdrawal rate has been decreasing continually since 1958.

But even this presents its problems because the tight housing situation will not permit so many freshmen to be enrolled in the future. The present freshman class consists of 2,305 General College, Nursing, and Dental Hygiene students.

Although applications for admission are coming into Bernard's office about 30 per cent faster than last year, only 2,300 can be accepted.

In order to give next year's freshmen a better chance to do well on placement tests, the Admissions Office is planning to hold preregistration again this summer. The program had been temporarily dropped.

Dean of Men William Long is also planning an orientation program for parents next year so that they may emeet the administration and faculty and get to know more about the University.

So even though the per cent of students dropping out is decreasing, only those students with desire and potential are likely to get the sheep skin.

Santa's Main Problems— Kissing, Beard Pulling

BY BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

A UNC journalism student says a "bad memory" isn't the only problem of playing part - time Santa.

Steve (Santa — with — the — failing — memory) Lail first made the news when he asked a little girl where she got her all - day sucker. She quickly reminded him that he had given it to her at another store.

"The main problem I have," Lail said, "Is making the kids believe I'm Santa."

"To make sure," Lail added, "the kids want to punch me in the stomach and pull my beard. Some even want to kiss me."

With his 230 pounds, "jolly old" Lail doesn't have any problems on the first count. He also has learned to hold his beard to keep the kids from pulling it off, but he hasn't surmounted the kissing problem.

In one kissing incident a fast little boy spit in Lail's face after getting fuzz from the beard in his mouth.

"I've held about 40 different jobs," Lail said. "And this is the hardest one I've had."

His first problem this year was a too - tight uniform. He had to sew a piece of cloth onto the belt to make it fit.

Lail said the worst Santa job he had was at a Lenoir Rhyne faculty party.

"That was the hardest time I've ever had making kids believe I was Santa Claus.

"Part of the kids knew me, part of them were Japanese and didn't believe in Santa Claus, and part of them were German and believed in Kris Kringle. They didn't know who I was."

One of the Lenoir Rhyne youngsters even wrote him a thank you note for being Santa Claus.

One night club offered him a Santa job last year passing out fifths of liquor. "I don't know why I didn't take it," Lail added.

Lail came by his job honestly. His father also used to play Santa.

APO Celebrates Birthday

Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, celebrates its 40th anniversary today.

The UNC chapter, with 21 brothers and nine pledges, is one of 387 in the nation.

At present APO is engaged in two activities, the Ugliest Man On Campus contest and the Traffic Safety Program.

Past undertakings include collecting money for the Community Chest and sponsoring the Book Ex.

The fraternity is open to anyone on campus.

The fraternity was organized at a Fayette College. UN's Rho chapter was the 17th organized in the country. It was formed in 1933.

Pan Hellenic Council

The Pan Hellenic Council has planned four meetings to be held in January in girls' residence halls which will acquaint freshmen women with the Carolina sorority system.

Slides of the different sorority houses will be shown, and Council members will describe and answer questions about sorority life.

Every freshman woman is invited to attend the meeting in her residence hall. Town women may attend any of the meetings.

Coeds interested in spring rush, which will begin in the second week in Februrary, should sign up by Jan. 11 in the Dean of Women's office.

The meetings and their respective dates are: Spencer, Jan. 3 at 6:45 p.m.; Cobb, Jan. 4 at 6:45 p.m.: Nurses, Jan. 5 at 6:45 p.m.; Smith, Jan. 6 at 6:45 p.m.

Morrison Elections

Byron McCoy is the new governor of Morrison College after running unopposed in the Morrison dorm elections.

Dick Levy defeated Joe Saunders for academic lieutenant governor. John Ellis became the new social lieutenant governor by beating Ward Maillard.

Sixty per cent of the 1,021 students in Morrison turned out for the election.

Playmakers Perform

The Carolina Playmakers Student Workshop will present The Second Shepherd's Play today at 3:30 in front of the Davie Poplar and at 4:30 in the court between Saunders Hall and Murphey Hall.

The production will be given on a specially constructed copy of an Old English Pageant Wagon. These traveling wagons were used to transport shows from town to town during the Middle Ages.

The Second Shepherd's Play is a popular miracle play taken from the Middle Ages. It tells the story of how the first Christmas Eve affected a humorous group of poor shepherds who were watching their flock of sheep.

The main characters in the production will be played by Bob Lucas, Pat Ervin, Mike Clark, Pat Hurley and Jim Chesnutt.

Junior Class Officers

Junior class officers, committee chairmen, and committee members will meet to discuss plans for the year at 4 in 101 Davie.

Any juniors who have not been interviewed and would like to work on the finance, publicity or social committee should contact Mel Wright at 968-9215 or Bill Nucciarone at 942-5640.

The Daily Tar Heel

Opinions of The Daily Tar Heel are expressed in its editorials. All unsigned editorials are written by the editor. Letters and columns reflect only the personal views of their contributors.

Watch That Other Guy

'Tis the season to be jolly and most of us will be. But without sermonizing or wet-blanketism, the fact should bepointed out that the odds are very high that at least one person reading this will not return to school after the holidays.

He will not return because he will be dead, and he will be dead because somebody was negligent enough to cause an automobile wreck.

There is not much we can do about that "other guy" who takes to the highways with a "gotta get there now" attitude, perhaps bolstered by some liquid cheer.

But it is unforgiveable if you are one of those well-lubricated nuts behind a wheel, because you can prevent that.

Sure, it will not happen to you. It always happens to somebody else. Ask the friends of the UNC students killed in the last few years.

Polluted drivers and anxious hotrodders keep the undertaker busy. Keep your eye out for them and try not to join them.

Make a Christmas wish when you take to the road. Wish for next Christmas.

'We Bottled It'

Worried about what to give HER for Christmas?

If advertisements are any sort of indicator, we recommend that nothing besides perfume be considered.

Look at these come-ons, found in almost any current magazine:

"What makes a shy girl get Intimate?" asks an ad. "It's the fragrance that does all the flirting for her. The uninhibited perfume that makes things happen What kind of things? That's her affair."

Emeraude says, "Want him to be more of a man? Try being more of a woman. For the woman who knows. . ."

Then there is the observation, that "Interlude, like love. . . must be experienced."

'Aimant says it is "like a kiss across the room," and you can almost hear the come-hither model in a full-page display whisper, "Give him Madame Rochas. A few drops at a time," as she applies a few drops about her plunging neckline.

Replique claims that it is "for women who are interesting to begin with," while a competing brand of bottled magic says, "All she wants is a little Emotion (a lot if she's daring)!"

Perhaps the manufacturers should at least partially qualify this advertising statement: "Caleche—It's all a woman needs to wear."

Some of the ads are more graphic than vocal. Ma Griffe perfume depicts a man and woman tightly embraced in a misty sylvan setting. The headline says, "We bottled it."

On second thought, maybe you fellows ought to steer clear of the perfume counter this shopping season. Chances are that you might buy something which could create a dangerous situation. These ads indicate that perfume is pretty powerful stuff, and sometimes it is not wise to put a weapon in a woman's hands—or behind her ears.

Consider the risk involved and decide for youself. Decide, that is, which is more provocative—the perfume or their advertisements?

Capitalism And Problems

By TERRY FOWLER

Several articles about Ludwig von Mises have recently appeared in the DTH, presenting him essentially as a paragon of economic and political perspicuity. My acquaintance with von Mises, unfortunately, is limited to only one slim volume entitled Bureaucracy. To the degree that it is representative of his work, von Mises' position is open to serius question.

Bureaucracy is a diatribe against socialism and welfare statism. In praise of capitalism, von Mises maintains that there is no compromise, no halfway point between these two economic philosophies. The author attacks socialism by attacking its indispensable tool, government bureaucracy.

There are two ways of conducting affairs, says the preface, bureaucratic management and profit management. The former is defined as the "method applied in the conduct of administrative affairs the result of which has no cash value on the market"; i.e., bureaucracy's output cannot be evaluated through economic calculation.

The outstanding feature of capitalism, von Mises feels, is that it efficiently calculates what the consumer wants without any complex bureaucracy. The reason capitalism has such wonderful results is that the consumer's decision to buy dictates to the capitalist what to produce, namely, the cheapest, most efficient product that will compete with those of other producers. Profit management, then, according to the author is subservient to the consumer.

Bureaucratic management, on the other hand, is autonomous; it exists as a separate, neutral instrument to execute the popular will. When people dislike bureaucracy, the fault lies not within the structure but with the policy administered. The book's main argument is that when bureaucracy is used to administer a business venture, it is unsuccessful, since it is motivated by something other than the profits system.

There are two heinous results of bureaucratization identified by von Mises: its self-aggrandizement and the idolization of the state. From here it is but a short step to totalitarianism. Another evil is that the regimentation concomitant with bureaucracy "spells the doom of initiative," for citizens see no place to go save into the government service, nothing to improve.

This is because utopians, in which class von Mises places socialists, see the perfect state as immutable. Finally, bureaucracy is by nature subservient to rules which resist change; the grizzled breaucrat, after thirty years of following the same rules, is likely to be extremely conservative. The book's conclusion is that socialism's vehicle, bureaucracy, is not only not progressive, but rigid and reactionary.

Now let's see where these arguments break down. The first concerns capitalism's efficiency. Since competition's ultimate goal is to eliminate competitors, and since it is often successful in this goal, the result is monopoly. Monopoly is under no compulsion to produce the cheapest product efficiently.

It is a mistake to assume bureaucracy is neutral because it merely carries out orders without formulating them. Von Mises remarks that bureaucrats make policy decisions and this hardly keeps them neutral. Furthermore, the hierarchical ideal is never realized; there is much give and take between inferiors and superiors, much esprit de corps, much control of leaders and non-leaders in a bureaucracy.

In arguing that because bureaucracy does not deal with the profit motive it cannot successfully manage business-type operations, von Mises has failed to prove two things. First, he has not shown that government has been a flop when it turns businessman because of the fact that it is bureaucratized. Was the TVA a business Failure?

Second, he has not shown that something akin to the profit motive operates in a bureaucracy, which was created to deal with the wants and needs of different interests in society (including business's). Bureaucratic agencies do, in fact, keep an ear sensitively tuned to their "clientele's" desires.

If the agency does not satisfy its clientele (i. e. if the customer is unsatisfied with the product, as with the profit system), complaints can be made to Congress, to the President, to the courts. A giant business monopoly would laugh in the face of a customer complaining about high prices.

Finally, we must ask, does the bureaucracy stifle initiative? Well, yes, in the sense that every time we organize to accomplish a complicated goal we must establish some standardized procedure to make sure everything is done completely and correctly, or everthing would be chaos. An organization gathers an inertia which resists change. This tendency is counteracted in American governmental bureaucracy, as we have previously seen, by 1) responsiveness to interest groups, 2) subordination to Congress and the President, and 3) control within the hierarchical pattern of non-leaders by leaders.

Capitalism, on the other hand, created monopolies and poverty and could not deal adequately with them. Bureaucracy grew out of a response on the part of the government to deal with them.

The profit motive resulted in a few fortunate people taking advantage of all the others and plunging us into a catastrophic depression because of insufficient government controls. The Invisible Hand proved to be all thumbs. If a bureaucracy had not been organized to deal with the results of the industrial revolution, even worse things could have happened.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

The Student Speaks

Why Are We In Viet Nam

BY BUCK GRINTER

Debate on our campus over Viet Nam has been particularly barren. Pacifists and jingoists have too long held the public's ear. Student participation is noticeably shrinking. In last Sunday's DTH, John Harrison stepped into the void with a new call for victory in Southeast Asia.

This interesting letter, so symptomatic of the frustrations our administration and people feel over its Asian involvement, should be examined in detail. It illuminates those moral shibboleths and myopias upon which the Johnson government draws its support.

First, let us look at Harrison's assumptions: (1) that we have never lost a war (2) that we have allied support in this war (3) that Loas and Munich are somehow related (4) that freedom ("our way of life") is what must be saved in South Viet Nam. Initially then, it is interesting to note that Harrison's list of American "victories" would have to include the razing of Washington in 1912, the Changjin Reservoir and Panmunjom episodes and the recent wallowing in the Bay of Pigs.

As for the "U. S. victory over the Communist Huks in the Philippines" we were under the impression that a nationalist patriot named Ramon Magsaysay had something to do with putting down that rebellion.

Secondly, let us take heed of where we stand. We are bombing the territory of a foreign state, without declaration of war, in violation of the U. N. charter, without consultation with our allies and in a manner comparable to no action by any Western power since Suez.

Thirdly, "Our Munich in Laos" — we ask could it not have been Mr. Kennedy's feeling that a feudal kingdom replete with all the trappings of princely corruption and Cold War fence sitting and exhibiting a degree of Mandarinal posturing utterly unrelated to its peoples' needs, was not worth a war?

And lastly, if "we cannot justify our sacrifices unless freedom is secured for the people that America has promised it to" we are curious to know when and what we did promise. After searching the Geneva Accords, the Eisenhower - Diem communiques and John Kennedy's pronoucements we have yet to turn up any promises of freedom.

Military aid, yes. Pleadings for reforms and a lessening of the fantastic corruption surrounding Diem, yes. But freedom? Indeed, Mr. Harrison, just how attracitve does our brand of freedom (Oxford, Selma?) look to the Asians and Africans right now?

Furthermore, is the preservation of "our way of life" in the jungles of Indo - China what we should go to war for or mame another country because of?

If the answers to these questions seem difficult and illusive, one can always turn to Mr. Harrison's alternatives. Implying a Pax Americana for a starter and an eventual remarking of the word in our own image, he may have something there.

Admittedly the image is a bit tarnished by now, but the treasury appears bottomless. With predictions of a $10 billion outlay next year and contingency planning for up to 680,000 American troops in Viet-Nam by the end of 1967, it looks like Mr. Harrison's dream could come true. Your idea for a blood drive is a useful one, John Harrison. We know it makes you feel good. And who knows, maybe some of those donations will trickle down to the broken and burned bodies of Vietnamese children now enjoying that freedom you way we promised.

Letters To The Editor

Alexander Answers

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

We, the men of Alexander Hall would like to express our most sincere gratitude to the uninformed purveyors of mass riot and misinformation on this campus.

There has been a succession of anti-Alexander articles in the past week. Never since the NSA referendum of last fall has the DTH gone to more trouble to ignore the facts.

Mr. Greenbacker may be unaware that the touchstone for Sunday's protest was his article based on rumor rather than fact. He was, indeed, hanged in effigy and in a sincere protest of the very yellow journalism which could destroy this campus if allowed to continue. We plead for its halt.

The most recent article by Mr. Myers must have come from an earnest desire to see further and expanded demonstrations. Does he want a panty raid so he may reap the vicarious pleasures which he will find therein? Does he want to re-establish the wild gatherings of years past?

These have been suppressed by the more mature students who prefer to control themselves, even in the face of public attack. We have the name yet we refuse to play the game.

Analytically in reference to Mr. Myer's article of Tuesday, the 14th of December:

1. He failed to mention the reason for the gathering. That was to hang Mr. Fact-Lacker's effigy.

2. The demonstration began at 10:30 p.m. rather than at 8 p.m.

3. He neglected to mention the Choraling Can-Can of Contemptious Controlled Cavaliers from Alexander Hall.

4. In the spirit of Christmas, carols were sung — yet the spirit did not reach wreath be-decked Graham Memorial, it would seem.

5. Shades came up to the tune of carols, sung from a respectful distance and never once did the crowd violate the women's wishes.

6. At approximately 11:30 p.m. a Winston lady poised herself in lingerie on the radiator by her open window. Visible to any but the blind, she put on quite a show.

7. The men of Alexander have shown a great deal of restraint in light of this and similar acts.

8. The women blinked lights and egged the men on — yet no one seems to remember this.

9. It would seem that in defense of the Carolina Gentlewomen, it is time for Silent Sam to level a warning blast to the east.

10. May the campus at large realize both sides of a story which at worst is a compliment to men on this campus, despite the spectacular blow-up given it by the DTH in its sanctimonious orientation.

We must apologize for failing to consider a panty raid — now that you mention it — don't you want to field a DTH raid, with a prize for the best grab? No? Well, in that case, we suggest that you allow the proper authorities to deal with this matter and refrain from reporting news which is designed, however unintentionally, to exicte rather than inform.

The men of Alexander appeal to reason — why not its organ of communication as well? We unanimoully condemn such yellow journalism and we will find appropriate use for of DTH's if it doesn't cease. Thank you.

Seventy-four Residents of Alexander

Abolish HUAC

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The appearance of a representative of the House Un-American Activities Committee on campus is a further reminder that the organization made famous by Senator Joseph McCarthy is still going strong, despite its failure to propose any significant legislation (the purpose of House committees) in all its twenty years of existence.

Why is such a committee allowed to continue when the House of Representatives Rule XI adopted in 1946 establishing HUAC violates the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution by its undue broadness, vagueness and uncertainty?

The rule has authorized the creation of a governmental mechanism with the sole purpose not of judging private citizens by their actions, but of forcing public disclosure of beliefs and associations of these individuals which may be unorthodox or unpopular, resulting in public stigma, scorn and obloquy; and it authorizes compulsory examination of witnesses so all-inclusive that it violates the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.

Despite the overwhleming reasons for its abolishment, the continued existence of HUAC, now concerned with determining such things as how much the KKK charges member for robes, can only point to the obvious failure of the FBI and the Justice Department to execute their responsibilities in the area of Civil Rights.

J. Edgar Hoover is more concerned about purported communist activity on college campses and in the peace movement protesting the Viet Nam war than in the manifest, blatant fascist activity by the Klan and like organizations in Mississippi.

'Tall' Seminoles Test UNC Streak

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

Florida State's "tall - tall" Seminoles, hoping to break the Tar Heel's home win streak, will test Carolina's shooting eyes tonight at eight in Carmichael Auditorium.

The Seminoles sports a 3-1 record this season. The only loss came against Florida at the latter's home floor.

The Tar Heels, hitting on 59 of their shots so far this season, had better have their shooting eyes well trained. Rebounding will definitely be a problem against the much taller Seminoles.

Florida State can claim eight lettermen from last year's club which won 16 games and lost ten.

Leading the Seminole offense should be 6-7 Gary Schull and 6-4 Ron Malmen who finished 2-3 in scoring last year.

Joining this pair in the lettermen ranks are 6-8 Bill Phillips, 6-7 Jim Wallace, 6-4 Bill Peacock, 5-10 Brian Murphy, 6-3 Charles Fairchild and 6-2 Ken Leakey.

But the tall Seminole letterman will have to "look up to" their taller replacements.

Also, John Bloodworth (6-1), John Rogers (6-5), Jim Lyttle (6-0), and Don Biggs (6-7) should see action.

Lyttle, quite a star for the Seminole frosh last season, should solve some of the problems at guard.

Both starting guards from last season were lost by graduation.

The Tar Heels, however, are conceding nothing. Although they have lost two of their first five games, their play has been anything but dismal.

Both losses have come on the road to strong clubs — Clemson and fourth - ranked Vanderbilt.

The Tar Heels are averaging 87 points per game — an all-time high — and their shooting percentage of 59 per cent for five games is well ahead of past figures.

"Seven of our 13 squadmen are hitting 50 per cent or better for all shots," said UNC Coach Dean Smith. "This is a tremendous effort and I only shoot that well most of the hope we can kep it up. If we shoot that well most of the time, we'll give anyone a battle.

"Our aim this year has been to move the ball quickly and get the good shot before taking it," he said. "The entire team has worked hard to achieve this."

Of course leading the Tar Heel attack will be the super combo of Bob Lewis and Larry Miller. Lewis, leading the ACC is scoring after five games, is averaging 33.6 points per game. The Washington, D. C., native has hit 62 of 89 attempts from the floor for a 69.7 percentage.

Miller follows with an average of 23.6 points per game including a shooting percentage of 63.6.

Guard John Yokley is averaging 8.2 points per game and a 53.6 shooting percentage.

Football Champ To Be Decided Today

BY BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The Mangum Mugs will meet Law IV to decide the all - campus tag football championship this afternoon at 3 p.m.

Mangum won the residence hall championship by blasting Old East yesterday, 32-13. Dave Rapp and Bill Sessoms scored in the first half as Mangum ran up a 13-6 lead. In the second half the Mugs finished the job on two touchdowns by Bob Carter and another by Brandon Simons.

Old East was no match for Mangum. They scored early in the game on a TD by Dave Steinbock and late in the game with J. P. Anderson crossing the goal.

Law IV was also last year's graduate division champs while Mangum just missed the residence hall title by bowing to Everett in the final game.

Oldtimers To Take On Frosh Squad

BY JIM COGHILL
Asst. Sports Editor

Nine oldtimers and one well-known sport's figure at UNC will be on the hardwood tonight to try and prove their skills against the UNC freshman squad.

Due to a cancellation of this evening's preliminary game with East Carolina, Larry Brown's freshman squad will take on the Grad School All-Stars at 6 p.m. in the Carmichael Auditorium.

The All - Stars will feature such sport's figures as UNC's Charlie Shaffer, Bill Brown, Pud Hassell, Richard Vinroot, Jim Hudock, Bill Harrison and Danny Talbott, football and baseball standout since coming to Carolina.

A platoon system will be used by the oldtimers and all ten players will see hardwood action during the evening.

"This should prove to be interesting," Charlie Shaffer, assistant freshman coach, said, "Since I'm playing against the boys that I coach, and we grad students will hopefully give them a good match."

The freshman team will take to the floor with three wins under their belts and all by 20 point margins at the expense of Clemson, Brevard and Duke.

Rusty Clark, the 6-11 center leads the team scoring averaging 21.7 points per contest. Three other men are shooting in the double figures and they are: Dick Grubar, 16.3; Bill Bunting, 17.3; and Jim Bostick, 12.3.

Joe Brown, a 6-5 forward got into foul trouble in the Brevard game but against the Dukes, he came up with 11 rebounds and ten points.

Gerald Tuttle has assisted very well so far this season and holds down the position as one of the leading floor players.

Lewis Top Scorer

Going into tonight's game with Florida State, junior Bob Lewis is the leading Tar Heel scorer with a 33.6 average. Larry Miller is next with 23.6, followed by John Yokley's 8.2, Bob Bennett's 7.0 and Tom Gauntlett's 6.2 Miller leads in rebounding with 54, followed by Bennett with 28.

John Lauritzen wanted further knowledge

He's finding it at Western Electric

When the University of Nevada awarded John Lauritzen his B.S.E.E. in 1961, it was only the first big step in the learning program he envisions for himself. This led him to Western Electric. For WE agrees that ever-increasing knowledge is essential to the development of its engineers—and is helping John in furthering his education.

John attended one of Western Electric's three Graduate Engineering Training Centers and graduated with honors. Now, through the Company-paid Tuition Refund Plan, John is working toward his Master's in Industrial Management at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. He is currently a planning engineer developing test equipment for the Bell System's revolutionary electronic telephone switching system.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, both educationally and professionally, we should talk. Western Electric's vast communications job as manufacturing unit of the Bell System provides many opportunities for fast-moving careers for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, as well as for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. Get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

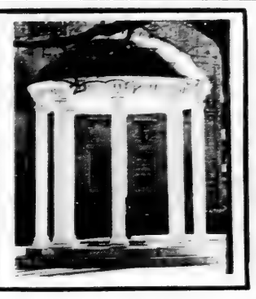
CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley



Charlotte Hoods Angered Beaver

The Charlotte Hoods wore uniforms, but not like football players wear uniforms. Their game was destruction, and they scored big the week before Christmas in Charlotte.

The 25 to 30 youths who allegedly took over the Dobbs House restaurant made Carolina quarterback Jeff Beaver angry, and he said so—publicly.

Rather than carrying a football, the young hoodlums supposedly ran off with more than $50 from the Dobbs House after chasing the cook outside and wrecking the place.

Beaver, a Morehead scholar, contacted The Charlotte News to express his anger over the incident, which caused city leaders to order a probe of youth gang terrorism.

In a statement printed on the front page, he asked Hayes not to leave North Carolina as the hoods had ordered him to do.

"I just couldn't believe that it happened," Beaver said. I want to send an open letter to Mr. Hayes asking him not to leave Charlotte.

"I'm behind him, and half the boys on this side of town would back me up. This is the worst thing I've heard happening on this side of town.

"I ask Mr. Hayes not to let it affect him. The majority of them (boys in Charlotte) would take up for him in every way possible, if it means coming up there to the Dobbs House every night.

'This letter is aimed mostly at the punks themselves. If they need someone to challenge their authority, maybe they'll come to us instead of old men and old ladies.

"They fit the pattern of any teenage gang—talking about how strong they are as a group instead of as individuals. It shows how ignorant they are. It shows their cowardice.

"These uniforms they wear (reportedly cowbody hats and jeans), aren't like a football team—it's a coward's uniform, as far as I'm concerned."

"They don't hit anybody their size or bigger—only old people or young kids.

"It makes me really mad to see this happen, especially around here where I live."

Something's Rotten In Carolina

They'll do it every time.

We leave this place trusting those who remain to look after our beloved home away from home.

We have a wonderful vacation and forget about the worries we have at our great University.

And then we return.

We return and there is an ominous note in the air. Something is amiss and we sensed it quickly.

Man, like this place smells! And so we find out that while we were gone some son-of-an-over-worked gardner spread fertilizer all over the already brown grass.

Well we can understand. After all, they had to have something to raise a big stink over while we were gone.

'Cool' Tar Heels Kick 'Cold' Terps

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina and Maryland matched stumbling, fumbling offenses last night in a comedy of errors in Carmichael Auditorium. The Tar Heels got fewer laughs—defeating the Terps 67-52.

The victory, eighth of the season for the Tar Heels and fourth straight in friendly Carmichael Auditorium, gave UNC a 1-1 ACC record and a 8-3 mark over-all.

The loss gave the Terps a 6-4 over-all record and 2-1 in the ACC.

The Tar Heels, who led the Terps 26-25 at the half, hit only 21 of 67 shots from the floor for a 31.3 percentage—the first time below 50 per cent all season.

The Terps hit 22 of 48 attempts for 45.8 percent. The Tar Heel edge came at the foul line—hitting 25 of 33 compared to eight of 19 for Maryland.

But the game was a story of errors and both teams had their share. The Terps posted 27 ball-handling errors—16 coming in the first half. The Tar Heels were charged with 19 miscues—14 in the first half.

Junior Bob Lews, the nation's second leading scorer with a 31.6 average, led the faltering Tar Heel offense with 23 points with six of 19 attempts from the floor and 11 of 14 from the free throw line.

Larry Miller was next in line with 20 points—hitting six of 15 from the floor and eight of 11 from the line. Miller tied Gary Ward of the Terps for the rebounding lead with 14 grabs. Bob Bennett added 12 points to the Tar Heel attack—nine of which came in the first half.

Maryland All-America candidate Gary Ward led the Terp offense with 23 points. Joe Harrington with 12 points was the only other Terp in double figures.

Soldier Is Suspected In Evans Killing

Chapel Hill police plan to question an AWOL Fort Bragg soldier next week in connection with the summer murder of University coed Suellen Evans.

Chief William Blake said yesterday that detectives questioned and released Raymond F. Noel of South Carolina, who is accused of raping and attempting to murder a University of South Carolina coed Dec. 18.

Blake added that the victim in that slaying was stabbed in the throat, as was Suellen Evans last July.

Noel volunteered to take a lie detector test which proved negative. There was no direct evidence linking another suspect, a Fort Bragg soldier, with the arboretum slaying, Blake said.

Robert Lee Thornton, absent without leave from Fort Bragg since last June, was arrested in Passaic, N.J., about two weeks ago.

The 25-year-old soldier will be questioned in Chapel Hill when he is returned to North Carolina to face trial in Raleigh on a car theft charge.

Blake said the only reason to suspect Thornton was that he was loose when the crime was committed.

Thornton became a suspect after allegedly stealing a car in Wade, N.C.

The Sheriff of Cumberland County described Thornton's conduct during his absence from the base as "more desperate" than the usual AWOL case.

Two Money Bills Held In Finance Committee

Two important appropriation bills which would cost students nearly $17,000 in Student Government funds if passed are being held in the Finance Committee of Student Legislature.

The bills, which would provide almost $12,000 to make The Daily Tar Heel a six - page daily paper and appropriate some $5,000 to help finance the UNC Men's Glee Club's European tour, will probably be considered by SL Thursday night.

The DTH bill, which was written and introduced by Rep. Hugh Blackwell (SP) after consultation with the staff and business managers of the DTH has received the endorsement of Student Body President Paul Dickson and former DTH co-editor Hugh Stevens.

Dickson originally opposed the bill for financial reasons, but later endorsed it after consultation with the editor and business manager of the Tar Heel.

Dickson said that passage of the DTH bill this year would probably end hopes for the establishment of a campus radio station this year because of a shortage of funds.

"As far as I'm concerned," Dickson said, "campus radio is a dead issue."

The Glee Club bill is being held in committee because of a lack of adequate breakdown of expenses for the European tour.

It has been invited to sing at the Danish - American Fourth of July Festival, the Welsh Singing and Speaking Festival at Langollen, Westminister Abby, UNESCO House in Paris, the University of Lyon and at a special meeting of the West Berlin Senate.

Sharp Will Leave On Feb.15; Declines To Discuss Reasons

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson has been named acting chancellor of the University here by UNC President William C. Friday.

Sitterson, now vice chancellor of the University, will begin his new duties Feb. 16 to fill the vacancy left by Chancellor Paul F. Sharp's resignation.

Sharp submitted his resignation to the executive committee of the Consolidated University of North Carolina December 29. It was to have become effective July, 1966, but the committee changed the date to Feb. 15. Sharp will become president of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, March 1.

Friday, in announcing Sitterson's appointment last night, said he was "particularly pleased" that Sitterson has accepted the temporary post. The executive committee of the board of trustees approved the appointment.

"I'm not going to follow the former practice of setting up a large advisory committee to look for a new chancellor," Friday said. "We've got to move along and get a successor chosen as soon as reasonably possible."

Friday said he intends to talk to representative groups of trustees, alumni and students before making his recommendation to the board of trustees. He expects to name the members of his advisory committee by the end of this week.

Sitterson said last night that he is "looking forward" to the job as acting chancellor. "I have been close enough to it to know that it will be interesting," he said.

Sitterson has served as Dean of the General College and Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He became vice chancellor last July in an administrative reorganization.

As vice chancellor he has been responsible for academic and health affairs.

Sitterson is a 1931 UNC graduate and a Kenan Professor of History.

Sharp, chancellor since September, 1964, came here from the presidency of Hiram College, Ohio. He declined to discuss specific reasons for his decision to resign, but said, "Mrs. Sharp and I leave Chapel Hill with a deep sense of regret. We have enjoyed the students very much — they have been unusually fine in every respect."

He listed as another accomplishment the administrative reorganization begun last summer. "We've made a start," he said, "but conditions are still a long way from reflecting those of a modern university."

Another major achievement, he said, is the success of the residence college system and a "greater emphasis on student relations."

Sophomore Dies

A 19 - year - old Carolina sophomore died Dec. 22 as a result of injuries he received in a motorcycle - car accident near Chapel Hill Dec. 11.

Stephen Ellis Hyde never regained consciousness after the wreck. He was buried in his hometown of Skillman, N. J.

According to the Dean of Men's office, Hyde was sitting still with his motorcycle lights off in the right lane of 15-501 near Mann's Chapel Road when the accident happened. He was struck from the rear by a car driven by General Madison Pearson, 75, of Roosevelt Drive, Chapel Hill.

Pearson was headed toward Chapel Hill when the accident occured at 11:30 p.m.

Hyde, a pre - med major, was taken to North Carolina Memorial Hospital and remained there until his death.

Hyde is the third University student to die as a result of an auto crash since last September.

Orne Receives Grant

Dr. Jerrold Orne, UNC librarian, received a $12,330 private grant for his work as chairman of the American Standards Association sectional Committee. Orne deals with such problems as book classification, abstracts, and indexing.

Aviators Pick Travis

Carl S. Travis, senior from Asheville, has been elected president of the Chapel Hill Flying Club. The club, composed of student pilots preparing for a private pilot rating, meets the second Monday night of each month in Graham Memorial.

SP To Fill Vacancies

The Student Party will meet tonight at 7:30 in Roland Parker I and II in Graham Memorial. Two legislative vacancies will be filled, one in the ATO-DU-TEP district and one in the Graham - Aycock - Stacy - Everett - Lewis district. Any one living in these districts is eligible and is invited to the meeting.

Merzbacher To Talk

Dr. Eugen Merzbacher, Acting Chairman of the Physics Department at UNC, will lecture at Marshall University, Huntington, W. Va. January 13 and 14. He will be sponsored by the American Association of Physics Teachers.

Special Services

The Special Services, civilian branch of the Armed Forces, will recruit on campus January 10. The Special Services entertains and works with government personnel overseas. Students interested in interviewing should contact the University Placement Service.

Spring Regristration

Resolved: This Semester We're Really Going To Study For Exams

IT'S GETTING TO BE THAT TIME OF YEAR AGAIN: A spot check by the DTH staff yesterday, showed that most students resolved on New Year's Day to study for very rapidly approaching exams. The scene at left, in the undergraduate library is beginning to typify most areas of the campus. While some students like Mary Rowe, a freshman from Fayetteville, and David Moore, a senior from Granite Falls, seem to be finding at least some enjoyment in studying, some people apparently couldn't care less: Our photographer didn't have enough nerve to wake the fellow up to get his name.

Chancellor Sharp

Chancellors are a little like preachers. They come and they go, some staying a little longer than others.

Every student who knows him looks with particular regret on the impending loss of our third chancellor since consolidation, Paul F. Sharp.

The highest compliment we can give any man is to say that he is a professional, and Sharp has been a thorough professional. He came here from the presidency of Hiram College in Ohio. He came not only as a top-flight administrator, but as a man with ideas. Many men have ideas, but Sharp set out to do something about them. Students who have dealt with him on projects such as the residence college system have been amazed at his enthusiasm and genuine concern for the welfare of all students.

The question most of us immediately ask of his resignation is, "Why?"

If the reasons are personal, it is likely we will never know nor ought to. But if the reasons are professional the differences should be aired and resolved lest we go to the trouble of finding another qualified man to fill the post, only to see him virtually disappear before our eyes.

There have been no complaints from his office, but certain things which have happened in the past two years could not have passed unnoticed to even casual observers.

Sharp moved into South Building at a time when an uncommon amount of state-wide attention was focused on it. The speaker ban altercation burned with a fast and furious flame during his entire tenancy. He hardly made a move that was not reported in the state press.

It seems unlikely that a long-term chancellor, seasoned and inured to North Carolina life, could have withstood the tension. It seems incredible that Sharp did, especially in the face of frustration after frustration.

A chancellor is not his own master, and surely Sharp did not come here under the impression that he would be. But his burden has been ridiculously overloaded by the very nature of our Consolidated University organization and its multiple levels of authority.

Sharp's departure offers a convenient time to closely examine one of the most delicate and complex relationships in any kind of administration—that of the chancellor and president of the University of North Carolina.

As spelled out by the by-laws of the board of trustees, there seems to be little difference in the kinds of duties both men have—except the chancellor is responsible to the president.

Students worry about having an "identity crisis," but it occurs to few of them that the chancellor might not be immune to such a disturbance.

The Chapel Hill chancellor is especially vulnerable because the president sits hardly more than a stone's throw from his office. By this sheer fact of geography, confusion, even conflict, seem inevitable. The president may maintain a strict hands-off policy concerning affairs of this campus, but he hardly turns away students or faculty members who come to him with problems—if for no other reason than the chancellor was out of town for the day.

Whether or not this fact has affected Sharp's decision is conjecture, but the situation exists and it stands little chance of ever aiding relatitons between the two offices.

It would be a deceptively simple-sounding solution to move the president's office. The University of California—the school system after which ours is partly patterned—found it necessary to move President Clark Kerr's office off-campus for just this reason.

Durham, perhaps even the Research Triangle, might be a good compromise site. It sounds so simple, it would probably work.

Cost Of Victory Too High

By BOB KEISER

A writer in a recent issue of The Reporter admits our Asian involvement entails "killing innocent Vietnamese civilians as well as losing irreplaceable young Americans" but still insists that "we have to go on fighting an atrocious war until victory —unless we prefer to vanish from the stage of history as a world power. . ."

Such is the conclusion one reaches when the basis for foreign policy is a posture of winning instead of a strategy of peace. We probably can win militarily in Viet Nam, but are the moral and political costs too much? I think they are.

Only three rational justifications might protection of South Vietnamese freedoms; be offered for our Viet Nam action: the the defense of the rest of Southeast Asia; and the security of the non-Communist world.

The first rationale is the most untenable. The 19th parallel merely separates two oppressive authoritarian political systems. Ho Chi Minh's regime more resembles Albania than Yugoslavia, and little more should be expected of the National Liberation Front. South Viet Nam, on the other hand, presents an alternative equally dismal, complete with military dictatorship, infringement of freedom of dissent, and detention without trial. Clearly, to talk of the defense of the frontiers of freedom in this situation is empty rhetoric and blasphemy against the democratic faith.

What about the rest of Southeast Asia, however? Citing the experience of Munich, the supporters of our current policy claim appeasement will only lead to further aggression. Yet, the Chinese are not poised ready to invade the subcontinent; instead they call for national wars of liberation, in which the indigenous forces must carry the burden of the struggle.

This policy is working in Viet Nam, but the other Southeast Asian countries did not have to go through the same traumatic experience to gain their independence from Europe, and the Communists have not been able to capture their nationalist movements.

Thailand, it is said, will be the next domino to fall. This little country, however, has managed to roll with the punches for a long time, first with the Europeans, then with the Japanese; and she will hardly diminish her efforts to remain independent if Viet Nam becomes a Communist state. She may go neutral, and SEATO will be shown to be worthless, but a crescent of neutral and independent countries in Southeast Asia coincides with the best interests of the United States.

We should de-escalate the military confrontation, seek negotiations, and eventually withdraw from Viet Nam, getting the best deal we can under the circumstances. At the same time, we should make clear to our friends and adversaries in the area that the refusal at this time to make a vast military commitment does not mean we have no commitment at all. Aid in counter-insurgency should be given if and when it is needed. More important, financial and technical assistance must be provided for national development, the best insurance against Communism in the region.

The question of the defense of the West remains. Since the Soviet Union has hardly been acting belligerently, a Viet Nam settlement would illustrate that we too desire a detente designed to reduce the chances of a nuclear holocaust. Perhaps, Russia's quiet mood results from the current leadership transition, and she will act more aggressively in the future. Yet, if we really desire peace, we can only behave in a peaceful manner, and find out what happens.

Having given my opinion regarding the Viet Nam struggle, I recognize that, at least for the time being, it will not be followed by the administration. Thus, I feel compelled to say more.

As a so-called civilized nation, we should minimize the killing of civilians and the brutal treatment of prisoners. Also, a growing number of refugees, one million at the end of this year, is being created, and they are not being adequately treated. A country which spends so much on deeds of war can at least make life somewhat tolerable for these people.

These are only token actions and hardly satisfactory. But, if America insists on playing the part of the child of darkness, we can at least show the world it is only a temporary aberration, and not a chronic affliction.

There Must Be Some Easier Way To Travel

WASHINGTON — If Santa Claus had taken the bus, he'd probably still be at the North Pole at the beginning of the New Year without having slid down a single chimney.

That's the impression I've got after having once again used the unreliable services of a bus company whose name I"ll be kind enough not to mention.

Perhaps buses are more pleasant to use when there's no holiday rush, but such information will do little to soothe embittered across the country travelers — including myselt.

Mind you, though, I am not attacking thousands of dedicated bus employes. Despite their best efforts, I eventually reached my destination.

It would be a "thru" bus, they promised me when I bought my ticket in Chapel Hill.

In motorized comfort, they said, I would whiz over superhighways to Washington without changing vehicles, availing myself of comforts like adjustable seats.

Well, it didn't work out that way.

The bus wasn't as "thru" as promised. At Durham, we passengers were cajoled off our luxurious motor coach with the promise that if we changed vehicles we'd go to Washington and New York without stopping until we got to Richmond.

So we stopped in Raleigh.

Then the tired passengers were herded onto still another cruiser.

No more changes after this, the bus people insisted — but that was before they decided we should transfer again, even though we hadn't left the Raleigh bus station.

Once underway, the passengers discovered those much - advertised adjustable seats were only as adjustable as the person in back of you.

At Richmond, our supposed "rest" stop, the bus company provided me with just enough time to gulp down a greasy hamburger.

And when I finally reached Washington, my father was not at the terminal.

He had foolishly trusted the bus people, who insisted my coach wouldn't be pulling in very soon; perhaps this is why it did.

Dad and I left the terminal at 1 a.m. after a three - hour wait — without my bags, which had to be retrieved the next morning.

Bus travel is a mongrelized form of transportation embodying the worst features of planes, trains and automobiles.

Every conceivable frustration has been made available for your inconvenience:

—Seat - mates who read books while you're trying to sleep, keeping you awake with the overhead lights.

—Seat - mates who resent your keeping them awake with the reading lamps.

—Passengers who talk too much.

—Passengers who tell you to shut up when you're trying to converse with the person beside you.

—Idiots in front of you with their seats adjusted too far back.

—Idiots behind you who complain your seat's leaning too far over.

—Ill - mannered travelers refusing to share their sumptuous sandwiches with their starving companions.

—Ill - mannered travelers begging you for a snack you want all to yourself.

—Nuts who demand that you surrender your window seat so they can enjoy the scenery.

—Nuts who won't change places to give you a chance to see what's outside.

—Inconsiderates who stink up the bus with their cigarettes.

—Inconsiderates who won't give you a match since they don't want to smell your smoke.

—Travelers offending their fellow passengers by wearing dirty clothing and two-day beards.

Travelers who make rude remarks about your dirty clothing and two - day beard after you've explained you didn't have time to dress up because of exams.

Frankly, I've had enough of "The Easiest Travel On Earth." Be seeing you at the Raleigh - Durham airport!

Cartoon Is 'Off Base'

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel that the cartoon in the Thursday, Dec. 16 Tarheel was just too much "off base.'-' Mr. Barnard obviously depicts a Carolina student telling three wise men who think they have found the Star of Bethlehem, that it is just a light atop the Bell Tower.

If you want to make cuts on sex & etc., okay. However, I feel that the cartoon was a cut on religion and the birth of Christ, and shouldn't have appeared in the Tarheel. The Christmas Story is a beautiful one; let's not mess it up with cartoons satirizing it.

Apathy Hurts Quarterly

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Carolina Quarterly, never a truly thriving campus publication, has very nearly become a dead letter at the University because of apathy on the part of both students and faculty. When the Quarterly actively sought material for the fall issue on campus, there was little response, and when the Quarterly sought staff members this year interest was equally lacking. Furthermore, whenever the Quarterly does manage to limp off the presses it is generally received by the majority on campus as either a joke or a waste.

Laboring under the disadvantage of an unconcerned staff last year, the Quarterly very nearly died for lack of sales (the Quarterly, unlike the Tar Heel, does not have ready, captive readers, but must sell to survive). This year, however, a group of more energetic students is attempting to preserve andm aintain the Quarterly at Carolina.

The Quarterly eagerly reads all submitted material and welcomes all persons wishing to work on the magazine. Furthermore, the Quarterly by no means rejects constructive and concerned criticism. But to pass off the Quarterly as a product of "the beatniks," as Mike Jennings did in his review, accomplishes very little indeed.

If, as Mr. Jennings says piously but incorrectly, American fiction is dead, then it must certainly have been killed by apathy. And if the "tradition" of American literature has gone to "the beatniks" by default, as Mr. Jennings believes, it did so because whoever else might have been concerned about that tradition was not energetic enough to maintain it themselves. And those who are energetic enough to salvage or maintain at least the vision of this aspect of our culture at Carolina, even if they be (horros!) "them beat folk," should not be slammed for their effort.

In short, Mr. Jennings should make his criticisms constructive, not personal. . . .

Farewell To Sharp

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Chancellor Sharp is gone. Yippy! And good riddance. It took us a little longer to get rid of him, than to pass the Speaker Ban (never say die, the Ban will rise again!). But we got him. He was an intellectual who came forgettin that it's the Legislature who knows best about schoolin. Why, he was supposed to be an adminis trator and everybody knows that administrators should say "yes suh" and do what they are told. That fella had some nerve coming here from Ohio and tryin to take over and mix things up, with all them new ideas. He was scary.

Biographies —

Here's a nice little library of biographies—both old titles and fairly recent ones. Prices are moderate, and the reading is as lively as the human race itself! You'll find 'em in the Old Book Feature Case.

Prices Trimmed

While you slept and ate turkey, we've been over the stock again, and trimmed the prices of the slow-pokes. Lots of former 29c numbers have gone upstairs to wait for next April's 19-9-free sale. Books that were dozing on the 68c shelf have been rudely moved down to the 29c shelf, and their places, in turn, filled by sleepers from the 97c shelf. Even the hard-to-find titles have been pruned a little to make it easier for you to give them the sort of home they deserve.
1966 is going to be a lively year in the Old Book Corner, and now's the time to start looking.

'Holiday Mountain' To Open Jan. 11

The Carolina Playmakers second production of the year, "Holiday Mountain," a comedy by one of Italy's most celebrated playwrights, Ugo Betti, will open a week from today.

Scheduled for 8 p.m. performances Tuesday through Sunday in the Playmakers Theater, "Holiday Mountain" is set in the alpine region of northern Italy during the early 20th Century.

It concerns a young woman who lures a complacent young man into her maternal coils. The play is a series of hilarious misadventures which grow from the man's predicament.

Author of a dozen serious as well as comic works, until his death Betti was recognized as the leading dramatist in Italy in the generation that followed Luigi Pirandello.

Harry Davis, Playmakers Director, is staging the comedy which has been rehearsed for two weeks.

Included in the cast of 11 are: Anne Mallard Davis and Ben Jones, both of Chapel Hill; Melody Dickinson of Nashville, Tenn.; James Boothby of Rockford, Ill.; Sherry Elledge of Marion; Tom Wilson of Binghamton, N.Y.; and Wendy Farer of Manchester, N.H.

Arthur Cain of Florence, Ala.; J. Earl Lasater of Pittsboro, Catherine Waring of Goldsbobo, and Dale A. Neiburg of Pendelton, S.C. are also in the cast.

Nursing School To Take Juniors Soon

Two avenues are being opened up for students to enter the School of Nursing.

At present, only one avenue is open.

All students going into nursing now enter the University as freshmen. They follow nursing and general education courses for four years, including three summer sessions.

Dr. Elizabeth L. Kemble, dean of the UNC nursing school, announced today that the curriculum is being changed so that a student may continue to come here as a freshman or may enter nursing as a junior after two years at another college or university.

This means, for example, that students in the new community colleges could transfer into nursing here at the junior level if they meet the admission requirements, are well qualified otherwise and a place is available in the junior class here.

These curriculum adjustments will make it possible for the first transfer student to be admitted here in the fall of 1967.

The UNC nursing school now admits 75 freshmen each year. This will continue for two more years.

In the fall of 1967, Dean Kemble said plans are to admit 75 freshmen and 25 transfer students at the junior level.

A decreasing number of freshmen and an increasing number of juniors will be admitted until eventually all students will begin nursing school as juniors.

Gifts To Carolina Reach All-Time High In 1964-65

Gifts, grants and bequests received by the University hit an all - time high for 1964 - 65 at $17,104,243.77.

Included in the total giving figure was $14,218,622.10 in contracts for research and training grants. Another $2,885,621.67 was received in the form of gifts, grants and bequests.

Of the latter figure, $733,981.18 was given by alumni while bequests accounted for $18,536.76. Corporations gave $853,499.12 and foundations $904,719.19. Rounding out the $2,885,621.67 was $374,885.42 given by other sources.

Alumni giving was up this year by $18,000 over 1963-64 as 7,630 alumni gave $155,194.57. This figure represents a growth of 13.5 per cent over the previous year in both number of contributors and amount of money given to the University. Alumni giving held on to a 13.5 per cent average increase over the previous year for the 13th consecutive year.

Besides alumni giving, eight other funds conducting annual appeals reached a combined record high. This group accounted for $718,483.08 in gifts. Included among these were the Business, Dental, Educational, Journalism, Law, Medical and Pharmaceutical Foundations and Friends of the Library.

Corporation gifts established another new record for a single year at $904,719.19 to be used to provide scholarships, fellowships and unrestricted research funds. The largest single corporation gift, $500,000 by Burlington Industries, was given to establish the J. Spencer Love Clinics in the medical center.

Summarizing reports made by organization heads, Charles M. Shaffer, director of UNC Development Program called for continuing support when he said, "As we look to the future and the challenges and responsibilities that lie ahead, it is obvious that the funds received from private sources will play an increasingly important part in the overall development of the University."

Tar Babies Stomp Cold Wildkittens

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's Tar Babies made a triumphant return to action last night, stomping the Wildkittens' tail in a 93-65 waltz past the Davidson frosh.

It was the first game for the Babies since December 8, and they marked the end of their long layoff with a well-coordinated team effort which saw an abundance of excellent passes and plays as they rolled to their fourth straight win in a thus far unbeaten season.

Leading the scoring for Coach Larry Brown's club was guard Dick Grubar who cut the nets for 22 points and had about as many outstanding assists as the rules allow. Bill Bunting bombed in 21 and Joe Brown, Bunting's mate at forward, fired for 18.

Rusty Clark had 12 rebounds, and he and Gerald Tuttle each scored 12 points.

As has been the case in all but one of their games, the Tar Babies pulled away early, with Bunting and Clark collecting two field goals apiece before Davidson could scratch. Clark got nine of his team's first 15 points and then turned the scoring over to his sharpshooting buddies.

In the first half, which ended with a nine-point Tar Baby blitz, the UNC frosh hit 21-of-30 shots from the floor for 70 per cent. The Wildkittens could muster but nine field goals in 30 tries for 30 per cent, and trailed by 48-22 at the 20-minute break.

The chief deterrent to the Babies' breakaway was guard Dave Moser, who swished four long one-handers to keep his shorter and outplayed team reasonably close at 26-18 with 8:57 remaining in the half.

But then Tuttle hit one from in front of the foul circle, Jim Bostick and Brown got a fielder each, and Grubar looped in three free throws to officially break it open.

Just before the half, the yearlings hit another nine-point spree, in which Bunting got seven points including a three-pointer, and capped the push with a 20-foot net-rippler at the horn.

Grubar canned a layup on a pass from Tuttle to open the second period, and thereafter, the Kittens were unable to mount anything resembling a rally.

Holiday action on the hardwood put three wins against one loss on the Tar Heel basketball record and Coach Dean Smith's troop added another win before classes were suspended.

In a home game with Florida State on Dec. 16, which Carolina won 115-80, Bob Lewis broke the school one-game scoring record set by Billy Cunningham last year against Tulane when he scored 48 points. Lewis poured in 49 points and Larry Miller ended the evening with 20 points and 10 rebounds.

A preliminary exhibition to the Florida State game saw Charlie Shaffer's All-Stars down Larry Brown's frosh 83-81. Shaffer led the All-Stars with 23 points and Rusty Clark was high man for the frosh with 13.

On Dec. 19, the L and M kids got together in Charlotte to lead the Tar Heels over previously unbeaten Florida in a 66-59 win. Lewis scored 24 points and Miller 21 with the latter collecting 12 rebounds.

Carolina traveled next to Greensboro where on Dec. 27 Princeton bowed to the Heels. Guard Tom Gauntlett spurted the Chapel Hillians after intermission with ten points to combine with Lewis and Miller who had 32 and 23 points respectively in a 75-61 win against the Ivy Leaguers.

Last Thursday evening in Raleigh, the Tar Heels downed Utah 90-85 in the Triangle Doubleheader which featured Utah, West Virginia, N. C. State and Carolina. And Friday night Carolina bowed to West Virginia 102-97 in a nip and tuck battle of offensive action.

Together, Lewis and Miller poured in 62 points and Bennett added another 11 points in the Utah game and the starting five scored in the double figures against West Virginia, but to no avail.

Mountaineer Coach Bucky Waters prepared his team well as they boxed in Lewis allowing him only 12 points, six each half.

Carolina's defense in the West Virginia game was definitely off as evident by the score, 102-97, but a team effort on offense was present with Gauntlet scoring 28; Miller, 23; Bennett, 18; Lewis, 12; and Yokley, 10.

Even with the off night against the Mountaineers, Lewis carries a 31.8 scoring average for the season. Larry Miller is second man on the squad with 23.4 points per contest.

Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith summed up the holiday activity saying, "We were pleased with our wins over Utah and Princeton, both of whom had been ranked in the top 20, and now we are looking forward in getting back to Carmichael and our home court fans."

Through the holiday season, Carolina's record included seven wins against three losses, but the season is just beginning with ACC action taking precedence in the weeks to come.

So remember sports fans—keep cheering and cheerful as well.

"Well, Almost A Happy Holiday"

Fauntleroy

Christmas had passed and the invietable gloom which always follows it lay heavily upon my home.

Jeeves, my butler, had the day off.

I lit the fire in my bedroom and settled down to a depressing best-seller. Suddenly, I heard a clatter of hooves on the rood and heavy footsteps walking towards the chimney.

"Sakes," the huge red suited man said as he emerged from the fire place rubbing his stern, "Why did you have to light that fire?"

"Who are you, cat," I asked rather astoundedly.

"Use your eyes will ya. I got the red suit, the beard, the belly, and the red nose. The whole bit."

"You mean there is a real Santa," I asked jokingly.

"You don't have to believe me buddy. I come to you a day late because I got all kinds of troubles.

"Well, I've heard of you, Fauntleroy. I want to make some bets on the bowl games with a few friendly polar bears. Can you help me out? I got to have some money, and fast."

"Sure Santa. Pick UCLA, Alabama, Missouri, and LSU."

And with that the old bearded figure winged his slay toward the pole with dollar signs revolving within his eye balls.

Thieving Students Think Game A 'Sport'

By MIKE WILLIAMS
Special to the DTH

"It's $4,000 a year straight out of my pocket!"

This is how Wally Kuralt, proprietor, describes shoplifting at the Intimate Bookshop. "And that's just what the books cost us — if you figure the retail price we lose about $7,000 a year."

Why do people steal books?

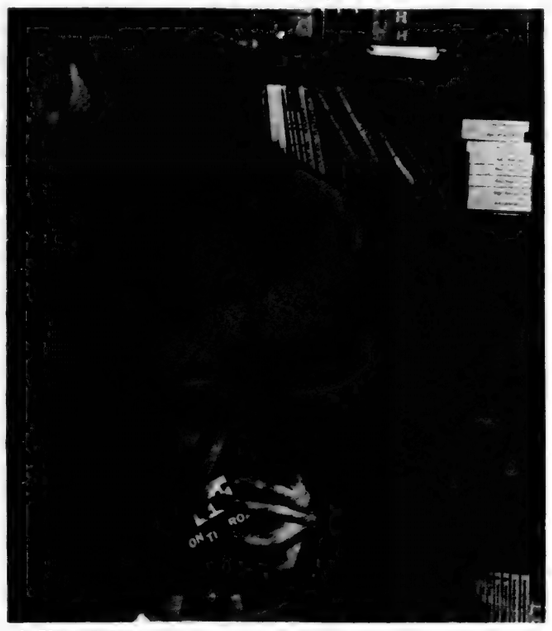
"I don't know," confesses Kuralt. "Usually it's not because they need the books or can't afford them. Sometimes they even pay for one book and try to steal another at the same time. They seem to think it is kind of a sport."

"They" are mostly UNC students. Usually two or three of them work together. One man blocks off the view while the other stuffs a book under his coat. Sometimes a third stands lookout."

They steal anything from 15c paperbacks to $20 art books.

But Kuralt respects UNC students in general. "By and large, students are scrupulously honest," he emphasizes. "There really aren't many bad ones, and we think we've spotted most of them by now."

The Intimate does not use many of the preventive measures employed by other stores. "I always get a little irritated at stores that make you leave packages and coats by the door or check them on the way out. We don't use mirrors or hidden observers, either. Only the regular employees are keeping an eye out for shoplifters. I'd like to think most people are honest."



A UNC STUDENT attempts a five - finger discount at the Intimate Book Shop and is caught in the act by DTH Photographer Ernest Robl. Owner Kurault ways he loses almost $4,000 annually to a small number of shoplifters.

The worst time of day for shoplifting is right before a movie, Kuralt says, when the store is crowded and employees are all busy with customers. The worst time of year is the Christmas season.

"Usually, without really trying, we catch one or two people a week trying to steal books. But the first week of December we caught about a dozen. We've had to put a plain - clothes Pinkerton man in the store. It cost quite a bit, but it has been worth it."

What happens to students caught trying tot steal books?

"We have never yet prosecuted shoplifters. I hate to prosecute a college student. Once he has a conviction for theft on his record, just one little thing like a book, he will have a hard time getting a job. Employers will not trust him. It would be awfully hard on a student if we prosecuted.

"We have a pretty fair idea who most of the actual or potential shoplifters are, though. We watch them when they come in, and if we catch one stealing, we make him sign a statement telling what he has done. Then we ask him to leave and stay out of the Intimate."

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

Butcher, Baker or Broom Pusher?

We haven't been back but two days and all ready the rumors are flying high and wide concerning the permanent replacement of Chancellor Sharp.

As our friend Jim Smith says, "We knew all along Dr. Sitterson was most likely to succeed."

But "they" say he is only temporary.

That doesn't seem to bother most students. They all have the inside scoop on who will be the next dope, er chancellor.

Some say Charlie Justice, Chief Beaumont, Hugh Lefler and the janitor out in Craige have the best shot at the title. Coach Jim Hickey is rated a dark horse.

Others feel a moderating influence outside the University will be brought in—Barry Goldwater or Tom White?

Look Better, Feel Better, Labor Less

Physical therapists at N. C. Memorial Hospital advise taking exercises while pregnant to help you look better, feel better and even deliver your baby better.

The hospital's own exercise program particularly deals with sway backs and over-stretched stomach muscles.

"A prepared patient is a relaxed patient in the labor room," one doctor says.

"We want the exercises to become a habit early (in pregnancy)," a physical therapist explained.

Roth Receives Burlington Award

Congratulations to Benjamin Sterling Roth. The Charlotte junior was recently awarded a $500 Burlington Industries Scholarship.

Roth, an accounting major, has been a MRC representative and a treasurer of his dorm. He is also active in other areas of student government.

He plans to be a certified public accountant.

The award is given annually to a junior who holds it until he is graduated. Burlington Industries provides two $500 scholarships and gives an extra $1,000 to the Student Aid office for other purposes.

The recipient must be a business administration major with a good background in his field and have a definite financial need.

A Busy Line And Zany Conversation

The telephone lines between the Chapel Hill and Greensboro campuses are some of the busiest in the world, but they seldom carry a conversation like this recent one:

"Hi, watcha doin'?"

"Oh, just studying my anatomy."

"WHAT!?"

"Reading an assignment in my anatomy book."

"Oh."

UNC-G Head Denies Rumors On Return

Dr. Otis A. Singletary, who returned Jan 1 to UNC-G as Chancellor, told the Daily Tar Heel yesterday that his return to Greensboro "has absolutely no connection with the resignation of Paul F. Sharp."

"I have not been approached by anyone and that's that," he said.

President William Friday said the committee which will select a new Chancellor for the Chapel Hill branch of the University has not as yet been chosen.

Singletary took a year's leave of absence to become director of the Job Corps in Washington. Last September he began looking for a replacement so that he could return to Greensboro.

He was originally scheduled to return Feb. 1, but a replacement was found and he returned Jan. 1.

Commenting on academic freedom in a state - supported university, Singletary said, "The most ideal climate for academic freedom does not exist in a (state-supported) university system. A state institution has more direct pressure on it than does a private institution."

"The problem for a thoughtful person in charge of a publicly supported institution is that sometimes people without standing and without knowledge are in a position to influence it adversely."

However, Singletary said "the University of North Carolina has been one of the freest institutions in this region."

Immediately after arriving in Greensboro, Singletary appointed Dr. James S. Ferguson as vice chancellor. Ferguson had been acting chancellor during Singletary's leave of absence.

The position of vice chancellor was created last week by the trustees of the University.

Ferguson obtained his Ph.D. degree at the University of North Carolina in 1953. He was a Yale University Ford Scholar in 1952-53.

If It's News Call DTH

Did your mother-in-law run off with your wife?

Do you plan to burn yourself in protest of your final grade in Dr. Caldwell's political science class?

Did you get into Kemps during the pre-Christmas sale and out again without a scratch?

Are you writing your thesis on the average depth of fox holes in Viet Nam as compared with those dug in the Korean War?

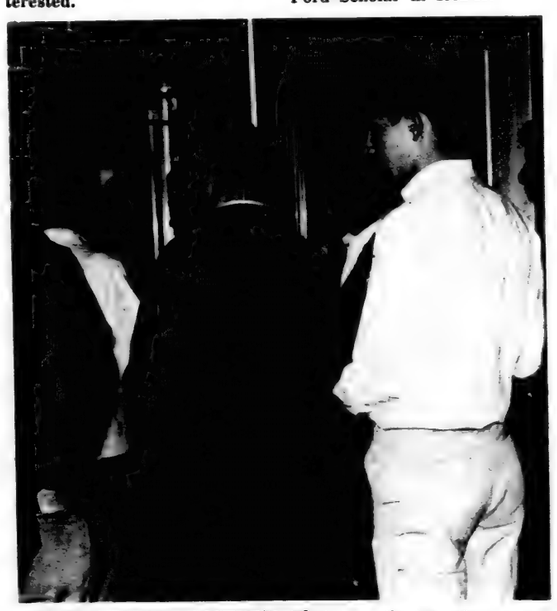
Did you enjoy our football season?

Has the bird of paradise flown up your nose?

You say you didn't enjoy you vacation because you were looking foward to exams?

Call the DTH, 933-1011, its news.

Even if all you have is plain ordinary stuff, we are still interested.



TICKETS? WHAT TICKETS? That was the question many students asked themselves yesterday. At times it took almost an hour to get through the line at the Carmichael Auditorium ticket windows, only to find out that there were no more date tickets available. If you haven't gotten your tickets yet, forget it; tickets for the Duke game sold out at 3:40 p.m. yesterday. DTH Photo By Ernest Robl.

Legality Of S.G. Lawyer Studied By State Attorney

University Denounces Move, Requested State's Opinion

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

The State Attorney General's office will issue within the next few days an opinion on the legality of Student Government's retaining a lawyer, according to Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody.

Student Legislature passed a bill approving the retention of an official Student Government counsel in a session two weeks before Christmas vacation.

The bill's passage provoked a protest from South Building, and Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey wrote a letter December 14 to Student Body President Paul Dickson denouncing the bill as "both unnecessary and unwise."

University attorney and Assistant Business Manager J. A. Williams wrote the letter to the Attorney General requesting a ruling on the legality of Student Government's action.

"We're near a decision now," Moody said yesterday.

"I expect to send a letter to the Chancellor in a few days," he said, "but right now things are in what I'd call a 'fluid state.'"

Dickson said yesterday he had information indicating that Williams had requested that Student Government's retention of a lawyer be declared illegal.

The retention of a Student Government lawyer was mentioned by Dickson as a legislative possibility during last spring's political campaign, and the bill was drawn up and introduced early this fall.

"We have been unusually fortunate down through the years in having a very close and effective relationship between Student Government, the faculty and the Administration," Cathey's letter to Dickson reads in part.

"It has been possible to talk through the problems that have arisen in face - to - face contacts without the involvement of third parties," the letter continues.

"The employment of an attorney by any party in such discussions will seriously jeopardize the closeness of these relationships," it reads.

Cathey's letter was read before Student Government at its last session by Speaker Britt Gordon.

"Who ever said the actions of this body have no consequences," Gordon remarked to the legislature.

Dickson said yesterday legal counsel was necessary for Student Government before it initiated several proposed new projects.

He cited the drawing up of volume purchasing ontracts for the Student Discounting Commission and judicial reform as two projects which needed extensive legal research.

"I guess the Administration is afraid we will hire a lawyer and bring suit against the University whenever there's a hassle," Dickson said.

"Dean Cathey has deplored the use of a third party in any dsipute between Student Government and the Administration." Dickson said. "Yet, the Administration has gone around and brought a third party, the State Attorney General, into this dispute."

Williams "wouldn't have the time to do extensive legal research," Dickson said.

He also cited a possible "conflict of interest" which would arise from William's being in the service of the University and Student Government at the same time.

Dickson said that during the 1962 student administration, Student Government requested that Williams prepare a brief on the North Carolina liquor laws.

"Williams said he was sorry and he didn't have the time to work on it," Dickson said.

More High Rise Dorms, Construction Head Says

By MARY JO HESTER
Special to the DTH

"College facilities are no longer a case of being the little red schoolhouse," said A. S. Waters, University director of construction and engineering in a recent interview.

"It amazes people to think that a little place like Chapel Hill can stand so much construction," Waters continued. "But it's not unusual for the University to be growing. Universities over the nation are expanding at a rapid rate."

The ever - increasing influx of students each fall demands more space and more buildings, leaving the school's Capital Improvement Commission with greater tasks each year. The school's enrollment presently stands at 12,419, nearly double the 6,575 enrollment of ten years ago.

"Our needs always exceed the available funds," explained UNC business manager J. A. Branch, "We never get all that we need."

The latest campus building boom began, in 1961 when Ehringhaus and Craige Dormitories and the Medical Science Research Facilities, three large projects, were begun. There will be a tremendous upsurge of construction during the next three years, according to Waters.

Since 1963 the University has completed buildings valued at $15 million. And on the drawing boards are projects already funded totalling $46,500,000.

UNC buildings now total 4,630,000 square feet. Now under construction are some 123,000 square feet of university buildings.

Projecting to the year 1971, Waters suggests that campus facilities will include another 2.3 million square feet, approximately one - half of the total existing square feet today.

"Beyond this, we don't have a specific number of square feet, but it appears that there will be further expansion at about the same rate," director Waters explained.

The majority of the university property is not within the Chapel Hill city limits. The airport and University Lake are both University - owned but located outside the city limits. The extreme south end of the campus from near the new men's dorms to Mason Farm is not within the city. The main campus is built on 460 acres.

The most recent land acquisition is a tract southeast of Chase Cafeteria, nearthepropry. The newly acquired land is to be a parking lot and playing field south of the new James Dorm.

Waters cited the bulk of the University expansion recently has been dormitories. "But," he stressed, "we're moving into a good cross - section of construction.

The temporary buildings have been slowly disappearing over the past eight years, according to business manager Branch. Built in 1946 to accommodate the influx of G.I. students, these wooden structures will eventually all give away to modern, up - to - date buildings.

Three temporary buildings south of Hill Building were demolished when Hill was built. There were several temporary buildings in the area of the Institute of Government, as well as the area of Dey Hall and Wilson Library — all have been removed.

There is no time schedule for other removals, Branch added.

Waters indicated that high-rise construction will be used when substituting new buildings for the temporary. The multi - story buildings will conserve vital campus space.

High - rise construction is something relatively new on campus. The University now has two seven - story men's dorms, Craige and Ehringhaus, and one ten - story men's dorm, Morrison. The Hinton James Dorm scheduled for occupancy in September of 1967 will also be a ten - sotry structure.

"We have a 21 - story dorm in design. We may have three of them built," revealed Waters.

Polk Dorm, presently planned to be 21 stories, is to be located in the Avery, Parker, Teague area near Kenan Stadium and will probably be completed by the fall of 1968.

McCallie Fails In Finals

Wayatt McCallie from North Carolina was eliminated in the finals of the Southern District Rhodes Scholarship competirion following interviews held Dec. 18 at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga.

McCallie, a 21 - year - old senior from Chattanoga, Tenn., was one of 12 candidates from six Southern states who competed in the district finals. Of the 12 four were selected as Rhodes Scholars.

McCallie, who is a member of Chi Psi Fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Mu Epsilon, Phi Eta Sigma, and for three years chairman of the National Merit Scholarship Committee. was chosen as one of North Carolinai's two representatives

The other representative, Billy Clark of Charlotte, N.C., a student at Davidson, was one of the four recipients of a Rhodes Scholarship.

Boylan Heads Nurses

Miss Lucy L. Boylan has been named acting director of nursing services at Memorial Hospital here.

She fills a vacancy created by the resignation of Miss Mary V. Cheek who will become an educational consultant with the North Carolina Board of Nursing.

Miss Boylan has been assistant director of nursing at Memorial since 1952.

Biochemical Research

The National Science Foundation has awarded $84,000 to North Carolina to purchase equipment for biochemical research in a variety of fields.

The money will be used to buy five major pieces of equipment according to Dr. J. Logan Irvin, chairman of the department of Biochemistry.

Federalists To Meet

The United World Federalists will hold an open meeting tomorrow from 6-8 p.m. at the Durham Baptist Student Center to discuss the Vietnam war as it affects the local community.

The United World Federalists of Durham and Chapel Hill is a chapter of a national non - partisan educational and political action group, which seeks to promote world peace through the use of enforcable world law.

Freshman Women

Freshman girls are asked to attend a meeting either tonight or tomorrow night sponsored by the Pan Hellenic Council concerning sorority life and spring rush.

Tonight's meeting will be in Nurses Dorm at 6:45 p.m. and tomorrow's will be in Smith. Girls that missed meetings earlier this week in Cobb and Spencer and town women are asked to attend.

Madeline Gray, of the Pan Hel Council, said those interested in spring sorority rush must sign up by Jan. 11 in the Dean of Women's office in South Building.

License Plates

North Carolina 1966 license plates are now on sale at the Chapel Hill - Carrboro Chamber of Commerce on West Franklin Street. Deadline for displaying the new plates is Feb. 15.

Saved By Uncle Sam

Worried about your Q. P. average? Kinda low, huh? Like maybe the bottom 25 per cent or so of the class? And your parents say they're going to take away your '55 Stingray? And the Dean called you to his office to give you a pep talk? And your girl has quit dating you because she says you need more time to study?

Well, put those books aside and rest your bleary eyes and weary bones. Things are definitely looking up and a solution is in sight.

It's Uncle Sam to the rescue.

Despite troublesome conservatives' cries of federal encroachment on individual freedom, Uncle Sam is sort of take him away from it all.

Unfortunately, this only applies to male students—who are healthy—who aren't less than 18 years old—who can't prove they are religious pacifists.

Yes, Uncle Sam is coming to take suitable qualified students out of academic hot water—to put them in the hot war, or at least close ot it.

Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of the National Selective Service System, said in U. S. News & World Report that students will likely be drafted soon, especially if manpower demands continue at their high level—40,200 for last month.

William H. McCachren, head of the North Carolina Selective Service System, said yesterday that he "will know more in two weeks" about whether Tar Heel students will be called. He and other state directors will meet with Hershey at that time.

"Our draft quota in North Carolina last month was 976. It's 917 for January, with a national total of 38,280, but it will probably increase in February," McCachren said. "It all depends on what will be required for the military build-up."

He said North Carolina is still drafting only men with 1-A classifications and "we will not be calling any married men until possibly February."

North Carolina has 37,433 2-S students, he said. That means they attend college "full-time" (as defined by the individual college) and are "pursuing a degree in a normal fashion." There are 15,000 1-S's—high school students less than 20.

With nearly a thousand men a month required to fill the quota, it is inevitable that some of us will be taken.

It seems a shame to interrupt a man's educational career when he's doing the best he can under a bunch of professors who give him bad grades, but worse things could possibly happen.

They could draft all the girls.

Politicians, Stay Away

Greensboro Daily News

First District congressional candidate Walter Jones's advocacy of the "East Carolina University" idea in a speech at Washington is no surprise. As a legislator he has been a pusher for East Carolina College. As a candidate for Congress, he is running in a pretty one-sided contest against a Republican fessor from that school who may be counted on to echo the Leo Jenkins line.

"I ask you," Candidate Jones was quoted as saying, "If the General Assembly can create an instant university at Charlotte out of a community college which has not even had a graduating class, then the record of academic service at East Carolina justifies university status."

Surely Mr. Jones overlooks an important distinction. Charlotte College did push its way to university status, but only within the framework of the Consolidated University. President Jenkins of East Carolina emphatically rejects consolidation and calls for a "regional" university outside the UNC umbrella. So the two situations are hardly comparable.

If there is a case for East Carolina university status—whatever that may mean in the era of instant universities—then it should be examined within the Consolidated University framework, and on its merits. It is not a proper decision for the political arena.

Yet that is where President Jenkins and his political allies seem determined to try to project it.

Labor Can Be Wrong, Too

Three separate disturbances have brought the relationship of business, labor, and government into the spotlight again. A transit strike in New York, a strike against an Olin Mathieson Co. gunpowder plant in Illinois, and a price increase by the Bethlehem Steel Corp. have caused renewed interest in the Federal government's role in the business world.

The Johnson Administration took immediate, decisive action in one of the three disputes. Characteristically, the government reacted quickly to the action taken by management to raise prices. Charging that the $5 - a - ton hike is inflationary, Johnson and Gordon Ackley, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers have denounced it as unjustified.

The Defense Department, clearly with Johnson's approval, has announced a boycott of Bethlehem and any other companies which raise prices. Should the boycotted steel producers refuse to submit to the government's pressure and reduce prices again, they will be shut out of government contracts.

While quick to act against management in this case, the President has been slower to take action against labor in the other two. The Administration seems to be more favorably disposed towards labor than towards business.

Yet price increases are no more inflationary than wage increases. Both are part of the vicious circle known as the wage-price spiral. Increases in either tend to lead to increases in the other. The Transit Workers Union's original demands estimated by the city at $680 million over a two - year period — were so far above what the New York Transit Authority offered — $25 million — that one gets the feeling that the union isn't even in the same world. Even the 80 per cent reduction that union President Michael Quill says he offered only brings the demands down from unbelievable to unacceptable.

Something must be done about the New York situation. Unfortunately, the Federal government may have to be the one to do it. New York City cannot endure a crippling transit strike very long and may have to make major concessions to halt it.

Quill has already defied the courts and the city administration. While he probably doesn't expect to get all he is demanding, he has good reason to think he can force the Transit Authority to give the union much more than it wants to.

If the strike lasts more than two or three days, Johnson should act to halt it and bring about a reasonable settlement. With the passage of the Wagner Act in 1937, labor gained the balance of power in strikes. Strikebreaking is a thing of the past. The Federal government must now protect the public interest by watching both business and labor.

While showing little reluctance to chastise business, the government seems much less eager to criticize labor. Usually a long period must elapse before the Taft-Hartley Act is used to halt a strike. This time fast action is needed.

Calvin Coolidge said "No one has the right to strike against the public interest" when he ended a strike of the Boston policemen. The people have a stake in the transit deadlock that cannot be overlooked. Workers sacrifice some of their freedom to strike when they take jobs which vitally affect the public.

Even more important than the public's welfare is the nation's safety. We are at war, and a strike which might impair our war effort should not be allowed. Inflation is not the issue in the gunpowder strike. No matter how modest the workers's demands may be, such a strike just cannot be tolerated. When our soldiers are in combat, their needs come first.

Both unrestrained big business and unrestrained big labor can hurt this country. The possibility of damage is greater if one of the pair is checked while the other is given a free hand. The Federal government has kept a close watch on the activities of business. It should do the same to those of labor.

Bureaucrats Are Getting Younger

The barefoot boy with cheeks of tan is dead.

The shy little girl with pigtails and braces who bawled when the bad boy pulled out the bow on the back of her dress—she's dead too.

Long live the Organization Man and Woman — Seventh grade style.

Surely all of us who were innocent, lazy, useless children at age 12 must feel a twinge when we see that most of today's seventh graders are already seasoned bureaucrats. At an age when our interests were limited to baseball and the Boy Scouts, these kids are after spots on committees and in the "right" social groups.

Maybe the twinge we feel is pure nostalgia. But if we look at seventh graders' own ideas of what they should and should not do to be successful — of what they should and should not be — we may feel something more than nostalgia. We may find something that's a little frightening.

Look over these descriptions of seventh grade "students of the month." They were taken from articles written by seventh graders in a junior high newspaper:

"Richard is superior in every way."

"Her teachers consider her an excellent student capable of superior work."

". . . well liked and has a great deal of initiative."

Want to hear about the moden counterpart of the shy little girl? Well, hang on:

"Beth . . . served on the student council in the first grade; and was president of her class in the second grade. She was elected a representative to the student council in the fourth and fifth grades. This year she is vice - president of her class. She is a member of the Journalism and Library Clubs, and is on the newspaper staff."

I know of no one else in the Fifth Congressional District with that kind of political record.

Beth for Congress.

It's obvious that seventh graders are already engaged in the great American tradition of sizing everybody up, of deciding who's superior and paying homage accordingly.

Well, maybe there's nothing wrong with that. The kids are learning what life is like in our society, and that's something they will have to learn sooner or later.

But do they have to learn it this soon? Are they ready for it? Can they place bureaucratic ideals in their proper perspective?

Perhaps we can find the answers in the seventh graders' ideas of what a bad citizen — a fictitious "slob of the month" — is like:

"She is an all around lousy student and person. She is not active in any organizations, mainly because no one will have her. She has an "F" average and her teachers say she is capable of much less."

". . . is a friendless human being."

"He probably has the lousiest personality in the whole school."

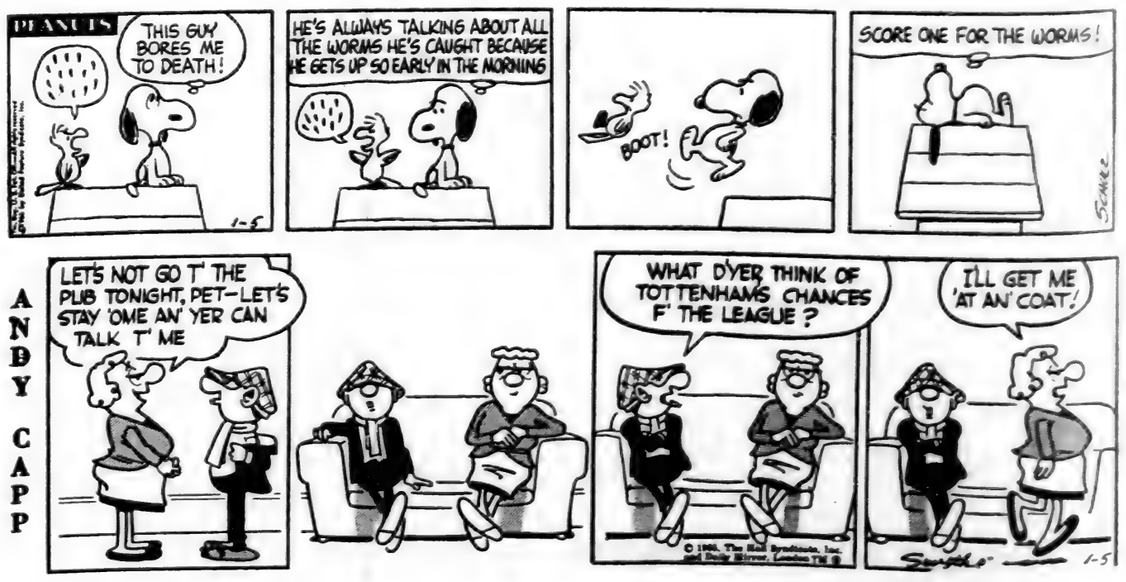
Kindness, honesty, loyalty, and effort do not matter. Success alone counts — social, academic, athletic and recognitional success. Students who achieve success are good. Those whom no one will have, those with low capabilities, those who are friendless human beings are slobs.

There is no sympathy in any of these descriptions for the boy or girl who does not take part in things because of personal problems, or who simply can't do so well. There is no sympathy at all.

Hopefully, grown - up bureaucrats know how to temper bureaucratic ideals with Christian ideals. But children nurtured in the Great Bureaucracy of the 1960's live five days at school by bureaucratic rules and then hear about Christian ideals on Sunday. Is it any wonder that they may come to worship personality, ambition and ability and never know compassion?

The barefoot boy and the little girl with pigtails — and Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn and Penrod — knew instinctively how to place love and compassion above all else. If our society and its children have traded in that ability for the greatest promise of success, then the barefoot boy and the shy little girl died in vain.

For that is a very poor trade indeed



Letters To The Editor

Army Sends Thanks

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It would be much appreciated if I might use your "letters to the editor" column to express the genuine gratification of the 24,000 men of the U. S. Army's 1st Logistical Command for the mammoth endorsement received from the students of the University of North Carolina complimenting the American mission on the embattled peninsula of South Viet Nam at this Christmastime.

Americans in Viet Nam are astonished and pleased with the unbelievably great floodtide of Christmas wishes now being received from every corner of the United States. But you may be assured that very few of our fighting men, at any time, felt that the tiny, highly vocal Vietnik groups back home echoed the general sentiments of the American people. We knew better.

Yet it was grand and heart - warming to receive such substantial proof as that accorded us by your student body. It is important to those of us who have come to know this cunning enemy to feel that only a handful of Americans regard him as a brave, underprivileged hero. He is more a throwback to Genghis Khan, a brutal savage who will cheerfully and sadistically torture and murder women and children, if it assists his war effort. This is fact, not propaganda.

I personally regret that every Vietnik in the United States cannot witness our enemy in action for a single day. On the next there wouldn't be a Vietnik in America.

Sincerely,
Robert W. Duke

Liberal Education Helps

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I agree with Mark Ethridge that everyone should have a liberal education, not just those who will teach the liberal arts, or journalism students. Mark Van Doren once said, "It is necessary in a democracy that everyone know the same things."

Of course he meant the important things —the things that distinguish a well balanced man from the ones who know only a trade. Otherwise, how would a consensus on the vital issues of life be possible?

I don't know how well I write, but I sure have an audience. Even those who dislike what I say evidently read what I write.

I had little, or no, instruction in writing. We had to study the rules of grammar, but I never was much of a one for rule.

As children, it seems to me, we spent our life memorizing, with little emphasis on interpretation. When I got to high school (two years) in Durham, we had a marvelous Shakespeare teacher, who not only made us memorize most of the tragedies but was a master interpreter as well.

She was a student under the famed Dr. Edwin Mims. I wouldn't take anything for that privilege. But she never made us write!

Everything I handed in during the one year I was at Duke (Trinity), came back in big red ink, Re - write! I despised writing. Little did I dream that writing would one day be my hobby.

Whatever skill I may possess in writing is due to my mother who read to us from the time we could talk, and made sure we read good literature after we learned to read. We were not allowed to play at night, but were either read aloud to, or we read on our own, until bed time.

Once again, to quote Mark Van Doren "Memorize the great passages in literature. They will come to you someday when you need them, and you will be grateful." I am indeed grateful for the great passages that I memorized as I went along!

I learned another valuable lesson writing for the newspapers — Keep it short. Say what you have to say, stick to your subject. Take it for granted that your audience is familiar with your background subject matter, make your point, and stop.

I recall one person who entered a writing contest on "The Advantages of Living in a Surburb." His first attempt contained twice the minimum words allowed. He rewrote it, cut it to size, and won the first prize!

However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Women Drivers Are Innocent Of Blood Spilled On Motorbikes

By ANN THOMPSON

For once women can't be blamed for a growing accident rate — involving two - wheeled motor vehicles in Chapel Hill.

Out of 552 registered motor scooters at UNC, only eight belong to females.

A study by the School of Public Health Accident Control Division, the Infirmary, and the Dean of Men's office is being done to find some way to prevent accidents.

Commenting upon the scooter accident problem, campus police chief Arthur J. Beaumont says, "Many riders are immature and don't realize the danger involved."

He explained the problem of small vehicles. "Often the large car driver doesn't notice the small vehicle and squeezes them out of traffic. And automobile drivers have a feeling of security which motorcycle drivers can't have riding their open vehicles.

"Too many people regard them as bikes, not realizing the power they have. Those who ride will have to take some precautions. They're simply not being fair to us or themselves."

He explained the parking problem has been temporarily checked by the motorcycles but in the future, "other arrangements will probably have to be made."

Chapel Hill police chief William Blake feels the problem has been kept pretty well under control. "It is bad only on the back streets where we have a problem with some of the cyclists racing."

"We are concerned there have been so many a accidents. They are not all reported, however, so we just don't know about many of them."

Most of the people interviewed about their feelings toward motorcycles in Chapel Hill were not very favorable.

Kenneth Colman, a political science graduate student from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, thinks, "They are a pest because there are too many vehicles in Chapel Hill." He suggested restricting sophomores from registering cars to limit the number

One Chapel Hill attorney is "scared to death of them. When I'm walking I'm afraid they will kill me and when I'm driving I'm afraid I will kill them," he said.

Miss Otelia Connor, guardian of student manners at Chapel Hill, doesn't like them running in and out of traffic. "They make too much noise to suit me. If riders would be more considerate of others, particularly those trying to sleep, I would not be so opposed to them."

Douglas F. I. McGill, president of the Travel-On Motorcycle Company of Chapel Hill feels that light - weight motorcycles are far safer than automobiles.

In a seven year period the motorcycle safety record per mile per vehicle was about 89 per cent better than that of automobile drivers. There was one auto accident for every 49,000 miles driven, whereas there was only one motorcycle accident for every 333,000 miles driven.

McGill offered to set up a clinic using a large parking lot and to supply it with qualified safety instructors.

It would be operated on weekends and the staff would include many expert campus cyclists to teach rules of the road.

In a letter to Dean Long he asked, "How qualified are the people you have chosen to head up your program of accident control? Has the Director, Miss Janice Westaby of the Public Health Accident Control Division, ever even been on a motorcycle?"

McGill pointed out that, "her four possible solutions to the problems here — 1. equipment regulations, 2. a total ban on two - wheeled vehicles, 3. a compulsory drivers' training program, and 4. allowing no passengers — are bordering on the irrelevant and very nearly the unconstitutional."

The motorcycle craze at UNC is not a Yankee mode of travel. Students from North Carolina own 372, while students from Conn., N.Y., N. J., Penn., Mass., and R. I. own only 83.

Carolina Events

If nothing interests you as much as research and development...

consider the advantages of a career in the laboratories of the David Taylor Model Basin

The David Taylor Model Basin, one of the oldest government laboratories, has grown steadily in size and responsibility and is now concerned with design concepts for aircraft and missiles, as well as with surface ships and submarines. Its five major laboratories conduct basic, applied, and developmental research in these fields:

STRUCTURAL MECHANICS—Submarine and surface ship structures, effects of underwater and surface explosions, ship and personnel protection, deep-sea research vehicles.

APPLIED MATHEMATICS—Computer-aided ship and system design, automated data processing, numerical techniques, management data analysis.

ACOUSTICS AND VIBRATION—Radiated, near-field, self and hydrodynamic noise, countermeasures, silencing devices, noise transmission.

An engineering or scientific career at the David Taylor Model Basin offers you many advantages:

1. Because of the mission of the Model Basin, you can be sure that you will be engaged in research, development, test and evaluation not as a bystander, but as an active and increasingly important participant. Whatever your discipline, you will have the opportunity to apply it to one of the important projects in which the Model Basin is engaged.

2. You will have the satisfaction and excitement of working on projects that advance the state of the art and are of national and international importance.

3. Working with you will be men whose engineering and scientific achievements have earned them wide reputations in their fields. Your contact with them will be of immeasurable value in your own development as a professional engineer or scientist.

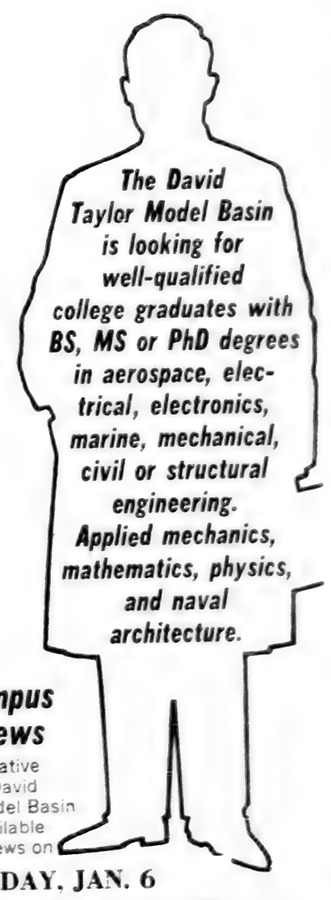
4. You will work in a campus-like environment with 186 acres of laboratories and supporting facilities with millions of dollars worth of equipment. For instance, the Hydromechanics Laboratory has a Towing Basin 3/5 of a mile long, 50 feet wide, and 20 feet deep; a Maneuvering Basin that covers 5 acres. The Applied Mathematics Laboratory uses four high-speed digital computers to solve engineering and logistic problems. The ultra-high-speed UNIVAC LARC performs 250,000 computations per second. The Aerodynamics Laboratory is equipped with nine wind tunnels, subsonic, transonic, supersonic, hypersonic, for the testing of aircraft, missile and airborne component models. Ten pressure tanks, and tensile and compressive load testing machines are among the devices used by the Structural Mechanics Laboratory in research on hull structures for ships, deep-diving submarines and deep-sea research vehicles. Mechanical generators in the Acoustics and Vibration Laboratory can produce known forces in structures ranging from small items of machinery to complete ships.

5. The management of the Model Basin is interested in your professional development. It provides you with the opportunity to receive financial assistance and time (up to 8 hours a week) to attend classes at one of the six major universities in the immediate area, which offer courses in virtually every field. In addition, a number of graduate courses are conducted at the Model Basin. Under a new program, several employees are now engaged in full or ¾-time advanced academic study and receiving full salary as well as all their expenses.

6. At the David Taylor Model Basin, you can reach the $10,000 to $12,000 level within four years. In addition, as a Civil Service employee, you get generous vacations and sick leave, inexpensive life and health insurance, and enjoy the benefits of an unusually liberal retirement program.

7. Within minutes of the Model Basin are the suburbs of Maryland and Virginia offering excellent living conditions, unusual recreational facilities, and some of the best public school systems in the country. Because the Washington area is a center for scientific research as well as for government, it boasts a large concentration of people of intellectual and cultural attainments. Washington, D. C. with its museums, art galleries, libraries and points of historical interest is just 12 miles from the Model Basin.

For more information about the David Taylor Model Basin and the opportunity it offers you, see the interviewer who visits your campus or write directly to Mr. S. DiMaria, Head, Office of Civilian Personnel.



The David Taylor Model Basin is looking for well-qualified college graduates with BS, MS or PhD degrees in aerospace, electrical, electronics, marine, mechanical, civil or structural engineering. Applied mechanics, mathematics, physics, and naval architecture.

Tar Babies Meet Winless Deaclets

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's running, gunning Tar Babies, fresh from their top performance of the season, will jump and shoot tonight against the Big Four tail-enders when they face off against Wake Forest's Demon Deaclets in the twin cities.

The 6-p.m. match will be a preliminary to the UNC-Wake varsity bout.

Wake Forest fields a frosh unit which is winless in three games, having been trounced by Davidson (87-52), Duke (102-78), and tripped up by N. C. State (85-77). They are at the bottom of the Big Four with an 0-2 record, while the Tar Babies perch atop the roost with a 2-0 mark, in defense of two straight Big Four crowns.

The Deaclet leaders are Jerry Montgomery, Jay Randall and Mickey Bertram. Montgomery leads the individual scoring with a 23.7 mark and a high of 33 against Duke, with Randall (13.7) and Bertman (11.3) following.

UNC's freshman men-of-might whetted their basketball hunger born of a near four-week layoff by devouring Davidson on Monday night, in a game which Coach Larry Brown called "our best yet."

"The boys stayed in good shape during vacation," Brown said, "and came back really ready to play basketball. They had shown unselfishness and teamwork in their games before Christmas, but this game topped everything in every way. Coach (Charlie) Shaffer and I kept jumping up because of the great defense and passing."

Joe Brown, the strong 6-5 forward, had his best game, getting 18 points and hitting 8-10 from the floor. Dick Grubar had 8-11 and Bill Bunting 91-12.

For the four games thus far, five of the first six men are hitting well over 50 per cent of their shots.

Jim Bostick leads with 16-24 for 66.7 per cent. Then come Brown (59.3), Bunting (58.8), Rusty Clark (57.4) and Grubar (56.9). Gerald Tuttle, the 5-11 floor leader, is at 44.8.

Scoring-wise, Clark (18.5), Bunting (18.3) and Grubar (17.8) have been the consistent leaders, with Bostick also in double figures at 10.3.

The Tar Babies return home this Friday night for their second match with Duke. Game time is 8 p.m., and students will be admitted free when showing their athletic cards.

"Get The Message, Deacon?"

Heels Seek Victory Over Deacs Tonight

The "L & M" boys meet the "L & L" boys in Winston-Salem tonight as the Tar Heels seek their second ACC victory of the season against the Deacons of Wake Forest.

Of course the "L & M" boys are the double-threat scoring attack of the Tar Heels—Bobby Lewis, the nation's second leading scorer, and Larry Miller.

The Deacons claim the "L & L" boys. Guard Paul Long is one half of that combination averaging 26.5 points per game in leading the Deacons to two victories in their first eight games Closely following Long in the Deacon scoring parade is the other half of the "L & L" combination—senior guard Bob Leonard. Leonard, runner - up to Billy Cunningham in the ACC scoring race last season, is averaging 24.6 points in the first eight games.

The Tar Heels, fresh from a 67-52 victory over Maryland Monday night, seek to move up in the ACC conference race. A victory over the Deacs will give them a 2-1 conference mark.

The Deacs on the other hand are seeking to break a three-game losing streak. This Christmas had little cheer for the Deacs as they lost to Ohio State, Cincinnati, and Duke.

"We had a tough time," said Deacon coach Jack Murdock. "We played three good teams, and I hope we learned something in the defeats. We played pretty good at times in all three games, but lack of rebounding strength and ball - handling errors were our downfall."

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith was pleased with Monday night's home victory over Maryland. "Maybe it wasn't a pretty game to watch," he said, "but the boys hustled, played defense, and rebounded. If anything, I thought our boys were a little too tense. We wanted to come back so badly after the loss to West Virginia that it affected our play.

There might be a slight revenge angle for the Tar Heels tonight. The two clubs swapped a pair of victories in the regular season last year — the Deacons winning 107-85 at home and the Tar Heel taking a 107-91 decision in Chapel Hill. The Deacons had the last laugh, however, defeating the Tar Heels 92-76 in the semifinals of the ACC tournament.

Bobby Richardson To Speak Thursday At Memorial Hall

The UNC chapter of the Felloship of Christian Athletes will present New York Yankee second baseman Bobby Richardson Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Loren Young of Atlanta, Southeastern director of the fellowship will produce the speaker and Albert Long will preside over the occasion.

Adult advisers at UNC include Long, Danny Lotz and Coach John Lotz.

The student body and the public are cordially invited.

Army, Navy Tough On UNC Dolphins

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

Over the Christmas holidays the varsity swimming team journeyed to West Point and Annapolis and, as coach Pat Earey said, "to put it kindly, we get trounced."

The Dolphins were drubbed by Navy, 72-22 on December 15. Three days later the Cadets of Army took the measure of Carolina by 66-28. They were UNC's first two defeats after five straight wins.

"Navy had a wealth of sprinters and Army had great depth," Earey said. "Actually, the meets weren't quite as bad as the scores indicate. Most of the events were fairly close. We started off both meets by losing the medley relay and just couldn't catch up.

"Fred Lipp and Gaye Stratten did good jobs and everyone else performed just as we expected. We got good experience against stiff competition and I think we'll be better off for it at the end of the year in the championship meets."

The freshmen squad did much better, chewing up Navy 61-34 and Army 70-25. Phil Riker set a Navy pool record with a 1:58.5 time in the 200 butterfly and Jim Edwards set a pool record with a 5:00.5 time in the 500 freestyle. Edwards also bettered the Army pool record in the 500 freestyle with a 5:00.9 mark.

In a meet held by mail on December 11, the freshmen defeated Michigan State, 70-25.

"For the rest of the year we will just concentrate on working hard," said coach Tom Canon. "We probably won't get up for any meet, but will just take time out from workouts to swim our opponent."

Duke Tickets Gobbled Up

Tar Heel fans planning to attend a UNC-Duke basketball game this season had better make plans to attend the one set for Durham on February 26.

Saturday's game with Duke in Carmichael Auditorium is sold out.

Over 6,000 students, faculty, and staff paraded through the south end doors of Carmichael yesterday to pick up their tickets.

The line began forming long before the ticket office opened at 8:30 a.m. and gained momentum throughout the day.

All available seats were swallowed up by 3:40 p.m. and tickets to next Wednesday's home encounter with N. C. State were placed on sale.

Tickets to the N. C. State game will continue on sale this morning with ticket offices opening at 8:30 p.m.

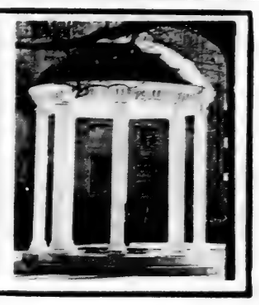
CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley



Ban The Ram

Would someone please explain what good there is in having a ram for Carolina's mascot.

Now we are called the Tar Heels. It's the Marching Tar Heel Band, The Daily Tar Heel and so forth. Tar Heel is official.

So where does this ram come in? A cheerleader in the 1920s gave the University a ram and the tradition has been carried on and on. Now at all home football games we have a ram with blue horns.

And our blue-horned ram gets swiped. All the ram does is lay around on the side lines — very uninspiring.

Why not have a Tar Heel for a mascot? There must be some way. This ram bit is rather ridiculous. Don't you think so?

Majority Against Lawyer

Student Government's proposal to hire a lawyer is opposed by the University Administration. Do you think a lawyer should be hired?

The DTH asked this question of 184 students yesterday. The majority, 84, said they were against the proposed move. Fifty-nine favored having a lawyer and 41 had no opinion.

Here are some of their statements:

Pat Barkley, Newton freshman. "If student government thinks they need a lawyer, then they should have the right to hire one.

Fred Thomas, Concord sophomore, "What would they need one for? They don't have to have a full time lawyer to get legal advice when they need it.

James B. Rush, Miami junior, "I don't see why hiring one all of a sudden is a necessity. I think it's a waste of the student's money.

Dave Mays, Durham sophomore, "No, I think it's just an idea to give some hard up UNC law graduate a job."

The Case Of A Freudian Pen

A popular history professor was showing his class the other day a ball point pen he got for Christmas.

He said it was like the ones Pentagon generals use. He showed the class how the pen could be pulled out and extended into a pointer.

As he pulled it out and pushed it back in again and again, he remarked, "I wonder why no one has ever made a study of the Neo-Freudian tendencies of Pentagon generals?"

Ticket Changes Made By Erickson

Here stand the masses who waited and waited, some more than two hours, Tuesday morning to pick up their Duke tickets. All date tickets were gone by early morning and student tickets were gone by 3:40 p.m.

Talk With Faculty Leads To Changes

By PAT STITH
DTH Managing Editor

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson made five changes in the distribution of basketball tickets yesterday after an hour and a half conference with nine members of the faculty.

He said the following changes would go into effect beginning with the Wake Forest game here Feb. 3:

1) Up to six ticket windows will be open at 8:30 a.m., depending on the demand for tickets.

2) Of those windows open, one will be reserved for faculty, staff and general admission sales.

3) An unlimited number of date tickets will be available.

4) No one, without exception, will have his choice of seats. The best tickets will be passed out on a first come basis.

5) More security precautions will be taken against line breakers.

David T. Lapkin, who served as unofficial chairman of the faculty group, told Erickson that he felt that the system of ticket distribution that has been used was inefficient.

"At times there was only one window Tuesday," he said, "and most of us had to wait in line more than two hours. It seems to us that a better solution to the problem of ticket distribution can be found."

Lapkin referred to the lines that wound about in Carmichael Auditorium and stretched out into the adjoining parking lot.

People were seeking tickets to North Carolina's game with Duke, the nation's number one team, here Saturday at 2 p.m.

"We've been unhappy with what happened Tuesday too," Erickson said. "We want to distribute tickets in the most convenient way possible."

Erickson then asked for criticism and suggestions.

He got them. All nine men were in agreement that more policemen should be on hand to see to it that people do not break in line and that when new windows are opened, people who have waited in line longest are given preference.

One professor said that the two men Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont sent to the auditorium did not do their job and only added to the confusion. The others agreed.

Business Manager Vernon Crook defended the campus police, saying that they made the best of a bad situation.

"We went down there to do the best we could without hurting people — I didn't think it was necessary to hurt anybody," Beaumont told the DTH yesterday.

"Most of the line-breaking came from people who would see a friend and say, 'Hey, come and stand with me so we can get our tickets together.'

Newly built Carmichael Auditorium has a seating capacity for basketball of 8,500, including some 2,000 bleacher-type seats.

Of the 6,500 chair-type seats, 2,000 have been set aside for general admission and student date tickets. The remaining seats (6,500) are reserved for the approximately 12,500 undergraduates and graduates and 4,000 faculty, and staff members and their families

Until now, the Athletic Department has reserved 250 of the $3 general admission tickets for sale as date tickets. Students had never demanded this number until the Duke game.

In the future, 250 general admission tickets will continue to be set aside for student dates. If and when these tickets are exhausted, however, the ticket office has been instructed to sell student tickets as date tickets.

Mrs. Jean Keller, who is in charge of ticket sales, estimated that a total of 450-500 tickets would have satisfied the date ticket demand.

Erickson praised his ticket staff for the job they did in distributing some 6,750 Duke tickets between 8:30 a.m. and 3:40 p.m., Tuesday when the supply was exhausted, despite the problems.

In order to make lines move faster at future games, however, no one will be given his choice of seats. Each person will be given the best remaining ticket.

Other members of the faculty group, in addition to Lapkin, were Danny J. Moffie, Harold Q. Langenderfer, William A. Terrill, George A. Coltrane, Elmer R. Oettinger Jr., Kenneth S. Howard, James L. Murphy, and Edwin C. Hinsdale.

Campus Lacks Fire Alarms

BY STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

You are walking on campus late at night. You notice smoke and flames in a classroom building. Where is the nearest place to report the fire?

According to Chief G. S. Baldwin of the Chapel Hill Fire Department, there are only four fire alarm boxes in town. None of these is located directly on campus.

There is one box at Memorial Hospital and one at the sanitorium. Two boxes are located on Franklin Street: at the Post Office and at Columbia Street.

Two fires have occurred on campus this semester, but neither was of major consequence. On Sept. 20, a transformer in New East caught fire because of faulty wiring, and on Dec. 10, a light switch in Woollen Gymnasium smouldered until firemen reached the scene.

The Kappa Sigma fraternity house had a major fire last year, doing extensive damage to the interior.

The same semester a Kappa Alpha house hay party was cut short because the hay went up in flames.

Up until last year a plan to place 35 fire boxes on campus was under consideration. According to campus security Chief Arthur Beaumont, the plan got bogged down between the administration offices and Raleigh.

These boxes would have had their own power system. They would have operated separately from one another.

According to Beaumont, all buildings on campus are either semi - fireproof or completely fireproof. All buildings have at least one fire extinguisher on each floor; the more hazardous have several.

Beaumont says that each janitor checks his extinguishers daily, making a report on those needing repairs or servicing.

ON THE WAY — Fire extinguishers like this one are readily accessible at strategic locations in most campus buildings in the event of a fire.

One precaution taken by the safety office is having night watchmen check all buildings on their beat for signs of fire. The watchmen are walking campus all night, punching clocks at various locations.

Although the fire department has a full - time inspector to examine buildings in town, fraternities and sororities included, he does not inspect buildings on campus. Beaumont and the campus police, in conjunction with the State Insurance Department, visit all campus buildings regularly.

Memorial Hospital, perhaps the best protected building in town, has regular drills on Fridays. A hospital official places a red flag somewhere in the building. As soon as an employee spots the "fire," he places the alarm.

Morehead Planetarium has its own sprinkler system, set into operation by excessive heat in any room.

There are two fire houses in Chapel Hill, the nearest to campus being on Airport Road near the Police station.

Both November and December set records for having the most fires of any months on record. November had 32 and December had 38 in Chapel Hill.

'Williams Recommended Lawyer To SG'–Travis

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Student Discounting Commission Chairman Bob Travis told the DTH yesterday that University Assistant Business Manager and Attorney J. A. Williams referred him to a Chapel Hill lawyer last May to handle problems in Student Government contracts.

Travis said Williams had recommended the services of Chapel Hill attorney James C. Harper to draw up discount contracts between fraternities and sororities and local fuel oil merchants.

"Williams said he didn't have the time to look into the matter," Travis said.

Student Body President Paul Dickson yesterday cited Travis's statement as proving the necessity for Student Government's having full-time legal aid available if necessary.

Travis's charges are the most recent development in a Student Government-University Administration battle over the proposed retention of an official Student Government lawyer.

A bill approving a SG lawyer's retention was passed by Student Legislature two weeks before Christmas vacation, but no student funds have been appropriated yet to cover expenses.

The legislature's action prompted an immediate and sharp reply from Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, who termed the retention of a Student Government lawyer "both unnecessary and unwise."

Cathey said a lawyer's full-time retention might jeopardize future relations between the Administration and Student Government and he recommended that Student Government utilize the services of Williams.

Cathey refused comment on Travis's remarks yesterday.

Williams was directed by Chancellor Paul Sharp to seek a ruling on the legality of Student Government's proposed action from the State Attorney General's office.

Dickson defended the proposed full - time retention of a lawyer Tuesday, and said Williams didn't have the time to work on Student Government affairs and was subject to a conflict of interest.

Harper said yesterday that Travis did see him about the proposed contracts, but no formal action was taken on the matter.

Harper said he was a friend of Mr. Williams.

Williams told the DTH yesterday he "really didn't remember" seeing Travis or recommending Harper to him.

Briefs on the legality of the retention of a Student Government lawyer have been submitted to the State Attorney General's office, and a ruling is expected within a few days.

Deacons Fall To Tar Heels

By JIM COGHILL
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

WINSTON-SALEM — UNC's Tar Heels baptized the Baptists of Wake Forest last night 99–83 as the L&M kids and the L&L kids matched total scoring with 59 points each.

Carolina took the tap and scored to never lose the lead in Winston-Salem's Memorial Coliseum before some 7,600 fans.

Living up to their expectations, Lewis and Miller kept the nets burning especially during the last half. With only nine points at intermission, Lewis swished another 25 to end the evening with 34 points.

Miller netted 25 — fifteen of them being scored in the last 20 minutes.

Individual scoring honors for the Deacs went to Bob Leonard and Paul Long. Leonard put through 36 points while Long had 23.

The Heels outshot the Deacons from the floor hitting 44 of 70 for 62.9 per cent. Coach Jack Murdock's men could only make 32 of their 76 shots for a 42.1 percentage.

Miller and Lewis could not be stopped in the latter half as the two big guns made 26 of 43 for 60.5 per cent.

But the Deacons had little to be ashamed of from their two big men—making 17 of 33 for 65 per cent.

UNC Gets $5,000 Grant

For the fourth consecutive year, the University of North Carolina has been chosen to award a $5,000 fellowship from The Corning Glass Works to one of it's students.

Carolina, along with Harvard, Yale, Vanderbuilt and Kentucky, will award the fellowship to a graduating senior. The award is to be used for a year of travel and study abroad but not for study in an "institution of higher learning." No special major or field of study is required to be eleigible for the fellowship.

Seniors interested in applying for the fellowship should contact Dean Claude George in the School of Business Administration. The final selection will be made by a University committee, with emphasis placed on over - all excellence and capabilities as demonstrated by the student's scholarship and proposed plan for a year's travel and study abroad.

Loan Recipients

All students who are to receive loans for the second semester must attend one of nine special meetings to be held Jan. 11-13.

Student loans, repayment agreements, and recent amendments to the National Defense Act will be discussed.

There will be three meetings on each day, at 9:30 a.m., 11 a.m., and 2:30 p.m. in Gerard Hall.

All students who have received loans from the University and will be leaving the University at the end of this semester must come by the Student Loan Funds Office in Bynum Hall for an exit interview.

'Hey I Know You'

Three North Carolina students are members of the seven man Monzas band which has recently put out a record, "Hey I Know You".

The three are Ward May, the drummer, Nelson Miller, the writer - arranger, and Mike Bowman, the promotions manager.

Sorority Rush

All girls interested in spring sorority rush should sign up in the Dean of Women's office in 202 South Building by Jan. 11 according to Madeline Gray of the Pan Hellenic Council.

Counsellors

Any girl graduate student interested in working as a graduate counsellor should come by the Dean of Women's office in 202 South Building.

The Dean's office needs two counsellors for the spring semester and is starting to select them for next fall.

Junior Class Heads

All those interviewed for committee positions are expected to come, he said. New committee chairmen are David Heacock and H. L. Pherson, finance committee; Steve Bennett, publicity committee, Charlie Evans, social committee.

Aerospace

Representatives of the Aerospace Technology Division of the Library of Congress will interview students interested in jobs.

Appointments for interviews can be made in 211 Gardner.

Lindsay Goes All Out To End Strike; Tieup Costing $100 Million A Day

NEW YORK (AP) — The New Republican mayor, John V. Lindsay, took a personal hand in transit strike talks yesterday with a bid for an armistice that would set idle subways and buses running again. Union leaders promptly rejected his proposal.

Lindsay's intervention was described as signaling an all-out city hall effort to end the five - day transit crisis.

The tieup is estimated by business sources to be costing the city's economy as much as $100 million a day. Nearly five million passengers normally use the 800 miles of city - owned subway and bus lines daily.

Highway and commuter rail arteries continued to be clogged as millions sought means of getting about the nation's largest city. Many businesses suffered near paralysis when employes and customers simply stayed at home.

The evening rush hour went off far more smoothly than last night — the worst night thus far in the strike. Mobs of commuters at rail terminals were orderly and were moved quickly to stepped -up transportation facilities. The Salvation Army served coffee to waiting crowds at Grand Central.

The flow of traffic on the streets was reported lighter and such jams as occurred were not much worse than on a normal evening. The exodus from the city began in mid - afternoon.

Traffic Commissioner Henry Barnes proposed, and Mayor Lindsay concurred in a voluntary plan whereby Manhattan was divided into four sections, with separate and staggered employment hours recommended for each one.

"It may have held traffic down a bit," Barnes declared.

State Supreme Court Justice Abraham N. Geller postponed for 24 hours a scheduled afternoon hearing to determine if the Transport workers Union should be fined for calling the strike in violation of a court injunction against it.

It was Geller who yesterday sent union chieftain Michael J. Quill to jail — from which he shortly was transferred go Bellevue Hospital after suffering a seizure.

Quill was reported much improved today, with physicians claiming uncertainty as to whether he had suffered a heart attack. He was the target of a barrage of nasty calls from irate New Yorkers.

Hitherto, the mayor had kept his base at City Hall, but today he moved uptown to the Americana Hotel negotiating words of an aide, "will stay until there is a settlement."

Lindsay's first move was to press upon the striking union a proposition that their members return to work while details of their contract deadlock are threshed out with the transit authority.

Quill's successor as chief bargainer, Union Vice President Douglas L. Macmahon, turned down the armistice proposal, standing on the union's traditional policy of "no contract, no work."

The Transit Authority has offered a money package of approximately $29 million, while union demands add up to about $216 million — leaving a gap of $187 millino to be bridged in the peace talks.

Lindsay is reportedly under heavy pressure by the city's business interests to do something about the strike.

In Washington, White House Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers said Johnson already had instructed Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz to offer federal mediation services, if such aid was wanted in New York.

About Those Tickets

The Athletic Department is due of vote of approval from the student body for its eager willingness to change regulations governing the distribution of basketball game tickets.

Problems have arisen this week because we have come to the first big game in the big new auditorium. Students started lining up at 5:30 Monday morning to get one of the 6,500 seats available in Carmichael for the Duke game. There were lines coming and going, opening and closing, and confusion was added to the disgust of those waiting . . . and waiting.

The 250 date tickets available were gone almost as soon as the windows opened. The lines bogged down as those who reached the windows pondered which ticket to take — "Do you want section 8, 3 or the bleachers?"

Faculty and staff members were in those same lines Tuesday and yesterday nine professors paid Atletic Director Chuck Erickson a visit, taking their complaints with them.

Erickson, sticking to his word of doing anything reasonable to make the greatest number of people happy, approved some changes which should make the situation more tolerable, though still far from ideal.

Henceforth, so long as any student tickets are left, date tickets will be sold. For the Duke game, 250 date tickets were held back from the general admission block of 2,000 tickets. Under the new arrangement, 250 date tickets will still come from the general admissions but if there is a demand for more they will be drawn from the block of 6,500 student, staff and faculty tickets.

The number of students seeking single seats might be reduced a little, but at least no one will be forced out of a date ticket.

Before big games in the future six ticket windows will be open at all times and the opening-closing confusion will be eliminated. One of the windows will be reserved for faculty, staff and general admission only. At that window faculty and staff members will still get tickets from the 6,500 group while general admission sales made at the same window will come from the 2,000 block, so no student tickets are being sacrificed.

The right to choose a seat at the window will be replaced with a time-saving "take-this-ticket-and-move-on-it's-the-best-seat-still-available" approach.

It is always possible that these changes will create new problems, but again our thanks to the Athletic Department for its willingness to try suggestions. It is really unlikely that a perfect system will be found during the first basketball season in the auditorium.

And this fact will always remain: When 20,000 people want in a place that holds only 8,500, somebody is going to be dissatisfied.

James Bond, Move Over

It's very fashionable to be a secret agent these days. Every third actor in Hollywood seems to be a cinematic spy and about half the television shows this season are shrouded in trench coats and studded with concealed weapons.

Now, as a UNC student, your chance in here.

You can join Beaumont's Secret Service.

Spoofing aside, Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont has called for your help in solving the latest theft on campus. Somebody entered the typing room in Manning Hall Tuesday and stole a portable typewriter belonging to a law student.

Here are the clues: It is a 1963 model Olympia, two-tone gray, serial number SM7-219391. The thief left the carrying case behind, so be suspicious of caseless portables.

Agents should report findings to Mr. Big (Beaumont) at his plush SS headquarters on the second floor of Y Building.

And be careful, secret agents. The crook might be working for that dreaded organization T.H.I.E.F. (Typewriter Hijackers' International Emergency Fund).

A View From The Hill

The Sweet Smell Of Campus Beauty

BY ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

Place: The office of a popular South Building administrator

Time: About a week ago.

(As the drama opens, the Administrator is speaking on the telephone. He is an amiable man, but he is obviously having a difficult time concealing his current irritation. There is a very persistent Lady on the line.)

Administrator: . . . yes ma'am, it arrived here yesterday afternoon. Six truckloads of it. It was awfully thoughtful of you, but . . . really . . . I hardly know what to do with 36 tons of . . .

Lady: Gracious, Chancellah! You spread it around your shrubs, of course. Makes 'em grow like all get - out. Why folks here in Johnson City say there's nothing' like it for all kinds of things. You should see my collards, Chancellah, they're so . . .

A; I'm sure they are, ma'am . . . but we really don't have that many shrubs here at the University. Thirty - six tons is really far too much for our purposes. Wouldn't it be possible for us to send some back?

A: Yes ma'am, but most of our shrubs are around classroom buildings and dormitories. Thirty - six tons of this —er— substance would be rather — shall we say, distracting — to young people who are exploring the Kingdom of the Mind. Surely, you can see what I mean. The odor is not the most . . . .

L: Chancellah, you are tryin' mah patience a mite. Ah'm beginnin' to wonder if you're supportin' me in the Wah on Ugliness. Mah husband doesn't take kindly to folks who don't support his programs.

A: It's not that, ma'am. It's just . . .

A: Yes ma'am, that's true, but . . .

L: And you appreciate everything mah husband has done, don't you, Chancellah?

A: Of course, we . . .

L: Well now, Chancellah. Won't you show just a teeny bit of that appreciation by participatin' in mah beautification program?

A: I can assure you, ma'am, we'll be most happy to do our part. It's awfully good of you to want to send us these shipments, but, frankly, we can buy our own— uh—fertilizer.

L: Fertilizer! FERTILIZER! Ah'll have you know, Chancellah, that you are speakin' of one of the most celebrated products of this here ranch! You are speakin' of the Pride of the Pedenales. It's found only on the banks of our beloved rivah!

A: That's quite a distinction, but . . .

L: You bet your boots, it's a distinction! Why, Chancellah, ah've shipped Pedenales Pride all over the world. It's become a major part of our foreign policy. Why, just yestiddy, ah got the sweetest note from President DeGaulle. He tanked me so grandly for the 73 tons ah sent him. He said France hoped to have a fertilizer force of its own some day. Chancellah, ah don't send mah Pedenales Pride to jest anybody.

A: I can't tell you how much we appreciate the thought, but . . .

L: Now don't you rile me, Chancellah. That Rhodesian feller got sassy a while back and we cut off his shipment before he could say Arthur Goldberg.

A: I am trying my best to tell you that . . .

L: Ah don't want to hear another word, Chancellah. Ah know you'll give us your full cooperation. The next 36 tons will arrive in Chapel Hill in about two weeks. Good bye, Chancellah. (She hangs up.)

A: But . . . (He grips his desk in an effort to contain himself.) I can't stand it any longer. This place smells like a banana republic. (He leaves his desk, closes a window, and reaches for his dictating maching) Memo to the Board of Trustees . . . Gentlemen . . . After a great deal of thoughtful consideration, I have decided to resign from my post at the University. I have cherished my days here, but I can only say that the atmosphere here is not totally conducive to the free and unhampered pursuit of academic excellence and intellectual inquiry. Therefore . . . .

A New Kind Of Southerner

A new kind of Southern Provincial has sprung up within the past decade. He is not a hillbilly. He doesn't belong to the Klan. He accepts the fact that the South lost the Civil War. In fact, he may be against the singing of "Dixie." And he might wear a beard and picket against U. S. Viet Nam policy. And call the governor of his state a racist.

The New Provincial belongs to a small but growing group of Southern college students and intellectuals whose most important goal in life seems to be Atoning for the Homeland's Sins. But in his eagerness to atone, his condescending sympathy becomes hate — bitterness far more intense than that of the most emotional Northern civil rights leaders.

Realizing that his region is economically and educationally inferior to the rest of the nation, he habitually blames these deficiencies on The Establishment — the Southern press, the Democratic Party, the leading businessmen and the educators.

Sometimes, the New Provincial's criticism is justified; but usually, he attacks The Establishment because he cannot distinguish between the South of 1965 and the Dixie of the 19th century, whose leaders lacked the moderation of their modern counterparts.

The New Provincial satisfies some of his need to atone by constructively working to correct his area's failings — by helping voter registration efforts, by participating in the War on Poverty and engaging in similar positive action.

But generally he mourns the South's troubles with the assistance of coffee house colleagues who spend their time uselessly chattering about topics like the latest bombing in Alabama; or, if the bullshooters are hard-pressed for conversation, they discuss Viet Nam — trying to convince themselves that U. S. Viet Nam policy has earned the United States the condemnation of other nations just as the South's racism brought forth the disapproval of the country's other regions.

The New Provincial probably has never used the word "nigger" within the past five years and once he may even have furtively spat on a Confederate flag; but he feels as if Americans outside the South hold him just as responsible for the racism of the Klan and the Citizens Councils as they do the organizations' actual members.

And where Viet Nam enters the picture, the New Provincial's logic is similar: he has not napalmed any Vietnamese villages, he hasn't fired a shot at the Viet Cong, he doesn't support the corrupt Saigon government; but people in India, Japan and the rest of the world think he has caused these atrocities by his supposed lack of opposition to the State Department's policies.

Therefore, the Provincial believes, he must protest — damning his country's Viet Nam actions without really knowing whether the United States is an international villain. He knows only that his native section of the country is frequently in the wrong when others condemn it; so, he reasons, why not the entire United States? Perhaps the slogan of the New Provincial should be: "My country — right or wrong — is wrong."

Richardson Scores Again

By PETER RANGE

The joke's on everybody in Tony Richardson's latest contribution to the celluloid medium, a farce called "The Loved One" which opened last week at the Rialto Theater in Durham.

Richardson has gone in a single leap from the wild and woolly of the 18th century ("Tom Jones") to the maniacal and ridiculous of the 20th. With the same skill at shooting, editing, and directing which we saw in "Tom Jones," this young Englishman has taken all that is hypocritical and downright ludicrous about being in Hollywood, about being British there, about living or dying in Los Angeles, and about burying your dead there, and turned it into the fastest and funniest comedy available for many weeks.

Dennis Barlow (Robert Morse) mistakenly walks onto a runway apron in England and gets off a jet some hours later in Los Angeles, where he is thus destined to spend the next few hilarious weeks. He calls his uncle, a knighted member of the local British colony, who is paid well for poor art by one of the big movie studies.

Poor Dennis cannot keep up with the standards of these transplated Britons, led by portly Sir Ambrose (the inimitable Robert Morley), and soon finds himself both laughing stock and waterboy of the group.

In the meantime, the uncle has been discharged from the studio and proceeds to hang himself from the high diving board over his crumbling, once-gradiose swimming pool. The plot now really begins when Dennis is sent to make funeral arrangements at Whispering Glades, Hollywood's plushest and paganest cemetery.

At Whispering Glades Dennis is guided through bucolic vales, over bubbling brooks, past the music of the spheres, and into the Gothic Slumber Room by lovely Aimee Thanatogenos (Anjanette Comer). Aimee prepares the stiffs for their last public appearance and sees the mortuary as her cloister. Dennis falls head over heels for this self-appointed nun and tries quite unsuccessfully to win her heart from the start.

Dennis soon finds himself in a counterpart business, the animal mortuary. He also soon finds the key to Aimee's heart: poetry. He plagiarizes daily from Tennyson and friends, passing himself off to innocent Aimee as a poet.

His rival is Mr. Joyboy (superb performance by Rod Steiger), a male Goldilocks who does the embalming at Whispering Glades. Aimee consults a newspaper Brahm in sage for advice and finally chooses Dennis. But Joyboy uncovers the source of the poet's words and wins her back.

In a final climax of desperation, Aimee commits suicide by embalming herself. Both distressed lovers load her into a casket intended for the first astronaut destined to be interred, not in the ground, but in outer space. Dennis departs again for England, his aching heart at rest, after watching on TV as the unsuspecting Air Force rockets his beloved into eternal orbit.

Everybody gets a jibe in this incomparable satire on the human comedy in our midst. Lyndon Johnson, Queen Elizabeth, the English, the Americans, the Jews, the Negroes, the military, a number of famous guest stars, the space age, and above all the American way of death in its most gloriously ridiculous extremes.

Richardson's technique is fast and furious. His actors are like marionettes suspended from his hand, even if all but Rod Steiger play their own stock roles.

You'll laugh so hard for over two hours that you should not go if you tire easily or have a heart condition or take yourself very seriously!

Letter

Stop Line Breakers

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

This letter is to protest the actions of those who broke into the ticket line Tuesday morning at Carmichael Auditorium. Every year when tickets go on sale for a big game, such as the Duke game, the problem of line breakers gets worse, but this year it approached an outrage.

I arrived at the Ticket Office at 6:45 a.m and found that a line had already been formed. (I was told that those at the front of the line had been there since 5 a.m.) As the line began to grow, I noticed that many people were not going to the back of the line, but instead were pushing in at the front.

People who had been waiting in line protested to these 'Carolina Creeps' but in many cases to no avail. One lady reminded a couple that they had broken in line; the Coed replied, "Yes, I know." The situation was somewhat eased by the arrival of several Campus Policemen who began keeping these prople out of the lines.

What kind of student body are we that we have to have policemen to keep students from breaking a ticket line? These line breakers were certainly a minority but they were enough of them to pose a problem. Had Otelia Conner been there, she would surely have rapped them over the head with her umbrella, for they lacked any sense of fair play or courtesy for those who were waiting in line.

This situation is a disgrace to the UNC Student Body and unless something is done it will continue to exist. Therefore, I propose that the Athletic Department or Student Government take positive steps to keep this from happening again.

A Student Government sponsored survey of the fraternity systems at the nation's major universities is currently being conducted in preparation for a possible fraternity workshop to be held here in the spring.

A questionaire has been sent to the Interfraternity Councils of nearly 70 universities which seeks information on these issues:

—Orientation of new students to the fraternity system.

—Adoption of deferred rush and strict silence.

—Scholarship improvement.

—Relations with university faculty and administration.

—Fraternity leaderhip workshops.

The survey is being conducted by Student Government President Assistant and Orientation Chairman Bob Wilson, who suggested the idea.

"Our fraternities are moving more and more toward responsible interest and involvement in the academic community," Wilson said.

"They much assume that direction," Wilson said, "but we need some new approaches and ideas to help them."

He said the proposed leadership program would be similar to the recently instituted residence hall training program and would "provide insight into ways that out fraternity system can improve itself."

He said the results of the survey will be made available to the fraternity systems participating.

Of the half a dozen southern universities in the academically exclusive 42 - members Association of America, the two North Carolina members are UNC and Duke University

Grappling Life 'Soft' With New Mat

SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Spts Writer

In the wrestling room deep with in the bowels of Woollen Gymnasium, sweaty bodies have scrambled around a hair mat ever since 1921.

Wrestling mats, like bubble gum and American automobiles, are not made to last forever. With the passage of each season the mat became harder and more out of date.

About a month ago the hair mat was torn apart amid a deluge of sentimental tears of ancient graduate wrestlers. Its replacement is streamlined and is the finest surface money can buy.

"The new mat is five years over due," wrestling Coach Sam Barnes said. "The Athletic Association appropriated a fabulous sum for improvements, and the CAA and the P.E. people split the cost."

Freshman Coach Grover Wilhoit lounged on the new mat and led his boys through a series of warm up exercises. He stopped for a second and smiled as he smashed his arm down on the black surface.

"The sound's ferocious," Wilhoit said with a good deal of understatement. "The mat's been a real moral booster."

"It's had an effect on our style," Barnes continued. "The boys are throwing with more abondon. Thus we're a more abandoned team."

Wilhoit and his freshmen chuckled.

"I've heard that you can drop an egg from shoulder level and it won't break. I have not seen that done, but we've dropped our wrestlers on it. They haven't broken, and they are as fragile as eggs."

The people in the room roared with delight.

"We used to practice on the old mat all week," Barnes said. "Then we'd move up to the basketball floor for our matches and wrestle on one of the finest mats in the Conference. It was like moving from a 40 ounce bat to a 32 ouncer.

The 1957 national champion basketball team holds the NCAA record for the most games won with 32 victories.

Freshmen wrestling coach Grover Wilhoit tests the thickness of the new mat.

Tar Babies Roll Deaclets 108-49

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

WINSTON-SALEM — Carolina's Tar Babies hit the Memorial Coliseum floor on the dead run last night and race horsed Wake Forest's Demon Deaclets into battered and trounced oblivion while racing to a 108-49 win.

It was Carolina's fifth straight victory and kept it atop the big four standings with a 3-0 record.

The student section behind the players bench was full at the 6 p.m. tap-off. They had come to jeer, but they stayed to cheer as the Babies sped up and down the court, and amazed even the most partisan onlookers with their ball handling, defensive and offensive wizardry.

Rusty Clark, Carolina's towering 6-11 center, received the most warm-up recognition, but went through the motions without a sign of noticing the catcalls. Then when the game started he stretched above the out - manned Deaclets for points and rebounds and soon they were cheering them too.

Rusty finished with 22 points, and what he didn't do, Bill Bunting did. Bunting shot for 17 tallies, again getting most of his points off thread-the-needle passes from guards, Gerald Tuttle and Dick Grubar.

The people at "Baptist Bottom" do not keep any statistics except point totals for the frosh games, for obvious reasons, but if they did, Carolina's front courtmen would have another loud voice in their behalf in the rebounding department. They swept the boards clean at every opportunity and probably came close to blanking Wake Forest there.

Another big man was Joe Brown, who put a fine game performance against Davidson last Monday. Joe drilled fifteen points and was also prominent in rebounding while topping the defensive game for the fourth consecutive time. We counted eleven assists by the 6-3 all-purpose backliner, and there were probably more.

Then there was Gerald Tuttle, hitting double figures for a second straight game with 12, and matching Grubar almost move for move on defense.

Bobby Richardson To Speak Tonight

Bobby Richardson, star second baseman of the New York Yankees, will speak to the UNC chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Loren Young of Atlanta, Southeastern director of the Fellowship, will introduce the speaker and Albert Long will preside over the occasion.

Adult advisors for the chapter here at UNC are Long, Danny Lotz, and Assistant Basketball Coach John Lotz.

The student body and the public are cordially invited.

Lennie Rosenbluth holds the record for most career points at North Carolina with 2045 earned from 1955-1957.

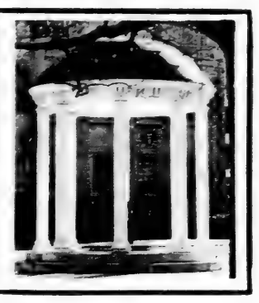
CAROLINA STYLE

with Ed Freakley



Br'er Dook, I's Afa Youz

I came out against the ram yesterday as Carolina's mascot and have been waiting for someone to come up with an idea for a new mascot.

Well, no one came in with any brilliant suggestion so I came up with my own idea.

This is the fellow I like. He would truly be an inspiring mascot.

I don't really know what we should call him. I'd hate to offend anyone.

While on this subject I was wondering why the cheerleaders haven't bothered to have any pep rallies or do a little something extra for the basketball team this season.

The hardcourt Tar Heels have been doing an excellent job so far. It seems we could show some appreciation.

There has been a lot of enthusiasm at games. That's good. But here it is the day before the game with the nation's number one team and no boost for a good ball club. It's a shame. What are cheerleaders for?

Congratulations to the pep band. They have added a lot to the spirit of Carmichael and done more in the way of "go get'um Heels" than any other group.

Great Society Moves Up A Notch

Noticed an interesting picture in the Raleigh Times yesterday. The picture showed 'Him' and five of his daughters.

See, the Great Society is even generous to dogs.

Old East Dormitory Named National Landmark

Old East, the nation's oldest state university building will soon be made North Carolina's newest "National Historic Landmark."

The cornerstone of the historic dorm dates back to Oct. 12, 1793, during George Washington's administration.

The ancient wonder was constructed of hand made bricks and has eight chimneys. Fireplaces used to be the sole source of heat for the Carolina gentlemen of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

The University didn't provide firewood so every student had to gather his own fuel.

Not only was Old East the first state university building but at first it was the University.

The doors of the University opened on January 15 but no students showed.

Hinton James from Pender County was the first student. He arrived on Feb. 12 after walking 150 miles from Wilmington "in the worst weather of the season." It took him two weeks to make the trip.

More students gradually trickled in and by the end of the first semester there were more than 41 people living in Old East.

Many students who either lived in Old East or attended classes there went on to achieve fame.

Thomas Wolfe attended Dr. Edwin Greenlaw's English 21 class there along with Jonathan Daniels, Legette Blythe, and Paul Green.

Originally, Old East was known as the North wing of a building that was never built. Plans were changed and the present South building, started in 1797 and completed in 1814, became the main building.

James Patterson built the building for $5,000.

It has been remodeled twice — once in the mid 1800's and again in the 1920's.

Alexander Jackson Davis, a famous New York architect was called in to remodel the building in the 1800's.

He added the third floor and increased the length of the building. He added the Egyptian north face which characterizes the building.

In 1922 Old East was condemned as unsafe. By 1925 the insides had been rennovated and the building made safe. The portico on the east side was restored.

State Leaders Use WUNC-TV

The red carpet of Swain Hall was rolled out this week as some top state political figures came to WUNC-TV studios to record programs to be broadcast in North Carolina.

Tuesday night Gov. Dan K. Moore and two of his staff were in the studios of Channel 4 to record a discussion of the Governor's State of the State message, which he will air Monday.

Participating in the program with the Governor were his administrative assistant, Charles Dunn and his new press secretary, Jerry Elliott.

Lt. Gov. Robert W. Scott, Speaker of the House H. P. "Pat" Taylor, John Sanders, Director, Institute of Government at UNC-CH, and Frank R. Strong, Professor of Law at UNC-CH participated in an hour-long program on reapportionment, video taped Sunday night.

Monday all three state officials, Moore, Scott, and Taylor, will appear together when the governor addresses the opening of the extra session of the legislature. This will be carried by WUNC-TV.

VARIABLE CLOUDYNESS and turning colder is what the weather man predicts. But the clouds which dramatically silhouetted this tree between Chapel Hill and Durham seem to be hinting about some white flaky stuff.

Committee Named To Pick Chancellor

By BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

President William C. Friday appointed an advisory committee yesterday of seven faculty members to help select a new chancellor to replace Paul F. Sharp, who resigned Dec. 29 to become president of Drake University.

Prof. William S. Wells was named chairman of the committee. Other members are Profs. Kenneth Brinkhous, John N. Couch, Frank W. Klingberg, Wilton S. Mason, John Charles Morrow III and Rollie Tillman Jr.

"We expect to proceed as rapidly as possible with the selection of a nominee to present to the trustees," Friday said.

"The advice of trustees, alumni and students will be obtained before a nomination to the board."

Sharp, chancellor since September, 1964, came here from the presidency of Hiram College in Ohio.

He submitted his resignation to the executive committee of the Consolidated University of North Carolina a week ago. It was to have become effective in July, but the committee changed the date to Feb. 15.

Sharp will take office at Drake University on March 1.

He succeeded William B. Aycock as chancellor. Aycock submitted his resignation in July, 1963, but remained in office until July, 1964. He is now a faculty member in the UNC School of Law.

Friday appointed a 17 member advisory committee in September, 1963 to find a successor to Aycock. The committee first met in October and in June, 1964, Sharp's appointment was approved by the board of trustees.

None of the members of the new advisory committee contacted by the DTH yesterday, would say whether emphasis on finding a nominee would be placed at UNC or out of state. Most of the members contacted said it was too early to make that decision.

President Friday and Prof. Wells were not available for comment.

Friday named Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson acting chancellor last Monday. Sitterson, now vice chancellor of the University, will assume his new duties Feb. 16.

Sitterson has served as Dean of the General College and Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He became vice chancellor last July in an administrative reorganization.

As vice chancellor he has been responsible for academic and health affairs.

Sitterson is a 1931 UNC graduate and a Kenan Professor of History. He said he is "looking forward" to the job of acting chancellor. "I have been close enough to it to know I will like it," he said.

City Wants Fire Boxes

Chapel Hill City Manager Robert Peck said yesterday town and University officials had planned to install fire alarm boxes in all campus buildings but "the plans were bogged down."

Peck said town officials had appropriated funds for their share of the project, but University funds have been delayed.

There are only four fire alarm boxes in the town of Chapel Hill, and there is none on campus.

All campus fire alarms must be called into the fire department by telephone.

Peck said he didn't know whether state and University officials "were arguing about the expense involved or the type of system they would install."

University financial officials couldn't be reached for comment on the matter yesterday.

Peck said the town's part of the expense would be nearly $5,200 to install a new alarm panel in the fire department.

He said the University would bear all expense for the installation of campus fire boxes.

Chapel Hill Fire Chief G. S. Baldwin endorsed the plan to install more boxes.

"Anytime you get more boxes its going to help us," he said.

The closest alarm box is located in North Carolina Memorial Hospital.

November and December set records for having the most fires of any months on record. November had 32 fires while 38 were recorded in the last month of the year.

State Ticket Supply Good

Tickets for the North Carolina-N. C. State game to be played in Carmichael Auditorium Jan. 12 are on sale with over half of the seats yet to be filled.

Business Manager Vernon Crook told the DTH yesterday that there were still plenty of student and date tickets remaining.

It will be the final home game for the Tar Heels before they adjourn for the annual exam break.

Schopler Wins Grant

Dr. John Schopler, a psychologist at North Carolina, has been appointed a senior post-doctoral fellow by the National Science Foundation for one year starting next August.

He will study at the London School of Economics and Political Science in London, England.

The grant covers his salary and traveling expenses for himself and his family.

Trustee To Speak

Victor Bryant, a member of the executive committee of the board of trustees of North Carolina will address the Chapel Hill Chapter of the American Association of University Professors on Jan. 10 at 8 p.m. in the lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

His speech will be on academic responsiblity.

Christmas Present

Griffith House of Morrison College gave $103.50 to the Christmas House run by the Junior Service League before Christmas.

The Christmas House used the money to buy gifts for needy Chapel Hill children.

Musicians To Meet

The Southeastern chapter of the American Musicological Society will meet tonight in the Choral Room of Hill Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Walter Westafer from Elon College will present a paper on the music of John Cage.

Weather Worsens Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — A drenching rain heightened the city's six-day transit crisis yesterday, and sodden millions buffeted about in the longest, roughest rush hour in its history. Freezing weather was forcast to add to their woes.

Republican Mayor John V. Lindsay reported from city hall and exhorted New Yorkers, demoralized, weary of an all-out subway and bus strike:

"We must sweat it out. I ask you that . . . you keep calm, keep your nerve."

Peace talks between the striking AFL-CIO Transport Workers Union and the Transit Authority moved almost as sluggishly as traffic in the streets during the worst day of the monumental tieup. The talks at least were continuing, however.

Motorists in vast numbers took to the highways as early as 5 a.m. in a vain effort to beat a traffic crush that continued until noon—only to resume again in the opposite direction later in the afternoon.

The rain stalled many cars, and vehicles backed up for miles at Manhattan's bridges and tunnels.

Traffic Commissioner Henry Barnes blamed the combination of the city's weather and its transit strike for "the longest rush hour it ever had."

Commuter rail traffic was somewhat smoother but very heavy, as hundreds of thousands waited in the rain to board crowded trains. A spokesman for the Long Island rail road said yesterday:

"We're moving a lot more people than we did Wednesday, or even Tuesday . . .it looks like World War II when gasoline rationing forced people to use the railroads."

The strike of 34,400 employes of city-owned bus and subway lines began at 5 a.m. New Year's Day, cutting off transit facilities normally used by five million passengers a day. The first citywide transit tieup ever to hit New York was estimated by business sources to be causing an economic loss of $100 million per day.

Mayor Lindsay spent more than 17 hours Wednesday and last night with his three-man mediation panel trying to work out a strike settlement. Afterward he reported:

"There has been some movement, nevertheless the gap remains wide between them. New offers have been made."

Lindsay finally broke away from the bargaining table, got three hours sleep and showed up at City Hall in the morning to dispose of piled up municipal problems. He kept in touch by phone with the continuing peace talks.

During the bargaining session, the Transit Authority laid on the table a new money offer—but its size was not revealed. There had been an $187 million gap between the union demand and Transit Authority offer for a two-year contract.

Union Attorney Ascher Schwartz sounded what might be construed as a note of mild optimism, declaring:

"The discussions are proceeding constructively and quite actively."

Joe Harris Likes To Travel Cheap

If you're tired of high-priced travel and still want to see the country you can probably pick up a few tips from Joe Harris.

Joe is a UNC graduate student in philosophy who also teaches part-time at N. C. College in Durham.

The West Virginia native has been hitch-hiking "longer than he can remember." He once hitch-hiked from West Virginia University to his sister's home in New York City with fourteen cents in his pocket.

His first hitch-hiking "tour" outside the United States was a 1957 trip from WVU to Cuba which cost him $23.50.

Joe hitch-hiked to Key West and accompanied a car for a used car salesman for his round-trip passage from Key West to Havana.

He met an American engineer on the Cuban freighter and spent his first night in Cuba at the engineer's home on Varadero Beach, Batista's summer hang-out.

The next night Joe persuaded a Havana taxi driver to give him an hour tour that night, an hour tour the next morning and drive him to the docks for two dollars.

The next day Joe was back at West Virginia University.

After graduating from WVU Joe decided to hitch-hike to his brother's home in Colorado.

The first night on the road Joe traveled all night. The next day he caught a ride with a serviceman who took him to Spokane, Wash. He and the serviceman shared expenses on groceries.

Joe spent his third night on the road with a couple who lived near the Idaho-Canada border.

The next day Joe caught a ride with a RCAF student pilot who carried him the RCAF Base at Red Deer, Alberta and found him lodging for the night. The student pilot also gave him breakfast the next morning and as many oranges as he could carry in his "travel bag."

Joe's "travel bag" was a typewriter case containing two changes of clothing.

On the fifth night Joe slept on two chairs in a hotel lobby near Edmonton, Alberta.

Joe spent the sixth night with a couple of Oregon students at a truck stop. He traded them oranges for beef stew and spent the next night at the Catholic Mary House in Whitehorse.

He was stranded in Whitehorse for 24 hours. For the first time, he got discouraged.

ONE AND A HALF MILLION envelopes is a lot of stuff. That's how many Heart Fund volunteers from Maverick House have stuffed since Oct. 1. When they started, the Fund was five weeks behind, but with Craige's help, mailing should be caught up by next week.

Every week 8-12 boys work for two hours, often going two or three times. Their primary job is envelope stuffing, but they also sort pamphlets and pack boxes for shipment. This center is the nucleus for the Heart Fund in North Carolina. — DTH Photo By Ernest Robl.

Yankees, Stay Home

An inordinate amount of fuss is being stirred by Student Government's desire to have a lawyer for its very own.

The idea is not a new one, but it has been Student Body President Paul Dickson's baby this year. The Dec. 4 DTH carried a letter from Dickson that chided Student Legislature for being "dilatory" in approving funds for a retainer. The bill has since been passed but the money is still unappropriated.

The University administration has reacted with surprising vocalism — even to the point of sending the matter off to the state attorney general for a ruling.

In a letter to Dickson, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey wrote of past good relations between Student Government and the university administration, including "face-to-face" discussion of problems.

"The employment of an attorney by any party in such discussions will seriously jeopardize the closeness of these relationships," Cathey said.

That seems to be a description of the situation at its worst. The administration is apparently not so much opposed to SG's use of a lawyer as it is afraid of the misuse of legal counsel.

Certainly there can be no objection to hiring a lawyer in a case like that involving the Discount Commission. If the fraternities and sororities want to join together in buying fuel oil at a reduced bulk rate, no one wants to hinder them. A contract with an oil company would be required but the president of a fraternity house would hardly be in a position to negotiate it.

So, get a lawyer.

J. A. Williams, University attorney, is available for advice. So is the state attorney general. If both should be too busy to handle the matter, the attorney general's office provides substitute legal counsel. Student Government, as an organization within a state agency, ought to qualify for that service.

Administrative misgivings arise at the thought of a president having legal aid at his beck and call under a retainer. It's like having a car with a powerful motor. Whether you need to or not, you want to test it occasionally just to make sure it will perform.

A Student Government president who for one reason or another disliked the administration could create a legal problem a day if he put his mind and his lawyer to it.

The likelihood of such an occurence is impossible to estimate because it depends on the personality of whoever might hold the presidency. The mere fact, however, that it is a possibility is enough to justify opposition to the hiring of a permanent Student Government lawyer.

If the president or any of his committees require legal services — and legitimate needs will arise — we suggest they try the available free sources first (the University lawyer and the attorney general's office). If such an approach is not feasible because of scheduling problems or conflicts of interest, hire a lawyer for that specific case.

The president has at his disposal a $300 discretionary fund. Surely he could find enough there to pay a contract fee (the major use of a lawyer being cited). If that is inadequate, Student Legislature makes special appropriations for worthwhile projects regularly. It is not a bad idea to demonstrate the necessity of all legal expenses by subjecting them first to the scrutiny of the entire legislature.

Transit Strike Must Be Ended Soon

Something must be done about the strike, and done soon. Anyone who has been in New York knows how congested traffic can become under the best of circumstances. A prolonged grounding of the buses and subways could easily paralyze the metropolis.

As the New York transit strike continues, its staggering impace is becoming clearer. Losses in working time and business revenues have been estimated at over $100 million a day. Mayor John Lindsay, considered by many to be the white hope of the Republican party, is getting a real baptism of fire.

On Monday, many New Yorkers heeded Lindsay's plea to stay home; and the early morning traffic problem was not as severe has had been feared. As time goes on, though, these people will have to return to work if the city is not to come to a grinding halt. The possibility of the worst traffic jam in history is still present.

So far, the Transit Workers Union has shown little inclination to come to terms. Union President Michael Quill is not bluffing when he says he will rot in jail before yielding to what he considers unfavorable terms. He gave no sign of backing down when he was sentenced to jail for defying a state court injunction to end the strike.

Quill's illness can only have the effect of strengthening the workers' determination to hold out for their terms. If Quill dies, he will be a martyr in their eyes. The cry to "carry on the fight for the rights that Mike Quill died for" will be almost irresistible. If the tough little Irishman lives, his determination — and influence — will be undiminshed.

Apparently the union feels it can hold out longer than the city can, and it is probably right. With a strike fund and the knowledge that no one will be hired to replace them, the workers can stay off the job for a fairly long period of time without risking starvation. The New York newspaper strike of a few years ago lasted over three months.

Obviously, New York cannot afford a transit strike of such a duration. In fact, every day that the strike continues, the city suffers damage that will take a long time to repair. If the strike goes on for very long, some of the damage will be irreparable.

Businesses are being hit hard by the absence of workers, and the workers will suffer from loss of salary. Stores are comparatively empty. It is questionable how long New York's economy can stand such a battering.

How can the strike be ended? The Transit Authority and Mayor Lindsay have failed in their attempts to start the subways and buses rolling again. A stronger power, the Federal government, may be needed.

Presumably, President Johnson is concerned about the transit strike; but as yet he has done nothing about it. Now that the steel crisis is apparently settled, perhaps the President will be able to do something to halt the strike.

Johnson lost no time in condemning Bethlehem Steel for raising steel prices. He should lose none in condeming the strike. If the price increase was inflationary, the union demands certainly are, too. The only way the Transit Authority could meet the extreme demands of the union is to raise subway and bus fares, thus giving the wage - price spital and the cost of living another boost skyward.

The moral force of the President should be used at once to get the union to adopt a more reasonable position. If this does not work, something more concrete must be done. Johnson should give serious consideration to invoking the Taft - Hartley Law or even the Sherman Anti - Trust Act to force the transit workers back to work.

The President might even consider proposing legislation to insure that such a paralyzing strike does not happen again. If small businesses that are only indirectly connected with interstate commerce are subject to Federal regulation, then a union which can tie up business — much of it interstate — in the nation's largest city should be liable to regulation, too.

No one wants to see the transit workers toiling for starvation wages. However, just as management abused labor in the days when labor was unorganized and weak, so labor now has the power to abuse both management and, in this case, the public. The Federal government took action to end the abuses of big business. It should not be reluctant to act against the abuses of big labor.

South Looks Different From Negro World

Editor's note: Richard King, a native of Chattanooga, Tenn., graduated from UNC in 1963. He then spent a year on a Fulbright Scholarship at Universitaet Goettingen, West Germany. Last year he was a Danforth Fellow and took his M.A. in American Studies at Yale University. During the summer he taught at a Negro college in Jackson, Tenn. and is now a member of the Department of History at another Negro institution, Stillman College, in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

BY RICHARD KING

You are born and grow up in the South and are early in life aware of Negroes and the "Race Question." It bothers you as you go through the Negro section of your home town. What are they like? How do they live? The same old questions asked so often by so many whites that they have become cliches — yet still, at times, they are real.

You go away to school and even by your last year participate in civil rights demonstrations - marches, picketing and the like. You get acquainted with a few Negroes but they are in your world, not you in theirs. You go home for vacations and talk with old friends, friends of your parents, former school teachers and religious leaders.

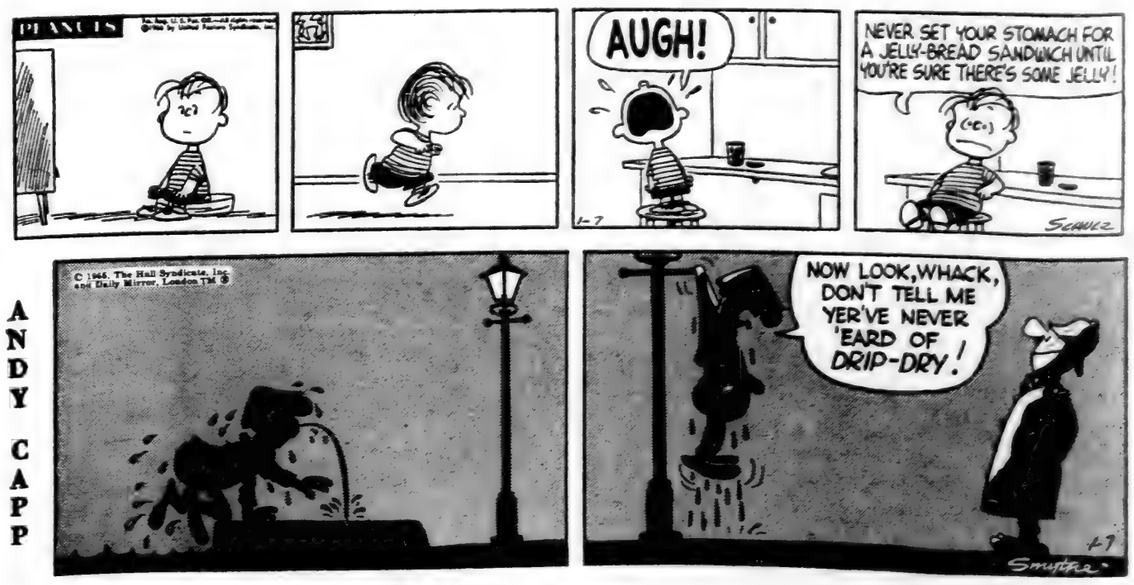
You begin to realize that it has required a lot of evasiveness and conscience - dodging for them to hold their positions imparting to you all the while certain values which would give the lie to the very society you and they live in. Yet you believed them because they, although weak and imperfect, were the ones to whom you looked for guidance.

You leave the South for a couple of years. Then you decide to return as a teacher at a Negro college in the heart of Dixie. You find that you are in their world now, not the old familiar one. No, it isn't particularly bizarre or strange, at least any more so than any other self - contained society is.

But suddenly you realize that the "Others" are now those from whom you received tutelage and instruction. The other slightly puzzling world is now the white one. You have to weigh your words when talking with a local white. Do I mention that I'm teaching at the Negro college in town? Will my check be cashed?

You soon learn to feel a strange wariness and are always on your guard. Now the White section of town and the white shopkeepers become question marks. Who would back you up?

Thus a reversal of positions; a neat exchange of vantage points and attitudes. It is as if suddenly you were on the other side of the looking glass, peering back into the world from which you recently came How strange and puzzling and sometimes threatening the old world is now. The tables are turned and the old familiar South has been slightly skewed and knocked out of alighment. It just doesn't look the same



Letters From The Readers

UNC Needs New Coach

Editor, the Daily Tar Heel:

I am a 1965 graduate from UNC. At present, I am a Peace Corps Volunteer in Madhya Pradesh, India. In my late arriving Tar Heels (10,000 miles is a long distance for anything to travel), I have been very interested in the pre - Christmas campaign to have football re - examined with the hope of some long overdue improvements.

Let me assure the reader that my football news has been gained through Tar Heels mailed to me by my parents, and through letters from friends now at the Hill. On blessed occasions, when conditions permitted, I was able to gain scores and information by U. S. Armed Forces Short Wave Radio Service.

I want to let the reader realize that I have followed the 'Heels as loyally and actively as 10,000 miles would permit.

First, I wish to establish my position: I am definitely and unreservedly in favor of removing Mr. Hickey. While at Carolina as an undergraduate, I was time and time again assured that Coach Hickey was a wonderful man and a true gentleman. That's fine. I can't argue with his psychological and social maturity.

But, in my humble opinion as a lover of football and as a fanatical Tar Heel supporter, he is a flunky when it comes to coaching. . . .

The material recruited at UNC for football is as good as any in the country. We play some of the toughest opponents in the nation: this past season saw the 'Heels face at least five teams (Michigan, O.S.U., Dook; Notre Dame; and Georgia) who were at one time or another during the season regarded as national powers.

With all of our football talent, why can not we beat Wake Forest and, of all people, those "powerhouses" from Charlottesville? I think it is because Mr. Hickey lacks that intangible ability to inspire.

We have always seemed to rise to the occassion at least once or twice during the season — not counting the Dook games: both Murray and Hickey could not even show up for that game and both teams would do a fairly good job.

Why can't we rise to the occasion nine or ten times during a season? Other teams around the nation seem to be able to consistently, but we seem unable to consistently, and I'm convinced that those other teams are no better than the 'Heels— material wise.

There's no excuse for UNC being unable — or unwilling — to field a winning football squad. If the Athletic Department is so diligent in recruiting, and so set upon scheduling such top - flight competition, then why in the name of Charlie Justice can't the powers that be hire a coach equal to the job?!. . .

I don't think it's the lack of money I think it's the unwillingness to spend the sufficient amount. If we insist on rubbing elbows with the big leagues, let's not dilly - daily around. Let's make the 'Heels a football team of all the time and not just some of the time. . . .

Viet Girl Thanks GI's

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The following letter was sent by a South Vietnamese high school student to an American lieutenant fighting in Viet Nam. Since the feelings expressed are contrary to the opinion of many Americans that the South Vietnamese do not appreciate what Americans are doing, I feel this letter will prove to be of interest.

Sincerely,

Dear Sir,

This is the first time I write to you. I am so pleased to express here my deep affection to all the American soldiers and especially to you my dear brother.

As you know, a new year and holy Christmas day are going to come back to us. I as well as all Vietnamese students are going to welcome a happy new year, and I cannot help thinking to you, one of the most courageous American soldiers.

Dear brother, how can you imagine my respect and my feeling to you. Indeed it is due to you that we can live in peace. It is your extraordinary act of bravery that has protected us out of fierce hands of communists.

Dear Brother! It seems that there is not enough words to express my sincere gratitude and deep veneration to you.

Now what can I speak to you my best wishes for your Christmas and your happy new year. I do hope you to be in good health and you would have many glorious feats of arms next year.

Sincerely yours,

She will be accompanied by Vaughn Thomas on the piano.

The program will include works by Purcell, Handel, Schumann, Puccini, Menotti, and three spirituals.

UNC, Duke Get $200,000 Ford Foundation Grants

DURHAM (AP)—Duke University and UNC have received Ford Foundation grants of $200,000 each to continue their cooperative program in the humanities through the 1967-68 academic year.

Continuation of support of the program for another three years was announced Thursday. The program was initiated by an $800,000 Ford grant in 1963.

Its aim is to stimulate humanistic scholarship and teaching of the humanities in liberal arts colleges of this area. It includes a series of one-year humanities fellowships under which faculty members of participating colleges study at Durham and Chapel Hill.

The program also includes visiting professorships for eminent scholars; a summer insitute in medieval and renaissance studies; summer faculty research fellowships; and an annual symposium in the humanities.

Prof. James L. Godfrey, UNC history teacher is chairman of the Duke-UNC program.

Frosh, Imps Tangle

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Where in all basketballdom can you shoot for 61 per cent and be only the fourth leading percentage man on your team?

Right here at UNC, and that's the position Rusty Clark, the 6-11 frosh pivotman, has gotten himself into. He's hitting at that lofty mark but still must take a fourth row seat to Joe Brown (63.9), Jim Bostick (62.1) and Bill Bunting (61.3). Dick Grubar is breathing right down the big guy's neck at 56.5, on a team which is averaging 56.7 per cent and 93.6 points per game.

They will throw those astronomical marks at Duke's Blue Imps tonight when the 1-2 teams in the Big Four jump it up at 8 p.m. in Carmichael Auditorium. UNC (5-0) is 2-0 and Duke (5-2) is 2-1 in Big Four play. Actually, Rusty could ge the last laugh on his mates by showing off his team-leading scoring average of 19.8 but "nothing doing" there.

This is a team of outstanding first year men who has knocked off five straight opponents with well-integrated team play, and nobody's about to project one above the other.

They will scrimmage against a team tonight which they beat by 89-69 early in December.

"Forked Again"

Mat Men Hit State

Perfection meets perfection in the 167-pound weight class this afternoon at 3:30 in Carmichael Auditorium as the UNC wrestling team of Coach Sam Barnes tangles with the Wolfpack of N. C. State.

Both Jay Jacobson of UNC and Bob Brawley of N. C. State are unbeaten this season in the 167-pound class. Brawley is regarded as one of State's finest wrestlers in history. Jacobson is Carolina's leading scorer with 19 points in five matches.

"This one has everyone talking," commented Barnes whose club has won four of five matches this season. "Jacobson actually weighs only 160, but he is fast and can think. Brawley is probably the stronger and has great moves. It should be one of the most exciting matches in some time.

The Tar Heels, in winning four of their first five matches, have beaten Pfeiffer, St. Andrews, Washington & Lee, and Davidson. The lone loss came in the ACC opener with Virginia. "We just didn't work that night," said Barnes.

In addition ot Jacobson, the Tar Heels have three other unbeaten performers. Sporting perfect marks are Bob Blair in the 130-pound class, Alan Marshall in the 160-pound class, and Fred Priester in the 177-pound class.

Gene Rector

DTH Sports Editor

Tar Heel fans have a chance to see one of the finest freshmen basketball teams in UNC history tonight. The Duke frosh are the opposition for the eight o'clock tap-off in Carmichael Auditorium.

That frosh team is unbeaten after five games including an earlier 89-69 victory over this same Duke club.

But something is lacking at each freshmen game in Carmichael. Some of the finest basketball talent seen here in years have to play before empty stands.

Wednesday evening's game with the Davidson frosh was no exception. Only in the latter stages of the freshmen game—minutes before the start of the varsity encounter with Maryland — were the stands comfortably filled with Tar Heel fans.

It is quite an injustice to these performers who will certainly pack them in as varsity stand-outs.

"The Duke game is the 'big one' for the freshmen, too," said Coach Larry Brown. "The boys certainly appreciate support from the fans. It makes quite a difference in the outcome, believe me."

Two UNC football assistants are being considered for head coaching jobs.

Bob Thalman, Tar Heel defensive coach and former head coach at Hampden-Sydney, is being considered for the head coaching job at The Citadel. He is reported to be among the top three candidates for the post.

Bobby Lewis is far out front in the ACC scoring race. Lewis is averaging 31.8 points per game — well ahead of Paul Long of Wake Forest in second place with a 26.4 average.

Sophomore Larry Miller is in fifth place. His 23.4 average places him just behind the 23.8 average of Virginia's Jim Connelly.

Utah coach Jack Gardner, who saw his Redskins lose to the Tar Heels in Raleigh over the holidays, claims Brigham Young University must be one of the tallest teams in college basektball this season. "They have four boys who are 6-11," he said.

Former Prof Claims UNC 'Indoctrinates'

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

A UNC professor, once hired by an Alabama governor to study the "race problem," claims students here must submit to "racial indoctrination."

Dr. W. C. George, former head of the Department of Anatomy here, says UNC "has gone into the propaganda business.

"It is using textbooks that have no scientific basis of truth."

George, whose writings are widely quoted by segregationists, singled out Politics US for special criticism.

The book, which came under fire during the Speaker Ban hearings, is written by UNC professors Andrew Scott and Earle Wallace and is used in Political Science 41 classes.

George said freshmen talking Modern Civilization have been "indoctrinated."

He complained that Contemporary Social Problems, used in Sociology 52, should not say that racists consider one race "superior."

"You can't scientifically define superiority," George said. "I cannot say that an oyster is inferior to man without specifying what 'superior' means.

"My objection to what goes on in this university is that only those facts are brought to light that support integration," he declared.

He accused the Carolina Forum of largely ignoring "conservative views on race. Seldom, if ever, is a man invited here to speak who really gives thoughtful opposition to integration."

George suggested that DTH reporters are "brain-washed."

The histology specialist said integrationist views had "destroyed our honor system."

He said he had heard that "more students are cheating nowadays."

George insisted that allowing Negroes to live with whites in dormitories might lead to "interbreeding."

The University last year began assigning male students to housing without regard to race.

Asked if he opposed the Speaker Ban in its original form, George replied: "That's yellow journalism."

George Likes Local Citizen's Council Head

Dr. W. C. George, the segregationist professor who says you're being indoctrinated in your classes, is a 77-year-old man with a stooped posture and a habit of nervously scratching his balding head.

He insists he is not connected with the Ku Klux Klan or similar organizations, though he "admires" a leader of the Durham County Citizens' Council.

George claims he has "many Negro friends. I like many of them better than some white people."

The professor spoke very slowly during a recent interview, for he feels he is frequently misquoted by the press.

Sometimes, however, an occasional "nigger" slipped through.

George generally employed the word to describe Negroes whose actions he dislikes.

He said the Negroes themselves use "nigger" at times.

"Most of them do not favor the civil rights agitators," he

SOPHOMORE LARRY MILLER and Bob Lewis will lead the Tar Heels against Duke today at 2 p.m. in Carmichael Auditorium before a capacity crowd of 8,500. Lewis provides the Carolina scoring punch and Miller keeps the boards clean along with usual outstanding scoring performance.

Willing, Able Tar Heels Set For Number One — Duke

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

Today's Duke - Carolina encounter is the dream game of the year for Carmichael Auditorium. But you can bet none of the sell-out crowd of 8,500 will be sleeping when the 2 p.m. tap-off rolls around.

The Duke Blue Devils, ranked number one in the nation, have everything to lose against a Tar Heel club willing and capable to turn the trick.

Everything points to an offensive onslaught by both clubs. Both teams are averaging over 85 points per game. The Blue Devils lead the offensive show in the ACC averaging 89.9 points per game.

Duke has hit the century mark three times this season, with their top output being the 112 points scored against Virginia Tech in the opener.

The Tar Heels have reached 100 points twice this season including a school record of 127 points against Richmond.

Of course Bob Lewis and Larry Miller have been the big guns in leading the Tar Heels to nine victories in 12 games. Lewis, who has flirted with the national scoring lead throughout the year, leads the Tar Heels in scoring with a 31.3 average—second best in the nation.

Larry Miller, one of the finest sophomores in years, places second with a 23.3 average.

Tom Gauntlett (8.8), Bob Bennett (8.2), and John Yokley (6.8) round out the Tar Heel starting five.

Duke's top scorers are Jack Martin and Bob Verga, who have been running a neck-and-neck race for the point lead all season. Martin is averaging 19.9 while Verga is close as possible at 19.8.

Mike Lewis at 13.6 and Steve Vacendak at 12.1 are other Blue Devils in double figures. Bob Reidy, averaging 9.4, rounds out the Duke starting unit.

The encounter should clear some of the traffic for the basketball lead in the ACC. Both Duke and UNC, with identical conference marks of 2-1, are tied for the top spot with South Carolina and N. C. State.

The Blue Devils hold the edge in the over-all department — winning ten of their 11 games. Duke victories include a double-header sweep of defending national champ UCLA and a singleton over strong Michigan.

The Tar Heels on the other hand can claim victories over Ohio State, Utah, Florida, and Florida State in their 9-3 record.

Duke lost to South Carolina for their only setback. UNC fell to Clemson, Vanderbilt, and West Virginia. The Tar Heels have yet to lose in spacious new Carmichael Auditorium in four games.

UNC Coach Dean Smith regards the game as an "excellent opportunity for his club."

"We are really looking forward to the game," he said. 'We consider it quite a compliment to play the number one team in the nation.

"Duke has had some fine teams in recent years, but this is the first time they have been ranked so highly.

"They will have three boys — Jack Marin, Steve Vacendak, and Bob Verga — who are potential All-Americans," he continued. "Usually when a club is ranked as high as Duke, at least one from the team will receive that honor."

"Board strentth is the Duke strong point in a year when that seems to be our weakest area," said Smith. "Hustle and determination will have to pay off."

Six Page Tar Heel Passes Legislature

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Students will find a six-page edition of the Daily Tar Heel under their door every day of its publication next semester.

Nearly $10,000 in Student Government funds was appropriated by Student Legislature Thursday night for the DTH expansion, the first major change in the paper's size in 37 years.

Part of the funds will be used to hire five additional full-time staff members, who will increase coverage of campus news and sports activities.

The appropriation bill, written and introduced by Hugh Blackwell (SP) after consultation with the DTH staff, passed SL without objection in a voice vote.

DTH Editor Ernie McCrary hailed the bill yesterday as "a progressive and constructive program which will allow the DTH to serve the student body better.

"Legislature gave us the money," he said, "and now its up to us to prove it won't be wasted.

"Only students who have worked for the Tar Heel can appreciate how much more work this will involve," he said, "and I thank my staff for its willingness to take on the job."

"There is a definite need for additional news space in the paper," Blackwell told the body.

"Advertising takes priority over news space in the Tar Heel because ads constitute half the funds for the DTH budget," he said.

"The only time the DTH publishes a six-page paper now," Blackwell said, "is when there is need for additional space for advertising."

He told the legislature that the appropriation would provide for a six-page paper next semester only, and that the expanded publication would be undergoing a trial period.

Terming passage of the bill "a wise step on the part of Student Government," Blackwell warned legislators to disregard criticism of the DTH which was based on individual tastes.

Blackwell was questioned by several legislators about the bill's financing, but debate was cut short after Don Carson (IND) successfully moved to come immediately to a vote on the issue.

Steve Hockfield (SP) rose after the bill's passage to criticize the practice of cutting-off debate on an important issue before some members of the body had all their questions answered.

"This appropriation comprises roughly one eighth of the current General Surplus of student funds," Hockfield said. "I think we could take some more time out to discuss it."

Another bill appropriating $3,000 to the UNC Men's Glee Club for a trip to Europe was passed without objection.

The bill, introduced by Miriam Dorsey (SP), was cut by nearly $2,000 in the SL Finance Committee.

Committee members discovered other funds appropriated previously to the club which would help cover costs of the trip, according to Miss Dorsey.

A bill transferring previously appropriated funds to the Carolina Forum's travel account, was defeated after Blackwell objected to its immediate consideration.

Blackwell urged that all important bills be sent through committee before their consideration on the SL floor.

An appropriation bill for the Association for Economics and Business Adminitration was also passed.

SL Speaker Pro Tem and Judicial Committee Chairman Jim Little (SP) announced that he would resign from his SL offices.

He is expected to submit his formal resignation from legislature at the next session.

The three-year SL veteran cited other pressing obligations as his reason for resigning.

Little recently assumed the chairmanship of the Student Party.

Student Leaders Attack Book Ex.

Fourteen members of the Visiting Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees heard proposals by Student Government officials yesterday for the establishment of a joint student-faculty-administration committee to govern the policies of the Book Exchange.

A nine-page report attacking current Book Exchange policies and proposing the new committee was presented to the group of trustees by a six-man student delegation headed by Student Body President Paul Dickson.

The report attacked the high price of books at the exchange, which is operated by the University under direction of a business manager.

The report said many students bought books from retail stores in Durham to avoid high prices at the exchange.

Book resale policies of the exchange were also attacked.

"The student consensus in this area is that in some cases students are not paid enough for used books sold to the Book Exchange," it reads in part.

The report cited complaints by students and faculty over the services offered at the exchange.

"Ordering procedures in the campus stores are not effective and are not adequately publicized," the report reads.

It also attacked a shortage of standard textbooks.

The report, prepared by members of the Cooperative Committee of Student Government, criticied University administrators who allegedly withheld information about the exchange's operation.

"This resistance mainly took the form of an unwillingness on the part of administrative officers to provide specific requested information and to discuss problems in the campus stores system."

Committee Chairman Mike Shoaf read the report to the Trustees, and cited results of a student opinion poll which bore out the committee's charges.

The poll showed that 89 per cent of the students questioned supported the ideas of a student operated store.

Does Anyone Want A Pretty Button?

By GLENN MAYS
Special to the DTH

Two University of North Carolina freshmen are benefiting financially from an idea they picked up a year ago while they were attending prep school.

John Blair and John Callan have been selling "Go To Hell Dook" buttons for about a week and over a third of their supply has already been sold.

Blair, of Pittsboro, and Callan of Manhasset, Long Island, were attending Choate Academy in Wallingford, Conn., when the idea occurred.

"Beat Dearfield" buttons were made there for Choate's big rival game, Callan said.

"It stirred up a lot of spirit there and the press club made some money too," Callan added.

Blair and Callan had planned to sell the buttons for the Duke-Carolina football game but they were unable to get them made in time so they decided to get them for the Duke - Carolina basketball game.

"We've only been trying to sell them for about a week," Blair said, "and that was just in our spare time." Late Friday afternoon, the two had sold nearly 400 of the 1,000 buttons at 50 cents each.

"We wanted to make some spending money and build school spirit for the game at the same time," Callan said. And the idea is apparently working.

Blair and Callan have used their sales pitch on a "lot" of students. They even sold one to a Duke student because "he thought the buttons were pretty funny," Blair said.

The two freshmen said they plan for plenty of sales today before game time. But if all of the buttons aren't sold, they plan to sell them for he next Duke - Carolina game.

"We don't have any other business ventures in mind right now," Callan said, "but we'll probably think of one before too long. We have done pretty well with this one, so why not?"

Sitterson Wants To Keep Carolina's Standards High

By BRYANT WILLIAMS
Special To The DTH

"We must not and will not loose our position as an academic leader," said Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, now vice chancellor of the University.

Sitterson was recently named acting chancellor effective upon Chancellor Paul F. Sharp's resignation Feb. 16. "Throughout history UNC has stood for the highest intellectual achievement. As long as I have anything to do with it, the quality of education at Carolina will not go down," Sitterson said.

He believes the main factor in maintaining high standards is "regulation of our growth so we can maintain a superior faculty. For instance, last year we added 1100 new students — roughly the enrollment of Davidson College. In effect we had to hire a faculty as large as theirs in one year, but we did it and we did it well."

The Kenan Professor of history has refused to quit teaching regardless of the administrative responsibilities." I've met many students through teaching and I'm looking forward to knowing more this spring. I love teaching."

Asked the reason for the heavy rate in administrative changeovers in the Consolidated University Sitterson said "the University lives in a goldfish bowl. Because a public institution is subject to the entire community, adverse publicity such as the Speaker Ban can put unimaginable pressures on administrators. This could be remedied partly through greater public understanding and support."

The 1931 UNC graduate commented on the changes he's seen in the University:

"The faculty has improved tremendously. A professor's position is more desirable than before.

"Student population is increasing at a fantastic rate. It's our job to integrate new students into the academic community so they will become better students. Students today seem to question things a great deal more than before. This is good, but it aggravates some problems," he said.

"The administration must be particular in its choice of people. We are handicapped because there is not an available supply of able leaders who want to take an administrative position. There are administrative positions all over the United States which are unfilled."

Sitterson wants to see "more and better facilities for sports because they are such an important part of life. The sports program has improved, especially in the intramural program. UNC was a pioneer in intramurals. I like to see us win . . . we should play with the goal of winning, but we cannot always expect to win."

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

You're A Sport, Miss Shaffer

Arrived in the newsroom this afternoon to find a letter from one Miss Windborne Shaffer who was a bit distraught over criticism of cheerleaders in yesterday's column. Miss Shaffer is a cheerleader.

She writes that she overheard a young man in "Blue Heaven" (Bob Quincy's, sports information director, name for Carmichael Auditorium) Tuesday saying that he wished people would quit worrying about the Duke game and worry about Wake Forest.

"You have to take each game as it comes or you'll start losing the easy ones," Miss Shaffer writes.

Well to tell you the truth, I'm not real worried about the Duke game. Those Tar Heels are going out on that floor today and play basketball the best way they know how, and that's pretty good.

You, Miss Shaffer, said take one game at a time. Well Carolina Style didn't say anything about the Duke game until yesterday. The Wake game was Wednesday night, so I suppose we are taking them one at a time as you suggest.

You say the cheerleaders went to Wake and yelled their "hearts out for the Tar Heels." Wonderful.

But now I lose your line of thought. You say, "We've had pep rallies before with a total of 50 people. Don't you think the team would feel kinda bad if we asked them to come to a pep rally when no one else comes."

Why, yes, Miss Shaffer, I do think they would feel bad.

However, you are forgetting a couple of things. The 50 people you talk about turning out for a pep rallie—wasn't that during the football season? As I remember, it was a very cold night and an equally cold season.

You haven't tried having a pep rally for the basketball team. They are winning. And besides, isn't it your job as a cheerleader to instill spirit in the students and get them to turn out for such events? You might at least give it a try.

"Maybe you can mention in your column today that one player said he wished the crowd would yell all the time today, even when Dook has the ball. We want noise the whole game," Miss Shaffer says.

I think we can be reasonably assured that there will be plenty of noise down in "Blue Heaven" tomorrow.

You're a good sport Miss Shaffer. Tell you what, I'll give you Duke and eight points.

Committee To Start Setting Standards

The advisory committee to recommend a replacement for Chancellor Paul F. Sharp will hold its first meeting this morning at 9:30 President William C. Friday said yesterday.

"The committee will develop its own criterion," Friday said. "I have asked them to meet as often as possible so we can begin screening candidates. We want to proceed as rapidly as sound reason permits in selecting a nominee."

Friday would not comment on whether emphasis on finding a replacement would be placed at UNC or out of state.

"My comment might influence the committee," he said. "I've been through this process about seven times. . .an independent group works best."

Friday said his new advisory committee was selected from representative segments of the University. "Part of the committee selections involve areas not represented before."

He hopes a replacement can be found by the end of the school year.

Aycock submitted his resignation in July, 1963. A successor was not approved by the board of trustees until June, 1964.

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson has been named acting chancellor by President Friday. He will take office on Feb. 16.

Press Club To Meet

Henry Belk, editor of the Goldsboro News-Argus, will address the North Carolina Press Club on Jan. 10 at 7:30 in the lounge of Howell Hall.

His topic will be "A Study of 100 Years of Newspapering in North Carolina."

SG Taps Kirk, Long

Mary Susan Kirk and Bill Long have been named Women's and Men's Orientation Coordinators by Student Government.

Both appointments are subject to the approval of Student Legislature.

Freshman Newspaper

Freshman class president Ben White said The Sixty-Niner, a monthly newspaper, for Freshmen, was established to "build class unification, recognition and keep the University informed of freshman activities."

The tabloid size newspaper first appeared before Christmas vacation. It was four pages in length and financed by class funds.

Subsequent issues will be eight pages and financed by advertising.

Publishing cost for an eight page paper will be $176 for 3,000 copies which will be distributed to class members in their dorms.

The staff is composed of Scott Goodfellow, editor, Tom Craver, sports editor, Chuck Banner, editorial editor, and Tom Carroll business manager.

Planetarium Program

"Zodiac," a new program at Morehead Planetarium will open Tues. Jan. 11 at 8:30 p.m.

Programs for public attendance are scheduled every evening at 8:30; on Saturdays at 11, 1, 3, 4, and 8:30; and on Sundays at 2, 3, 4, and 8:30.

Newscaster Quits WRAL 'Voluntarily'

Peter B. Young, WRAL-TV newscaster who spoke here recently on the Ku Klux Klan, has left his job.

Bill Armstrong, WRAL-TV news director, said Young quit "voluntarily.

He spent a week in the hospital for various ailments," Armstrong said. "He was not coerced. It was more for rest and check-ups than anything else.

"He'll be going home to his parents. We're very sorry to see him go. He's thinking about a job in Washington."

"Pete was working pretty hard on his regular work here," said another WRAL newsman. "There's nothing serious."

Another employee described Young as "a very likeable person."

A Growing Daily Tar Heel

The University has been growing at a fantastic rate in the past few decades. In 1929 it was a cozy little place with 2,626 students. Today enrollment is almost 12,500.

But while the rest of the University has boomed, The Daily Tar Heel has stood more or less still since 1929 when it became a daily newspaper. Just as a radio or television station works within the confines of time, a newspaper works within the confines of the space on its pages. Lack of space hampers the paper's usefulness and limits the services it can offer to the student body.

Today's paper contains even less usable space than that 1929 version did for a fifth as many students. Increased advertising has aided the paper financially but has reduced the amount of space available for news, features and service announcements.

The situation is becoming critical and it is no more pleasant to DTH staff members than it is to readers.

Thursday night Student Legislature recognized the need by appropriating more than $9,000 to the DTH to cover the expense of printing six pages a day next semester.

The arrangement is a trial one. The problems involved in producing a paper half-again as big as it is now are immense. Present office space will be inadequate. The staff will have to be enlarged.

Hugh Blackwell, chief lobbyest for the bill in SL, said legislators' most frequent objection to expansion was that too much space is being wasted in the paper now.

Whether that criticism is valid from the viewpoint of the average student or just the student politician is debatable, but the DTH which pleases everybody has never and will never be printed.

Criticism is flattering in a way because it proves the paper is being read. Suggestions are welcome and sincere encouragement is extended to those of you who dissect the DTH along with your meals. If you want to "do something" about the DTH and are willing to sacrifice time and possibly grades, come join us. Ideas will be as readily accepted as labor.

The need for a bigger DTH has long been present. Our goal is to fill that need by making the paper bigger—and better.

Yankees, Stay Home

What courage! What fortitude! What forthrightness! What insight!

Faced with a transport strike crisis before he even had time to turn on the lights in his new office, New York Mayor John Lindsay knew what to do.

He told the "non-essential" people to stay home. He didn't want the streets clogged with a bunch of people who weren't really needed.

While the businesses of New York are being run by executives who have to open their own mail and get their own coffee, "non-essential" secretaries are sitting home contemplating their useless status.

You have to hand it to Lindsay. It really took guts to tell millions of people they're superfluous, and still expect them to vote for him next time he runs for an office.

About That Head

Some DTH readers might have been confused by the headline over yesterday's editorial about a Student Government lawyer. Since some people worry about things like that, we offer this clarification to set disturbed minds at ease.

The head should have been "Counsel — But Not Full-Time." The "Stay Home" head was written for the strike editorial, but was inadvertatly switched.

Residence College Helps

Students Need Identity

Editor's note: The following editorial was broadcast over stations WBT and WBTV in Charlotte on Dec. 30.

There has been a great deal said about unrest among college and university students, but most of the people who have tried to analyze this situation end up oversimplifying it. First they say that only a few students are involved; then they observe that students have always been nonconformist, sometimes to the point of rebellion; and finally they predict that the movement will not last long, that it is only a passing fad.

We doubt that the present ferment can be dismissed so easily. One great University that has examined the trouble more closely and has begun to do something about it is the University of North Carolina.

There are many causes of student unrest, but the people at Chapel Hill believe the problem on their particular campus is that the student feels lost as only one among 12,000. He has nothing against IBM cards, he does not object to being represented by an IBM card; he just doesn't want to be one.

So the University is trying an experiment that will probably spread to other campuses, because so far it seems to give the student a sense of identity. Colleges are being formed at all of the residence buildings. As Chancellor Sharp said, the residence colleges will break down the University to "units of human size". Each college is individual, but it is not detached from the University as a whole.

The University of North Carolina is not one of the larger multi-universities like California, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Texas, and some others, but it is rapidly growing to that size and is already big enough to submerge a bewildered student. For this particular trouble of mere bigness, the plan seems to be a good one.

Just the other day an essay by John W. Gardner, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, presented the idea that the great universities are not training students for leadership, and the next generation may find us with many experts, but few leaders.

The smaller college has traditionally been the training ground of leadership; the multi-university turns out mainly experts. If the Carolina plan has found a way to give the feeling of dinvididual identity with the advantage of being part of a big university, these fears of a leaderless future may be lesseneed.

Letter

Duke Fan Is Confident

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

To the loyal Tar Heel fans who stood in line for hours to get tickets to Saturday's game, and to the basketball team, this letter is dedicated. The following letter was received from a friend of mine at Duke. He said, in part, ". . . as for the game Saturday, you at Carolina should know more than anybody that Duke will be ready, and will win without too much trouble.

"Oh I'll admit that Lewis has good moves under the basket, but out team has at least three players (Verga, Marin, Mike Lewis) that make Bob look high - schoolish by comparison. It's time that you people over there realize that Duke is number one and intends to remain in that position; over here we play basketball as if it were a business (to refer to a recent magazine article), and in business as in sports, somebody has to lose.

"I can't say that I'm sorry that we're going to win, and you're going to lose . . . I don't understand why some of the schools around this area, that can't keep up with the pace of a superior athletic program, do not forget their own mediocre teams and identify with a great team. . . . After all, there's no humiliation in losing if you admit that you don't have a chance. . ."

'Rabid Unionism' Went Out With Ten-Hour Sweatshops

Transport Workers in New York City may never know why Mike Quill told them to strike last week. He's been leading them like blind children ever since he formed the TWU in 1934, and if his health returns to normal, chances are he will continue to use the strength of their 33,000 masses to do what ever he wants to New York City.

Certainly, Mayor John Lindsay isn't sure of the reasons of Quill's strike, and perhaps Quill isn't sure himself. The first demand by the union, $680 million over a two-year period, was repeatedly thrown into Lindsay's face for a week before New Year's Eve. Quill have made similar careless threats every year for the past eight years, but always when former New York Mayor Robert Wagner was in office.

The powerful machine which put Wagner in office and held him there for eight years seemed to be enough to keep Quill and his boys from actually pulling off their fantastic stunt.

So, a $25 million package deal, which looks miniscule compared to the union demand, was offered by the Transit Authority. And in the face of this offer, while refusing to bargain sanely, Mr. Quill decided he would knock off a couple of coups with one deed. Whether Quill had a right to strike in the first place rather than meet at mediation tables, is too late to consider. But he did strike, putting the city into a massive catotonic state.

The first part of Mr. Quill's little drama was an obvious attempt at slamming the new mayor so hard and so fast he would never recover from the initial blow. Cassius Clay has never tried it because he respected his opponent's potential; like any pro, he gives his foe a few test runs so he can estimate the man's strength.

Quill failed miserably here. His appearance on television, immediately before the strike merely showed viewers what the man stood for: the last gasp of the rabid unionism that has about as much respect in this nation as the ten - hour work day and the sweatshop. Perhaps then it was a way of life, but today it is only childishness.

The second act in the Quill drama, the try for martyrdom, got fouled up when the man took sick. Some say that even his heart attack was even staged, but they don't realize that to be a martyr today you have to keep healthy and keep making noise. A very real threat may exist, however if Mr. Quill does not recover.

Aside from ruining his health by exerting himself beyond physical capacities Mr. Quill has removed himself from a bargaining position. His illness could prolong the strike enough to cripple New York City beyond economic repair. (Even though Quill's stand-in, Douglas MacMahon, vice-president of the TWU, is speaking for the union, he may be even harded to bargain with than Quill. MacMahon was once branded a "Communist" by Quill himself and has had many serious differences of opinion with the president of the T.W.U.)

So, after the two - part drama had unfolded into the crippling strike it was inevitably to become, Mr. Quill has been left with a $7 million offer increase by the Transit Authority and has been "generous" enough to lower the outlandish $680 million figure some 80 per cent to $280 million over a two - year period. The union did not, however, specify whether the decrease included any changes in demands for a four-day, 32-hour work week, instead of the present five-day, 40-hour week.

There were also 76 individual grievances and numerous benefits and wage-increase scales that have not been mentioned since the outset of the strike.

The shame of the present strike lies directly in the hands of Mike Quill, not his workers who must obey the order for a strike. Quill's disregard for the public and the law should not be swept under the rug in efforts to end the diaster in New York. Also sitting in the limelight of shame and in the palm of Quill's hand are the Communications Workers of America, the New York City Central Labor Council, the New York State AFL-CIO, the New York Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the New York Local 816 of the Teamsters Union, all who have pledged their support for Quill and his strikers.

A strike that becomes less and less the central issue daily, as New York City dragged itself into each dangerously confused rush hour, must be stopped as soon as Mayor Lindsay can physically do it. Unless some other means of transportation is found soon for the millions of out - of - state commuters and more millions of inter-borough commuters, the revolt by Quill may turn against him. No one wants a federal injunction, least likely the federal government.

But if federal intervention is necessary, and Lindsay can't exert his fledgling influence, then come it must and come it shall. It just galls me to say it's now in the hands of Lyndon Johnson.

Battlefront TV May Cause Problems When Viet Cong Watch 'Gunsmoke'

I'm not making this up. It was in the papers. Two TV-equipped Super Constellations will soon fly off to Viet Nam to broadcast to troops in their mess halls, barracks and recreation areas.

When permanent ground stations are widening the ground stations' broadcast radius.

Most of the sets involved will have 23-inch screens.

It's all part of Project Jenny, a U. S. Navy effort.

I'm glad our soldiers will be able to enjoy this morale booster; however, I predict certain complications.

Here's how Project Jenny's official report will probably look in 1975:

After TV's introduction to Viet Nam, the number of Viet Cong defections increased dramatically. The guerrillas said they'd lay down their arms if permitted to watch "Mr. Ed." American military commanders agreed to honor the defectors' request — provided they talked along with the horse.

The "rehabilitation" attempts seemed very successful until one day the former Reds tried to return to the jungles. Somebody had accidentally shown the wrong TV program to them: "Gunsmoke."

Another time, the P.O.W.'s complained that their being forced to watch headache commercials violated the Geneva Convention.

American GI's soon demanded personal TV sets. Eventually, every foxhole sported an antenna.

During the monsoon season, when heavy rains curtailed much of the fighting, many soldiers asked to be excused from battle so they could see "Bonanza."

Meanwhile, there were complaints that the Viet Cong forces were improving their jungle warfare tactics by watching "Tarzan."

Learning about this, the Defense Department immediately ordered the program off the air. The "Tarzan" films were declared "high security" material and sent to Fort Bragg to be used to instruct members of the Special Forces.

Sailors on ships in the vicinity found they could wage war better by emulating the men of "McHale's Navy."

U. S. mine sweeper crews picked up helpful hints from "Sea Hunt."

Diplomats secretly conducting border negotiations watched "What's My Line?" and "Let's Make a Deal."

Viet Cong commanders hoping for an early withdrawal of U. S. troops viewed "The Dating Game" regularly.

Terrorists on both sides watched "The Munsters."

Sentries got instruction from "Password."

Marines seeking out the enemy watched "In Search of Man."

The guerrillas they chased watched "Run for Your Life."

Viet Cong radio operators tried to jam USIA broadcasts of "To Tell the Truth."

The South Vietnamese government banned showings of "Peyton Place" because they had "offered too much encouragement to Saigon night club entertainers."

Vietnamese politicians trying to overthrow the government watched "Maverick."

U. S. military officials, pleading for greater security, asked newspaper correspondents to sit through ten episodes of "You Don't Say."

CIA agents in Viet Nam thought they could successfully penetrate Hanoi after getting lessons from "I Spy."

But the Viet Cong leaders were waiting for the intruders. They had been watching "The Man from U.N.C.L.E."

Long Names Sophomore Committees

The members of the sophomore class committee have been announced by class president Bill Long.

All new members will be contacted by the committee chairmen next week.

The chairmen will meet Tuesday at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker III in GM.

The members of the Communications and Publicity Committee are Hurley Thompson, co-chairman, Earl Hadden, co-chairman, Candie Black, Bill Bowman, Mike Brown, Steve Fox, Lawrence Lackey, Steve Mueller, Bob Orr, Ellen Robinson, Sharon Rose, Frank Simpson, Larry Sauder, George Teague, and Gordon Jones.

The members of the Finance Committee are Bill Findlay, chairman, Preston Humphreys, George McNeill, Tom Outlaw, Jerry Starnes, and Everett Thompson.

Mike Mennius, chairman, Dickson Gribble, Jimmy Martin, Phillips Jones, David Rat, Bill Titterud, Leon Woodruff, and Jane Marcotte make up the Planning Committee.

The Secretariat-Newslatter Committee's new members are Walter Hussman, editor, Elliot Dahan, Patti Fiends, Mike Jennings, Patricia Owens, and Tom Roderick.

Planetarium Aides NASA Control

By RICK STOFF
DTH Staff Writer

National Aeronautics and Space Administration is conducting work on the Agena rocket program in UNC's Morehead Planetarium.

The Planetarium has been working with the NASA control board in Houston since 1960 training the astronauts for their journeys into space.

This latest training program will picture the Agena rocket body in space for the astronauts so they can improve their range and distance perception in space.

The Rocket Body will appear to the astronauts at ranges of 30 miles to 100 feet, according to program director Mr. A. F. Jenzano.

The running lights and docking lights will be visible to the astronauts at these different distances and the entire rocket will be on a background of stars which the astronauts will become familiar with for rendezvous and docking missions in space.

The new team of astronauts for GT 8 has not been chosen yet so the new program is still in the planning stages.

Since the beginning of the Mercury and Gemini series of test flights every one of the astronauts in these programs has been to the Planetarium for orientation. Some of the original 7 astronauts in the U. S. space program were in training in the Morehead program for as many as 70 hours.

"The primary purpose of the Morehead program is to acquaint the astronauts with star configurations for navigational purposes." Jenzano said.

The importance of this phase of the program was first demonstrated by Gordon Cooper in his Mercury flight when he used a star to adjust his capsule for the proper reentry angle to the Earth's atmosphere.

Frank Borman, GT 7 pilot, is credited with using celestial navigation to change the orbit of his flight to be in the right orbit for the planned rendezvous with GT 6.

Both of these astronauts received training at the Planetarium in the configuration of the heavenly body's. This training was the key to the success of their flights.

The present program, in addition to the basic star position emphasis, will include a large scale program concerning depth of range perception.

Jim McDivitt said that during his GT 4 flight there are difficulty in estimating range in space.

Because there is no relative distance or object to measure space distance by when looking through the window of a space capsule the NASA program must take a different approach to the problem of space estimations.

The Morehead solution to the problem is the teaching of star positions, their magnitude, their appearance, the distance separating them, and the angles between them.

With the new programs instituted by NASA and oriented by The Morehead Planetarium Space Program the failure of the first Agena rocket, GT 6, hopefully will not be repeated.

'Holiday Mountain' Opens Tuesday; Runs All Week

The Carolina Playmakers will present seven performances of "Holiday Mountain," a comedy written by Ugo Betti, beginning on Tuesday in the Playmakers theater.

The play will star Anne Mildred Davis, an experienced actress, producer and writer.

Mrs. Davis, a former UNC Dramatic Arts student and wife of the Playmakers Director Harry Davis, appeared for five seasons with he Circle theater in Hollywood. In New York, she appeared in a revivial of Chekov's "Uncle Vanya" with Franchot Tone and Signe Hasso.

In production, she served as assistant to TV producer Worington Miner for "The Play of the Week" series and "The U. S. Steel Hour." On Broadway, she was assistant to Haila Stoddard, producer of "Thurber Carnival" and Thurber's "Beast in Me."

"Holiday Mountain" will also feature Sherry Elledge, James Boothby, Wendy Farer, Tom Wilson and Melody Dickinson.

Reserved seat tickets for all performances (including a 2:30 Sunday matinee) are still available, and may be purchased at the Playmakers business office, 214 Abernethy Hall and at Ledbetter Pickard's downtown Chapel Hill.

Prize Cows Retire

LOCKPORT, N. Y. (AP)—The prize-winning Randleigh Farms jersey herd of the late William Rand Kenan Jr., multimillionaire industrialist, will be broken up by the end of the month, manager Frank M. Stedman said Friday.

He said 80 of the best animals on the experimental and demonstration dairy farm would be sent to University of North Carolina. They include 40 milking cows and 40 young stock.

Kenan, whose fortune had been estimated at more than $130 million, died last July 28. He made much of his fortune developing Florida.

Stedman said the 35-year-old dairy business might also be ended. He said, however, it was possible the business would be continued under new ownership although he was not certain.

The farm now employs 15 persons.

has said.

He is convinced there is "a widespread campaign to break down our barriers of custom and law that are intended to prevent miscegenation and the hybridization of America.

"This campaign is promoted in part by people who sincerely believe that they are doing God's will; also by people who have no regard for God's will."

In "Race, Heredity and Civilization," he writes: "I should be surprised to meet with any greater intolerance toward my point of view on the campus of Dartmouth College (where he gave a lecture) than I encountered on the campus of the University of North Carolina."

He sprinkles his writings at times with mention of alleged Negro immorality.

George like to point out countries like Brazil and Portugal as examples of "degeneration" caused by interbreeding.

He is hesitant to call the white race superior, but he says it has "demonstrated a capacity for creative greatness that has produced Western civilization."

The professor thinks of Africa in terms of cannibals and bongo drums.

He is worried that integration "might plunge us back into the Dark Ages."

George insists, however, that he not be called a racist. "The word is too emotional." — DAVID ROTHMAN

The Tar Heel campus may be lacking the proper enthusiasm for today's struggle with the number one team in the nation — the Duke Blue Devils. But that tale does not hold true for at least two enthusiasts.

It seems that "William Longspear and Henry W. Shakefellow," co-chairmen of the UNC "Beat Dook" Committee, have sought to share this prize piece of non-prose:

Being tops is lots of fun.
The Dookies think they're number one.
They think they're better than the rest,
But they'll soon learn they're second best.

We should greet their team, so swell,
With lusty cries and let's all yell.
Let them strut and shun the boos.
They'll soon be crying Dookie "Blues."

"We are the best," their fans all scream
But let me introduce their team.

Bobby Verga's "Mister Gun."
He says shooting is lots of fun.
In the clutch he'll start to fold.
The Tar Heel press will stop him cold.

Big Mike Lewis, the Mountain man,
Grabs the rebounds 'cross the land.
Confused and saddened after this . . .
That Tar Heel shooters just don't miss.

Poor Jack Marin will kneel in prayer.
It looks like Tar Heels everywhere.
Lewis and Miller—high and low,
Through Duke's defense they both will go.

They've some guy they call Bob Reidy,
But really he's not very speedie.
He'll jump and jump to no avail,
His nerves will pop, his eyes will fail.

Meet the captain of their team.
Steve Vacendak is a scream.
He'll dribble, dribble everywhere,
And soon the ball just won't be there.

That's their team—they're really great,
We've set the trap, and Duke's the bait.

* * *

Tar Heel fans can support the Duke effort in many ways today. One important area comes in the player introductions.

"A polite applause is much better than loud boos," says Tar Heel coach Dean Smith. "Boos are inspirational, believe me. We received the 'rude' treatment this past Wednesday night at Wake Forest and I am certain it inspired the boys to play a much better game.

"We certainly don't want to inspire the Duke players.

"Of course after the game starts," he said. "The fans can break loose with that fine support they've been giving us all year."

Enough said? I think so.

Little David And The "Devil"

Fauntleroy

To the students of UNC,
Greetings.

As you know, I make predictions about games all over the country. I'm a busy man, and I don't often take time out to write personal letters. But the fact is I'm worried.

Sure, I'm infallible. You know it. I know it. My very rare mistakes have been easily explained away. Like the time I was tied up by a villainous vandal. He took over my computer and made 6 mistakes out of ten last fall. The cad is now serving life for the dastardly deed.

Well, I want to tell you about this dream I had last night.

I found myself in the press box in Carmichael Auditorium. The dream was in vivid technicolor and it included a cast of thousands. For some strange reason everything was in slow motion.

I watched a sea of spectators slowly rise to their feet, and smiles spread across their nameless faces.

Down on the floor the Duke players just stood dumbfounded. They shook their heads from side to side.

I heard a loud ticking noise echo across the auditorium and throughout the land. A number five disappeared from the clock, and then a four.

Some kid from Washington took a rebound from someone named Stick and leaped into the air. The ball plowed down through the strings, and the Duke athletes crumbled to the floor. They turned into little blue puddles and then evaporated altogether.

The crowd flowed onto the floor after the final tick of the clock. And they carried Dean Smith and his warriors ceremoniously into the locker rooms.

Now, I know Duke is number one and are heavily favored to beat you. That's why I woke up screaming and with my pajamas soaked through with frigid sweat.

I wanted to tell you about the dream because it came from the subconscious mind of the great one. And, who knows? They say some dreams come true.

Best wishes,
Fauntleroy

N. C. STATE vs VIRGINIA —the Wolfpack need this one to remain in a tie for the ACC lead. Let's be kind to those Wolfies. Pick State.

USC vs FLORIDA SOUTHERN—The Gamecocks have found new vigor in the roundball sport. Pick the Gamecocks.

WAKE FOREST vs GEORGIA TECH —The Deads are definitely hurting in this one. Pick Tech to roll.

DAVIDSON vs WEST VIRGINIA—This is the big one in the Southern Conference. Davidson is young and eager. West Virginia has been around before. Pick the Mountaineers.

VANDERBILT vs GEORGIA —The Vandies have quite a bit too much of everything for the Bulldogs. They have my support, too. Pick Vanderbilt.

MICHIAN vs OHIO STATE —It should be a long road back for the Wolverines. This is a start—pick Michigan.

KENTUCKY vs FLORIDA—The Wildcats have begun to make their move. Their number two ranking in the nation should be intack in this one—pick Kentucky.

CAROLINA BEATS DUKE

Duke, State Open UNC Track Season

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

The indoor track season opens today in the Tin Can against traditional rivals Duke and N. C. State.

The meet will most likely be a contest between Carolina and Duke since State lacks depth and distance men.

Carolina does not possess great depth, but has a strong contender in each event. The main strength of the thinclads is the running events which have always been favorable and this year is no exception.

Co-caption Jim Meade will be running the two mile with 9:33 in an early season time trial on the boards. Meade's cohort, Bill Janowitz will run the 880 with sophomore Bill Bassett.

The sprints are strengthened with the return of Jon Levin who was injured last spring. Other first liners for Carolina are Ed Daw in the 440 and Richard Ambrose, Adger Stokes and Gary Mead, all of whom will run in the relays and hurdles.

The field events are not as strong as in the past, but pole vaulter Lester Hyder, shot putters Barney Varner and Bo Wood, high jumper Jim Hutchins and broad jumper Garry Iverson should all give a good performance for Carolina.

Coaches Hilton and Newman both realize the lack of depth in the squad, but are confident that the first string men will perform well. It has been true in the past that these athletes have come through when necessary and against Duke and State the desire to win is ever present.

The Carolina frosh will be out to continue last year's unbeaten record and have shown in pre-season time trials that they have a good chance. Again, the running events are strong with distance men Truitt Goodwin and Joe Lasich.

Mat Men Lose To Wolfpack

By DICK BIRCHER
DTH Sports Writer

N. C. State heavyweight Chuck Amato decisioned UNC's Ken Galloway in the final match to hand Carolina's wrestlers their second defeat of the season, 19-16, yesterday in Carmichael Auditorium.

In the preliminary match, the UNC freshmen trounced State, 33-7, with the help of four forfeits. The frosh lost only one match in running its record to 3-1.

In the heralded 167-pound varsity match, State's Bob Brawley beat Jay Jacobson in a battle of unbeatens.

Brawley's win gave the Wolfpack a 16-13 lead. Fred Priester evened the score for Carolina by winning the 177-pound clash, setting the scene for the crucial heavyweight match.

Coach Sam Barnes called the defeat "very disappointing." "We expected to beat them," he said. "I don't want to single-out anyone, but several boys who should have gotten points for us that didn't do it."

Of the 167-pound match Barnes said, "Brawley is obviously better than Jacobson. It was a foolish experiment."

Intramural Action

Dolphins Tangle With Deacs Today

The Dolphins of UNC will meet the Deacons of Wake Forest in the Bowman Gray pool this afternoon at 4:30 to try and improve on their 5-2 record for the season.

After winning their first five starts, the Dolphins were drubbed by Navy and Army as the team traveled to Annapolis and West Point before the Christmas.

Coach Pat Earey has marked up the stiff competition from the armed services as good experience thinking the team will fare better in the championship meets at the end of the year.

Some 300 people heard New York Yankee second baseman Bobby Richardson Thursday evening in Memorial Hall as the star athlete compared life to a baseball game. "In both," he said, "we have our ups and downs, but we must have faith in the Lord."

Sponsored by the Carolina Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Richardson gave some personal experiences with his fellow athletes and how God had played a role in their lives.

An 11 year veteran of the Yankees, the diminutive second baseman said, "Not all athletes can enter the Hall of Fame, but if they join God's Hall of Fame it will mean more to them."

Bobby Richardson started his baseball career in Sumter, S. C., where he played American Legion ball at the age of 14. After graduating from high school in 1953, he was drafted by the Yankees and sent to Norfolk, Va.

The Norfolk ball team was somewhat advanced for him at first, so down another knotch in the minors Richardson went. Proving himself, the Yankees called him up and at the age of 19 Bobby Richardson played his first major league baseball game.

A happily married man and the father of two boys and two girls, Richardson feels his purpose in life aside from baseball is to know, to love and walk daily with God. He had just recently been with the Billy Graham Crusade in Houston, Tex., where he spoke on youth night.

"If one is a Christian many will outwardly resent him," the Yankee star said, "but inwardly they will respect him."

Richardson joined the fellowship about six years ago and now tours the country in his off season filling speaking engagements. The UNC fellowship fills engagements as well with 62 for the past year that took the FCA into 39 North Carolina towns and cities.

Albert Long, adult advisor for the UNC chapter presided over the affair and Coach John Lotz introduced the speaker.

Aside from Long and Lotz, Danny Lotz and Dean Smith round out adult advisors for the group.

Dropping Pebbles In The Ocean

It was cold outside "Blue Heaven." Inside, well, inside it was rather warm. The heaters belonged to the hands of a group from West Durham and the whistle of a referee.

Nothing can be taken away from Duke. They are a great basketball team. Dropping the ball through the hoop for Duke is like tossing pebbles in the ocean.

As for the officials, we think they made a few, to say the least, bad calls. It wouldn't have made much difference even if they had been perfect. They missed calls on both sides.

Keep your chins up men. Nothing to be ashamed of. You played a fine basketball game.

Next time we'll still spot Duke eight points and bet on you.

Tijuana Brass And The Charleston

Carmichael was packed from bottom to top. If everyone had inhaled at the same time the place would have blown apart.

The pep band was decked out in their new blue and white striped sport coats and the music matched their snappy colors.

The female cheerleaders provided an amusing show when they attempted to do a version of the Charleston to music from "Tijuana Brass."

During halftime football quarterback Danny Talbott received his plaque as "ACC Coach of the Year." Someone goofed when the plaques were made and substituted "Coach" for "Player."

The ACC official who presented the plaque said he was sure Coach Jim Hickey would agree that Talbott was "ACC Coach of the Year." As a matter of fact we do too."

From The Associated Press

Transit Strike Continues

NEW YORK—This city's multimillion-dollar transit strike entered its second week today with 6,500 subway cars and 4,000 buses stil idle, but mediators report some progress toward restarting them.

Union chief Michael J. Quill and eight other labor leaders remained imprisoned.

Peace talks continued, with mediators stating a goal of restoring transit service by Monday morning but conceding that eight or ten "hard money issues" were unresolved.

Assembly Meets Monday

RALEIGH—House Speaker Pat Taylor said Saturday that he sees no reason why a special session of the North Carolina Legislature which convenes Monday can't reapportion the House and realign Senate and congressional districts in one week.

Bills to reapportion the House and realign the Senate and 11 congressional districts will be introduced soon after the legislature convenes at noon according to Speaker Taylor.

The Legislature has until Jan. 31 to comply with the federal court ruling that they must reapportion the House and realign the Senate and congressional districts on a population basis.

Draft Eyes Students

FT. STEWART, Ga.—Lt. Gen Lewis B. Hershey, director of the Selective Strvice System said Friday that draft deferments for college students will become more difficult to obtain because of the increasing manpower needs in Viet Nam.

Hershey said that after all available 19-year-olds have been taken they would start calling up college students.

The next groups after them would be those who failed their draft exams and married men without children.

Dominican Crisis Eases

WASHINGTON—The Organization of American States met Saturday to consider the Dominican Republic's latest crisis but adjourned when it heard that rebelling military officers had backed down.

The military chiefs had seized the government radio station in protest of the diplomatic exile of 34 top officers by President Hector Gracia-Godoy on Thursday.

After surrendering the radio station they reaffirmed their opposition to Garcia-Godoy's plan to exile some of the military leaders.

De Gaulle Takes Oath

PARIS—Charles de Gaulle formally took office Saturday for another seven-year term as president of France in a brief and austere ceremony in the Elysee Palace yesterday.

The ceremony—a striking contrast to presidential inaugurations in America—lasted only seven minutes and was witnessed by less than 50 persons.

Duke Still Tops In Land, 88-77

Marin And Verga Kill UNC Rallies

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's hustle and determination fell 11 points short Saturday afternoon as the Tar Heels lost 88-77 to the DuKe Blue Devils — still the nation's number one ranked team.

Although they never re-gained the lead after the first two minutes of play, the Tar Heels kept it close to the delight of 8,500 partisan Carolina fans in Carmichael Auditorium.

The Blue Devils took the lead 4-3 on a Bob Verga swisher from outside and never lost the upper hand.

The Tar Heels did manage to tie the count at 15 points on a Bob Lewis basket with 11:45 to go in the first half but the Tar Heels could never crack the Duke offensive which repeatedly sprang Verga and Jack Marin loose for long shots from the outside.

Jack Marin broke that tie with two straight baskets for a 19-15 Duke lead with 10:30 remaining in the half. With 8:22 left, Duke had a five-point lead at 24-19.

Two quick baskets by Verga and a free throw by Steve Vacendak was good for a ten-point Duke lead at 32-22 with 4:30 left in the half.

The Tar Heels did rally at that point — outscoring the Blue Devils nine to two in a two-minute stretch. A Lewis jumper with two minutes to go in the half made the score Carolina 31, Duke 34.

Then it was Duke's turn to turn on the steam as the Blue Devils closed the half with a rally of their own — outscoring the Tar Heels eight to two for a 43-33 half-time lead.

But the Tar Heels were not ready to roll-over for the Blue Devils. A second half rally built around a pressing, harassing defense cut the nine-point Duke half-time lead to three points 46-43 with 16:50 to play. Minutes later the Duke lead was cut to two as Lewis stole a stray Duke pass, fired to Larry Miller under the basket who layed it in — 48-46 in favor of Duke with 15:50 to go.

But that two point margin was the closest the Tar Heels could come. Verga and Marin began their long-range bombing and the skinny Duke lead began to increase.

With 10:25 to play, the Duke lead was seven at 62-55. With 8:20 left, a Verga shot made the score 68-59 in favor of the Blue Devils.

The largest Duke lead of the evening came with three minutes to go as Jack Marin connected on a free throw for an 82-68 lead.

The Tar Heels did cut that margin to eight with 1:45 to go, but the Devils were home free.

In the scoring department, Bob Verga, with 11 of 16 from the floor and seven of seven from the free throw line for 29 points, paced the Blue Devils. Jack Marin, with 11 of 17 from the floor and one of two from the line, placed second to Verga with 23 points.

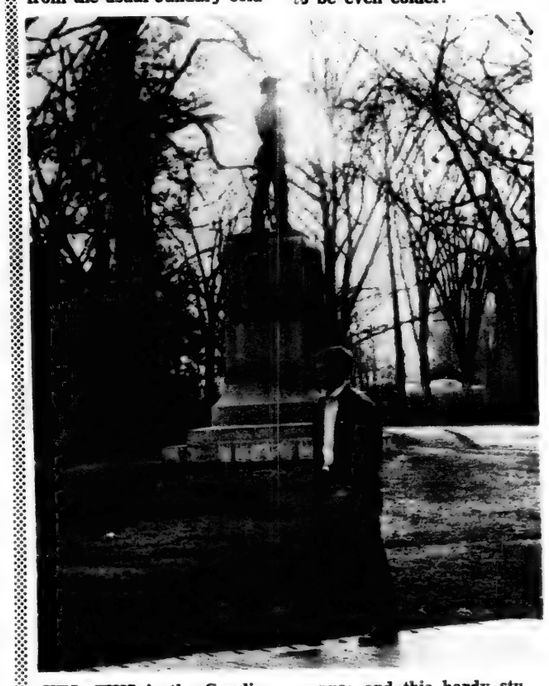
Sophomore Mike Lewis was the other Blue Devil in double figures with 11 points.

Sophomore Larry Miller paced the Tar Heel offensive — hitting 11 of 19 from the floor and five of nine from the free throw line for 27 points.

Cold Wave Hits Nation, Moves On Sunny South

By SAM COVINGTON
Special to the DTH

Carolina's brief respite from the usual January cold has definitely ended. Saturday's temperatures failed to reach the expected high and forecasters look for today to be even colder.



YES, THIS is the Carolina campus; and this hardy student is strolling along without a coat. But that was Friday, before the heat went off. This morning, with a low in the neighborhood of 12 (twelve) predicted, overcoats were the uniform of the day.

Saturday's high shivered up to 34 from night-time lows in the teens. The predictions called for 40 degree weather. Fierce winds added to local discomfort.

The high today is expected to be 30 degrees, following last night's low of 12 degrees. Monday should be warmer and partly cloudy. Weathermen see no snow for UNC.

The rest of the nation seems to be faring worse than North Carolina. Unrelenting rains in the California-Oregon border are have caused floods which have driven more than 1,000 persons from their homes, marooned trains, and blocked highways.

Snow and plummeting temperatures have spread across the area between the Rockies and the Great Lakes. Devils Lake, N.D. reported a record of 37 below zero.

One to two inches of snow whitened much of New York state and Central New England Saturday.

Some Carolina students gratefully feel the recent rains and low temperatures have tended to reduce the "aroma" of the fertilizer recently added to campus shrubbery.

Committee Silent About Chancellor

Dr. William S. Wells, chairman of the advisory committee to find a replacement for Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, said his committee discussed no names at their first meeting yesterday.

"I'm not at liberty to say what the committee discussed," he added. "We're under a 'bond of agreement,'—the way any committee works.

"When and if the committee makes a report, it will go to President Friday first."

Friday had no comment on the meeting.

Wells would not say whether emphasis on finding a replacement would be placed at UNC or out of state. "We're primarily interested in finding the best man for the job," he said.

"I hope we can make our recommendations by this spring. We're going to stay with it and work as hard as we can."

The next committee meeting is scheduled to tomorrow.

Sharp, chancellor here since September, 1964, submitted his resignation Dec. 29 to become president of Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa.

He came here from the presidency of Hiram College in Ohio.

His resignation was to have become effective in July, but the trustees changed the date to Feb. 15. He will take office at Drake on March 1.

Friday named Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson acting chancellor last Monday. Sitterson, now vice chancellor here, will assume his duties Feb. 16.

As vice chancellor he has been responsible for academic and health affairs.

Sky-Diving Coed Bored By Conventional Pastimes

By BOB HARRIS
DTH Staff Writer

"I closed my eyes and pushed off. The wind caught me and whipped me violently around in the air. That's the last thing I remember. . ."

This is Suzanne Mearns describing her first parachute jump. Since then her yen for the unconventional has led her to make 43 more.

Suzanne, a senior English major at UNC, made her first jump during her freshman year in college. She and her jumpmaster had to form their own club (the "Omega Skydivers" in Lexington) because she was not allowed to use military facilities.

"I was getting bored with school and tension built up so much during the week that jumping on the weekends gave me a great release from tension," she said. "I did it mainly for fun and excitement."

The San Francisco native admits that her younger brother, a civilian pilot, also influenced her decision. "He started skydiving. I decided that if he was going to do it, I was too," she added.

On her initial jump, Suzanne had packed her own chute and "had her doubts as to whether it would open."

She has had only one accident in her skydiving career. She landed five miles from the target in an apple orchard and fell out of a tree on her head, suffering a mild concussion.

Suzanne's interest are now going in other directions. Last summer she became interested in glider flying. Her "soaring" was short-lived, however. She hit a treetop with her glider and broke off one of its wings.

"I'm not as wild and thrill-seeking as I used to be," she said. "I've been away from skydiving so long that I get nervous just thinking about it."

Bonner Papers At UNC

UNC student Joseph Tillotson is helping organize the papers of the late Herbert Bonner, the First District congressman who donated them to the UNC Library.

The collection, which includes letters from five U. S Presidents, fills 24 filing cabinets and 75 boxes.

"Bonner knew Truman or worked with him in legislation they were both interested in," Tillotson said.

"Our collection starts in 1940 and continues through part of 1965.

"It's fairly complete," he said, "although we've had to send five scrapbooks with a lot of useful information back to Bonner's Washington office."

The files include letters from Walt Disney and movie producer Cecil B. DeMille congratulating Bonner for his legislative work.

"The Disney and DeMille letters are not personal," Tillotson said.

Disney's letter is decorated with cartoon pictures.

During his career, Bonner also corresponded with Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson.

Tillotson, of Denton, noted that he has been impressed with frank, full answers Bonner sent to all who wrote him.

Bonner also worked on a number of other house committees, including the House Un-American Activities Committee, now investigating the Ku Klux Klan.

Tillotson, who spends about 15 hours a week arranging the papers, estimates that the remainder of the school year will be required to complete the classification.

Nicholson Hits Segregationist

Carolina Forum Chairman George Nicholson criticized Dr. W. C. George, the segregationist UNC professor, for saying the forum largely ignores "conservative" racial views.

"If anything," Nicholson said yesterday, "the balance has been tilted recently in favor of the segregationists, though we try to invite both liberals and conservatives.

Last year the Forum had Strom Thurmond, "and before that we had Ross Barnett," former Mississippi governor, he said.

Nicholson said the Forum has sought George Wallace, former Mississippi governor, Texas Senator Tower (Republican) and Gov. Faubus, of Arkansas. "Back in 1952, or '53 we even sponsored a Ku Klux Klan grand dragon, he said.

'Get Thee Behind Me...'

It's amazing what religion can do for a man. It saves some men's souls, but boxer Cassius Clay has used it to get rid of his wife.

He has been granted a divorce from his 26-year-old wife Sonji because she hasn't been living up to Mohammed Ali's Muslim faith.

She said she only wore the clothes he bought her, and she quit smoking, and she stopped wearing make-up "when he washed my hair and my face."

What more could a mere woman do?

Pure Cassius said her clothes were too revealing and sometimes she even uses strong language. Of the dress she wore to divorce court he said, "It's too tight. Her knees are showing and her limbs are showing. It's lust to the eye and and embarrassing to me."

The judge granted the divorce and ordered Clay to pay the former model $1,250 a month in alimony and $22,500 attorney's fees.

"I ain't got that much money," said thec hamp.

Maybe not. But his freedom from a wicked woman ought to be worth quite a bit. Perhaps his religion will even be strengthened is some of that filthy lucre should depart from him.

DTH Awards Of The Week

Movie Star of the Week: Ronald Reagan, who has quit the screen to take up the banner of "individual freedom" as a Republican candidate for governor in California.

* * *

It's-About-Time-Somebody-Admitted-It Award: Dr. Jack C. Taylor, Maryland Agriculture Research Service scientist. He said pigs are more like humans than any other non-primates. "They are physiologically more like humans and they are subject to many of the same maladies," he said.

This raises a serious question. Do people act like hogs or do hogs act like people?

* * *

Major Concession of the Week: Western Airlines has broken precedent and agreed to retain stewardesses after they get married. The decision is qualified, howerer, by the provision that the stewardesses will be grounded when they get pregnant.

They are trained to deliver babies, but obviously Western doesn't want stewardesses to have to deliver their own.

Double Talk Award: From the Raleigh News & Observer: "Governor Moore speaking publicly to new State Highway Patrol officials after swearing-in ceremony Tuesday: 'Your duty is to enforce the law, fairly and impartially, and in doing this I pledge to you my full support. As long as I am your governor, you need have no fear of political reprisal or political interference.'

"Commissioner of Motor Vehicles Pilston Godwin commenting December 14 on his decision to fire veteran State Highway Patrol officials: 'A man's politics has got some bearing on what takes place — that's one of the facts of life.' "

Great Society Must Yield To War

President Johnson's Great Society Express, which roared through Congress last year, may bog down in the rice paddies of Viet Nam. When the second session of the 89th Congress convenes tomorrow, it rougher than the first session did. rougher than the firs session did.

Johnson will reportedly ask Congress for $12-13 billion to finance the growing war in Viet Nam. He will probably get it, but before he does, hopefully there will be a full-scale debate on the war.

For the first time in history, the United States has gradually slipped into a major war. There was no dramatic incident, such as a declaration of war, to bring the situation home to the American people. The shock of a Pearl Harbor that would awaken and arouse the people has been missing. The lack of such a focal point of action or drama may be a major reason why this is one of the most unpopular wars this country has ever fought.

President Johnson has apparently been reluctant to confide in the American people where the Vietnamese war is concerned. Even when he announced in July that the war was being escalated, he said only that 50,000 more troops were being sent to Viet Nam and that more would be sent as necessary.

When he made that announcement, Johnson must have known that more — many more — troops would indeed be needed. He should have had some idea of the ultimate force that would have to be provided. Yet he gave no estimate than or later of this number.

Perhaps Johnson is trying to make the situation as painless as possible on the American people by giving them the bad news in easy stages. If so, he is making a serious mistake. Breaking the news gradually that we are at war is likely to have one or two effects, both bad.

First, the periodic buildup can lull the people into ignoring the war between announcements. Second, the regular statements that more troops are being sent into combat is likely to create the impression that the situation is getting worse. This impression clashes with such statements as that by Secretary of Defense Robert MacNamara that "We have stopped losing the war." The result is a loss of confidence in the Administration's conduct of the war.

Certain plans have been made or are being made, concerning the number of troops to be sent to Viet Nam, draft calls, reserve callups, and other emergency measures. So far, the people have been kept generally in the dark. However, it is unlikely that Congress — especially in an election year — will loosen its purse strings to the extent that the President wishes without a serious, searching debate.

Such a debate should provide valuable information for the public. The people should have access to all information that is not damaging to security, and Congress has the responsibility to obtain that information.

The fight for the extra war funds may turn out to be only a skirmish for LBJ, though. The real battle is likely to come over funds for the many welfare programs of the Great Society.

The huge increases in expenditures for the war are going to bring strong pressures to cut back on the spending at home. The Republican party will be looking for campaign issues, and Federal spending is obviously a good one.

In addition to the G.O.P., economy-minded Democrats, including those who have opposed the Great Society all along, can be counted on to add their voices — and votes — to the demand to compensate for increased spending abroad by decreased spending at home.

The President will probably fight the attempts to make the Great Society somewhat less great. He can point to an increased gross national product, decreased unemployment, and the stock market boom as evidence that the American economy is expanding sufficiently to cover the cost of all the Administration's programs, for both war and peace.

Johnson may fear that his new welfare programs, once sidetracked, may be permanently diminished or killed. He would undoubtedly have a harder time getting the programs re-established than he had getting them passed the first time. It is doubtful that Johnson will ever again command the obedience of Congress in the way he did last year.

Yet though it may pain him, the President will have to submit to a curtailing of domestic spending, if Congress does its duty. First things must come first, and the first thing now is the war in Viet Nam. If it takes $12 billion to fight the war, Congress should provide the money — after a thorough airing of the situation. The money must come from somewhere, though; and the logical place to get a large part of it is from the funds previously earmarked for Federal projects at home.

Many people applauded the 89th Congress for the way it speedily approved Johnson's major programs in its first session. On the other hand, many labeled the 89th a "rubber-stamp" Congress. Should the President attempt to maintain his domestic programs at their pre-escalation level, the 89th will have a chance to shed that tag.

Congress has a responsibility to see that Federal spending is kept within reasonable limits. They can and should exercise this responsibility by curtailing domestic expenditures during this period of international crisis. The country cannot afford to escalate both the war on poverty and the war in Viet Nam.

Ramnapping

Fordham Has Trouble, Too; Sheep Always Getting Fleeced

Editor's note: The following column appeared in the Fordham University newspaper in November. Because of the troubles UNC has had with its ram and the recent talk about his unfitness for the job of mascot, the DTH thought it would be of interest to the campus now.

By J. PHILIP CUSKER

In what is becoming almost as great a tradition as bad food in the Campus Center, Fordham suffered the indignity of having its royal highness, Ramesis XX spirited from his palatial estate for the umpteenth time several weeks ago. While the dastardly deed has been softpedaled by authorities as just another college prank, careful and exhaustive investigation has revealed facts and figures which must rank this act as the Crime of the Century; surpassing the Brink's Holdup, the Great Train Robbery, World War II, and Mrs. O'Leary's cow in its audacity and execution.

First, the raid was not carried out at night, as previously reported, but in broad daylight; well anyway, in daylight. It was witnessed by 47 students in Bishop's Hall (46 Fordham College students and 1 Thomas More (?!), by 5 people playing bottlecaps on the handball courts, by 2 persons in the greenhouse, otherwise unidentified, by the entire student body of Fordham Prep (on the Prep field of course), and by 3 passengers on a passing el train.

The statements taken from these witnesses contained a few discrepancies. Reports of the number of persons involved carried from 2 to 104, although the average figure seems to be 16¾. Most agreed the raider arrived by Mustang, but they disagreed as to whether they were talking about the car of that name or the animal. One person insisted they came by camel, and still another claimed they swooped down from a dirigible. At any rate they gained entrance to the palace grounds not, as reported by climbing over the fence, but by blowing open the main gate with a low yield nuclear weapon. This was great enough to cause an alert in the North American Air Defense System, but not enough for the Burns Guards headquarters.

The only concensus that could be reached was that the raid occurred on either the 21st or 22nd or October and at no other time.

The culprits escaped in a surplus Sherman tank which an astute guard stopped for not having its running lights on.

The recovery of his royal majesty was also erroneously reported. After an enormous ransom consisting of 5 bluebooks and a lock of Don Ross's hair was given to the kidnapers, a member of this staff was told to go to a certain phonebooth and await developments. After a considerable period he received a phone call instructing him to look up, whereupon the Ram was discovered.

Several suggestions have been made to prevent a recurrence of this deplorable situation; get a more ferocious ram, build the great wall of China, have several "dummy" rams, take it home, or perhaps change the school symbol to a skunk. If nothing else is clear in this mess, it is certain that we must be doing something wrong.

Trouble For 2-S

Keep Students In Colleges

Editor's note: The continued escalation of the war in Viet Nam is putting a strain on the manpower pool for the draft. The University of Illinois newspaper, The Daily Illini, published this editorial on the possibility of drafting college students.

We knew it would happen sooner or later. This lovely citadel of 2-S deferments may crumble—albeit from the bottom first.

Draft director Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey commenting in an interview in U. S. News & World Report, said college classrooms may be tapped to meet the ever-increasing manpower demands of the war in Viet Nam. The college students who may be drafted, Hershey indicated, would be those in the lower quarter of their classes.

There are several ways of looking at this. First, it is a shame that students who have the ability to complete their college educations will be yanked out because they are not overly bright. Or, students who are not really working in college, but are just biding their time and having a four- or five-year vacation from responsibility, should not be granted any special privileges anyway.

What is ironic, though, is that as soon as the bottom quarter is drafted, a new bottom quarter will consist of those formerly in the third quarter. Depending on how long the war continues — and it appears that it will continue for some time — no student can feel completely secure in college.

What this means to a university is that enrollments will decrease and bond payments will not be able to be met. Currently, this University, for example, receives appropriations partially on enrollment. But more important, it receives student fees from such buildings as the Illini Union, the Assembly Hall and the Student Services building. The bonds which finance these buildings have been figured according to enrollment projections as a guaranteed amount of revenue collectable.

A university's only alternative to this, to meet bond payments, is to lower standards to keep enrollment up.

Ironically, the education bill signed by the President late last year intended to admit more students while maintaining high standards.

It is hoped, though, that the Selective Service is not intended to draft students simply out of a reaction to the protests against the draft and the war. Twelve students who participated in anti-draft demonstrations at the University of Michigan have already been reclassified 1-A simply because of their participation.

Local draft boards are usually made up of upstanding pillars of the community, that is, merchants who have made enough money to want to serve free on a commission that will grant them a public service image. These are usually quite conservative people who react violently to the programs of the "New Left."

Whether or not one agrees with the anti-draft demonstrators—and we don's—there is no reason to group all college students into a monolithic category with them and induct them into the services. For that matter, there is no reason to revoke the Fifth Amendment and draft critics of government policy.

We hope that when the first college students are drafted there will be good reason for so doing. Until the 1 million 1-Ys (exempt for slight physical defects or mental inadequacies) are re-examined the "paper reservists" are called up and some National Guard units finally are forced to do some soldiering, students should be given time to finish their education before being drafted.

And that's a pretty good reason to study for finals this month, isn't it?

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Labor Deserves Help

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In a recent column, Barry Jacobs calls on the government to blow the whistle on "excessive" labor-union demands. When demands are in fact excessive, this is reasonable, but Jacobs uses the wrong yardstick for excessiveness. He thinks Labor deserves no more consideration than Big Business.

This is extremely naive. It shows that Jacobs grasps neither the evils of property rights nor the gravity of the corporate menace to our way of life. The truth is that Labor deserves a heck of a lot more consideration than Business.

In the first place, it is obviously much better, other things being equal, to increase wages rather than profits when productivity increases, since in our capitalist system increases in profits go not to the government, but mainly to a small, wealthy elite of fat-cat stockholders, and thus exacerbate inequality of income, while increases in wages benefit low-income groups and reduce this inequality.

In the second place, Business is held in much higher esteem than it should be. The rise of labor unions and government intervention have greatly curtailed the exploitation and insecurity of the pre-FDR era, but we should never forget that Business has a strong, inherent tendency toward these evils.

We should also become more conscious of the fact that Business is the wellspring of conformity and excessive competition-mindedness, of a whole complex of values which pervade every aspect of our culture and stink. Pressing and rasping inescapably upon the consciousnesses of all our people, these values degrade us into a nation of melancholy buffoons.

Only if we realize this can we hope to brighten the spiritual side of our lives. Can man live by bread alone? Surely not: Business should be kept under close surveillance and restraint, not extolled and coddled. It's time to redecorate our pantheon.

When the final buzzer sounded yesterday it didn't really feel like the game had ended. Puzzlement, weariness, shock and just plain anger are shown on the faces of UNC cheerleaders and students in these pictures. The Duke game meant a lot, and we fought hard, but the team was no less disappointed than those who watched them, on TV and in Carmichael Auditorium. UNC gets one more chance with the Blue Devils in Durham on Feb. 26.

A Lull In Births At End Of Year

A 16-hour lull in the arrival of newborn babies occurred at N. C. Memorial Hospital at year-changing time.

No babies were born from about 2 p.m. Dec. 31 until about 6 a.m. on Jan. 1.

The last arrival of 1965 was Robert Briggs Watson III, the 6 pound 1 ounce son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Watson Jr. of 734-A Raleigh Rd., Chapel Hill. He is the Watson's first child.

Sixteen hours later Brent Ashley Morris, a 6 pound, 11 ounce boy became the first child for Mr. and Mrs. James Gary Morris of 204 Hunter Place, Carrboro.

The Blue Dukes are still number one and with just reason. They beat the Tar Heels of the University of North Carolina.

A determined Tar Heel team could not find that spark it needed to unseat the Blue Devils as best team in the nation.

"I was disappointed in the team's playing," Coach Dean Smith said, "but not in their effort."

Smith continued saying, "(Jack) Marin couldn't be stopped and when we had to give up a shot, he was there to take it."

Marin was singled out by Coach Smith as the most underrated player in the conference not getting the publicity deserved of such a fine athlete.

The Tar Heels were not sharp yesterday afternoon, but the Dukes were ready and rarin' to go. Long shots, short shots, rebounds, ball handling — they could do no wrong. When one of the tall Blue Devils got into trouble, another giant came off the bench to take his place. With that type of team, anyone is going to have trouble.

Although Duke won, they don't deserve all the praise. Miller looked terrific under the boards and he and Bennett played the middle nicely.

"I think this is the best game of Miller's brief career," Coach Smith said, "and Bennett was hustling all the time."

In elaborating further at his press conference, Coach Smith said, "Bob Lewis played a fine defensive game." Lewis, the nation's second best scorer was held to 18 points.

Coach Smith in talking with reporters after the game said, "The Duke team seems to have gotten up for all the big games which include UCLA, Michigan and North Carolina.

"They just didn't show any signs of pressure that I had expected from the number one team in the nation," Smith said.

The Vic Bubas squad carries an 11-1 overall record for the season, but that record doesn't mean the Blue Devils can't meet defeat, and remember North Carolina fans — Carolina has another crack at the Dukes on February 26.

So on February 26: "Go Heels Go, Beat Dook."

Duke Pushed By Courageous Play

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The man who coaches the top-ranked college basketball team in America walked away from his dressing room down to the end of a long hall, and then turned to face a triple-handful of sportswriters who had just seen his team beat Carolina for its ninth straight win.

"Gentlemen," Duke's Vic Bubas began, "I would say that we played this game very courageously today. By that I mean that we met every challenge—each time they pulled close, we were able to get key baskets and hold the lead."

He was quickly asked about the play of his top two scorers.

"Jack (Marin) and Bob (Verga) both had excellent shooting days, he acknowledged, but we haven't had a real good overall game like this one since before Christmas, and we were real pleased to have it come today."

"But," he said, "one of the main things was that we lost two ball games to Carolina last year, and we really wanted to come back from that."

In the first half, Marin carried Duke for the most part, hitting almost everything he threw up for 14 points. Then Verga, who had 10 poins at the midway rest began to bomb after action resumed, and poured in 17 to enable the Devils to hold and slightly expand their lead to its final reach of 88-77.

Another factor—a very big factor—which Bubas made significant mention of was the fact that Duke was able to convert sixteen out of 17 free throws in the second period. For the game, they scored on eighteen of 21 chances. From the floor, Duke shot 57.4 per cent, and Bubas said of this two-pronged accuracy:

"When you hit that well, you're going to win most of the time."

Duke went with a man-for-man defense until center Mike Lewis drew his fourth foul with 14:56 left in the game. At that juncture, Duke held a 50-47 lead.

"We switched to a zone then," said Bubas, "and thev (UNC) seemed to have more trouble with that than they did with the man-for-man."

Even at that, Carolina held the Duke lead in the three-to-six point range until Duke got two bombs from Verga and six straight points to open it up at 79-66 with 3:56 left.

"Bobby hit a lot of clutch baskets for us down the stretch," Bubas stated, "and that's one reason why he is so valuable."

Duke is pretty well known for its ability to successfully execute a pressing defense, and Bubas was asked why he didn't use it at all during this game.

"We always go with what is giving satisfactory results," he answered, "and today we felt pretty confident with the man-for-man and the zone."

As was expected, Bubas assigned his 6-6 forward Jack Marin to the task of guarding UNC's Bob Lewis, who carried a 31.8 average into the game. Lewis came out of the scrap with 18 points, and this is what Bubas had to say about that:

"We always give Jack the job of guarding the opposing team's top scorer when we run a man-for-man. Before this game we challenged him to cover Lewis and 'hold him down,' and I think he did an excellent job in holding him below his average."

Bubas also commended his other forward, Bob Riedy, for his job on Larry Miller.

But Vic, Miller hit over his 23-point average.

"I still consider the job which Riedy did on Miller to be a real fine one, considering the ball player that Miller is."

"Both Miller and Lewis are devastating when they get close to the basket. They get a lot of squiriming, twisting shots and make a good percentage. They're both fine basketball players."

"Carolina played their press well," he said. "We had faced the press before, but today we had more trouble finding the open man than usual. But we hit from outside well."

"I have said before that I think Carolina is the most underrated team in the conference, and after today I'll say it again.

Even with the fine start of the varsity — nine victories in their first 12 games — there seems to be a "wait 'till next year" attitude on campus.

The frosh have registered six straight victories with little more effort than required to lace shoes and pull on "Carolina Blue" and white basketball togs.

Just how good are they?

"We haven't had any real tough games as yet so I'll have to wait a while to pass judgement," said

Just how good are they?

"We haven't had any real tough games as yet so I'll have to wat a while to pass judgement," said Coach Larry Brown, a former Tar Heel star performer now in his first year of coaching at his alma mater.

Maybe we don't have the super-star such as Lewis or Miller, but we have six boys I think will help the varsity.

Let's take a closer look at these top six performers:

RUSTY CLARK — (6-11 center) "It has been a long time since we have had a boy this size in school," said Brown. "At 6-11, he doesn't have the moves of Lewis and Miller, but he is an outstanding defensive player for his size and a surprisingly good passer. He can be as good as he wants to be — if he works."

BILL BUNTING — (6-8 forward) "When Coach Dean Smith recruited Bunting, he was impressed with his speed and quickness," said Brown. "You can teach a boy many things — but speed and quickness are God-given. Bunting will have to improve physically (gain weight), but with Bill's desire, he should be an outstanding prospect."

JOE BROWN — (6-5 forward) "Brown is probably the hardest worker of them all," he said. "He gives 100 per cent each game. He will be a little small for a college forward, but he has been tremendous on the boards so far. He needs more confidence in himself."

DICK GRUBAR — (6-3 guard) "Grubar had about 80 scholarship offers when he was in high school. Coach Smith feels that he can be the superstar of the club. Of course he may not get 30 points every game — although he can score — but he is an excellent defensive player, sees exceptionally well, and can make that big pass when it is needed. He's also extremely agile for his size — people don't realize he is 6-3."

GERALD TUTTLE — (guard) "Gerald is the type of boy we have needed here for quite a while — completely unselfish. He is much like Grubar in that he sees real well and can come up with that big pass play."

JIM BOSTICK — (6-3 guard, forward) "Bostick probably had to make the biggest adjustment of all," said Brown. "We use him both at guard and forward. Bostick is not really the sixth man because I consider all six of these boys as starters. His versatility has meant a great deal to the team. We have been getting into foul trouble and when we put Bostick in he doesn't let us down one bit."

Brown: Thrilled By Fan Support

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Larry Brown extended his arms at full length in front of his body and popped the tab top off a can of coke.

But before he even took time for the pause that refreshes he exclaimed—with a cool but wide-eyed enthusiasm which is his alone:

"Oh gee, I was just thrilled to death with the crowd tonight. They gave us tremendous support and tonight it was really needed."

Brown's Tar Babies had just put their sixth straight win in the books by stopping Duke's spirited threat by 78-65. It was a game in which they had shown flashes of brilliance in some instances, but which had been dominated by ragged play, seeing them suffer more than 20 floor mistakes—at least twice their usual quota.

But Brown wasn't through with his first topic of comment yet.

"I could never say enough about all the students (official estimate: 4,500) who came to see us play. Those standing ovations really fired the boys up, and I can tell you they did something to me too. It was really great."

The self-styled Long Island native—who departed from his usual navy blue suit to don a flash burgundy and white sport coat for this one—stood near the shower room door and watched his boys climb out of their sweat-soaked uniforms.

A somber atmosphere prevailed, being saved from absolute dejection only by the fact that the foe had been bested.

"These fellas really gave it a fighting effort tonight," Brown said. "Maybe we weren't as sharp as we have been, but they were really ready to play when we left there before the game. Then when we got out there (to the court) the crowd lifted them prety high."

When the crowd drowned out the public address announcer at the player introductions, Brown just pulled his boys off the bench one at a time and sent them out. And when Gerald Tuttle met the er four starters at center-court, they almost yanked each other's arms out of their sockets as they piled up hands.

At the game's end, they had shot for 54.2 per cent to Duke's 36.4, outrebounded the Imps by a slight 52-45 margin, and meshed their play for 31 assists—even slightly above their usual total.

But they had misplayed 13 times and Duke had swiped 11 passes for an error total of 24. And they had continued their atrocious foul shooting, making only 14 out of 31 tires.

Rusty Clark had missed eight of 12 first half shots, including several pokes from outside and sat out eight minutes of the second half with four fouls. He could not be consoled by the fact that he hit each of his four second half shots and collected 10 rebounds and scored 17 points plus handing out four assists and making three steals.

Dick Grubar had engineered seven assists, four outright steals and scored nine points while riding the bench for 12 minutes with his first foul difficulty of the season. He just pelted the pile of sweaty uniforms with a sock, shook his head and headed for the shower when congratulated, obviously feeling he hadn't done his part.

Joe Brown played brilliantly for the third consecutive game, scoring 11 out of 15 UNC tallies in the opening nine minutes of the second period, finished with 14 points and eight rebounds. In the past three games, Joe has hit 21-of-28 shots while averaging 16.3 points and eight rebounds per game.

Bill Bunting led UNC in rebounding with 11, and hit 10-of-16 field goals in his total of 24 points—his high for the season.

Gerald Tuttle matched Grubar with seven assists and continued to be the frosh version of John Yokley with his floor play and six steals. He scored eight points.

The Tar Babies were played point-for-point in the early going, but a basket by Bunting at the end of a fast break gave them a 15-14 lead at 10:29 of the first half, and they never trailed again.

The lead was 38-29 at the half, but the strong rebounding and scoring of 6-7 Duke forward Fred Lind early in the final period pulled the DU boys to within 45-41 at 13:51.

Then at 10:03, Duke center and team leader Steve Vandenberg, who was held to eight points and three rebounds by Clark, fouled out and the Duke bench drew a technical foul.

Bunting then hit the penalty shot, plus two free throws and two quick baskets to drop the Imps hopelessly arrears at 62-47, with 7:17 left. UNC's biggest lead was 17 points.

Disregarding everyting else, Brown said in finality:

"We won and we beat Duke —and that's the only thing that counts."

Thinclads Beat State, Tie Duke

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

The Carolina thinclads opened their Indoor season in the Tin Can with a win over N. C. State and a tie with Duke. The final outcome was decided in the last relay which Duke won by inches, and Carolina had to settle with a 50-50-25 score.

As in past years, the running events were the strong point for Carolina. However, the field events showed great improvement as Garry Iverson won the broad jump with a leap of 21'6".

Lester Hyder and Bill Busby showed unexpected depth in the pole vault as they finished right behind Duke's Homer who won the event with a vault of 12'6". Duke scored eight points in the shot put as Conference Champion Bob Stewart won impressively with a fine put of 55'8 1-2".

Carolina gained ground in the dashes as Jon Levin ran a very fast 6.4 in the sixty defeating Duke footballer Dave Dunaway. State scored a victory in the 70 yd. Hurdles as Steve Corn won in 9.4. Corn was the major point-getter for N. C. State as he also placed in the broad jump and high jump.

The distances were dominated by Duke and Carolina, and State only placed in the mile. Sophomore Mike Williams ran a fine tactical race against State's Mel Woodcock and sprinted away on the last turn to win in 4.26.5. Carolina's slim lead was increased in the 440 yd. dash where Ed Daw kicked home in 52.2 ahead of Blue Devil Rod Stewart. In both the mile and 440 Carolina picked up two additional points with the third places of Russell Putnam and Dave Kropelnicki.

Sophomore Bill Bassett won the 880 yd. run going away as he lead from the gun and finished ahead of Duke's Jim Zodda and Billy Weldein in the respectable time of 2.02.2. In the two mile Captain Jim Meade ran against Duke's Soph sensational, Paul Rogers. Meade took the lead and held it through the first mile and a half; however, with three laps to go, Rogers sprinted into the lead and ran away from his competitor. The time of 9.34 earned Rogers the second best effort of the day.

The mile relay was the deciding factor of the meet, which Carolina had to win in order to beat the Blue Devils. Holding only a two point lead the thinclads showed tremendous effort, but Ed Daw, Carolina's anchorman, could not catch Dunaway and lost by a foot in the finest effort of the meet. Thus, Carolina had to settle with a 50-50-25 win and tie in its first triangular meet of the early Indoor season.

Talbott Receives Award

Danny Talbott, named earlier by the Atlantic Coast Conference Sportswriters Association as the ACC's "Player of the Year," received the official award yesterday in a half-time presentation at the UNC-Duke game.

Alex Crockett of the Durham Morning Herald, an executive member of the association, presented the award to the Tar Heel junior who combined passing (1,084 yards) and rushing (397 yards) to lead the ACC in total yardage.

Danny also smashed the single-game total yardage record at UNC, rolling up 318 yards against Georgia to pass Charlie Justice's old mark of 304. His 70 points (7 TD's, 13 PAT's, 5 FG) placed him second to Justice in seasonsal scoring at UNC.

Another Talbott statistic for the year includes 103 pass completions which tied a school record.

He also was the All-ACC first baseman in baseball, hitting for a .364 average as a sophomore.

John Lotz Will Become Familiar Face At UNC

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

Lotz isn't a household name in Carolina sports, but it soon will be.

Whenever there's a time out in Carmichael Auditorium he stands quietly and attentively behind a cluster of athletes. John Lotz isn't in the spotlight, but he shoulders all the work that goes with a college coaching job. And he shoulders it happily.

Coach Lotz is a recruiter. He journeys to high school gyms all over the country in search of basketball talent.

"We're mainly after boys who live within a thousand miles of Chapel Hill," the coach said, "but we'll reach out to the west coast if we hear about a player whose really interested in us. The ACC allows us to give five scholarships each year.

"The final selection of the five athletes is done by the three coaches. We're not after only the 6'10" ball players. Each boy must have speed and quickness. The final decision is based on those who will play and help the team."

John Lotz is also a scout. Early in December he logged a lot of miles in planes and rented cars. Between ball games he flew to Columbus, Ohio; Richmond, Va.; and Tallahasse, Florida in order to help Dean Smith devise game plans against upcoming teams.

But first and foremost, John Lotz is a coach. His big job is to teach, inspire, and develop the boys in blue.

What do the players think of him?

"He's a tremendous guy, and he's doing a great job," says Bobby Lewis.

As for Lotz's impression of his new job: "I couldn't be happier. I'm pleased to be a part of such a great University. I've never worked with a better group of boys. I have a great deal of respect for Dean Smith. He gets total effort out of his boys. The freshmen team is characterized by its very unselfish play. This is inspired by Larry Brown's example, and it's a real tribute to him.

"I really look forward to the rest of this season. Next year will take care of itself."

Carolina did a great job in recruiting last year. And one of its finest catches was the tall man in the dark suit, John Lotz.

'A Fellow Can Really Think Here'

Note: The following story is a log written by Steve Lail, a journalism major from Mickory, while he spent the night in jail with permission of the Chapel Hill Police Department:

By STEVE LAIL
Special to the DTH

Sunday night I was a jailbird in the Chapel Hill City Jail and things went mighty slow for me. Here's what happened.

7:45 p.m.—Just signed in. A young officer with crew cut brought me downstairs. Didn't like the way he locked the door. He smiled—that helps some.

8 p.m.—There's three colored men next door. They seem awfully happy. I started whistling and they stopped talking. Hope I'm not disturbing them. What could they do about it anyhow?

My cell sleeps four and is very clean—in fact, much cleaner than my dorm room which sleeps three . . . has sink and commode. . . warm and well-lighted. . . there's a shower outside but I think I'll skip it tonight.

8:15—Awful quiet now . . . sure could use some company; but you can't be too sure about the caliber of prisoners nowadays so I won't ask for a "cell-mate."

8:45—Don't believe Billy the Kid could break out of here—nothing like a good sturdy jail . . . don't even have a tin cup to rake across the bars . . . matter of fact—there are no moveable objects in here . . .

9:15—First time I ever wanted Monday to hurry up and come. . . can't get over the cleanliness of this place.

10:00—A fellow can really think in here: final exams, speech to give Tuesday, book report due Wednesday, bank account low, Army drafting college students, tuition and room rent due, 18 hours next semester, food in Lenoir Hall—oh, maybe I'd better not think too much.

10:15 — Chief (William) Blake's a good guy, sorta like Matt Dillon . . . nothing like having the law on your side . . . just hope they don't forget to come and get me in the morning.

10:30—This cell, No. 606, is held together by 366 bolts, 62 iron bars and two solid walls all painted an "off-green" . . . floor is grey . . . must have been a novice interior decorator!

10:45—Those guys next door haven't gotten over Saturday night yet . . . 5 o'clock since I last ate. . .

11:00—Officer came downstairs to check on me as if I were going somewhere. Suicide report just came over radio.

11:30—Just talked to men next door. Real nice guys . . . staying til Tuesday. One is wearing a UNC jacket but isn't a student.

12:00 — Monday morning now. Maybe I can get some sleep. "O.K. fellow, what about knocking off with the jokes. . . got three classes tomorrow.

12:15—Oh no, all three are snoring. Can't sleep. . . never was much for sleeping in the clink. Pity a chain smoker—cigarettes aren't allowed.

12:30—6 hours til breakfast. Can't sleep . . . bunk isn't getting any softer . . . Who said "Stone walls do not a prison make?" Poet Lovelace undoubtedly didn't ever get locked up !

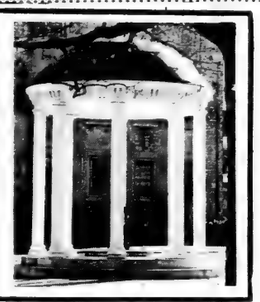
12:45—Prisoners have it good here . . . 3 meals a day, nice room and bunks . . . but no T.V., radio, easy chair, hamburgers, Playboys, women, letters from home, or dates.

1:00 a.m.—"Hey Chief, Chief. On second thought maybe I'd better run on back to the dorm . . . I've got a lot of homeowrk . . . Hey Chief, can you hear me?"

1:30 a.m. —sure is good to be back in the dorm. Now where's that soc. book?!

CAROLINA STYLE

with Ed Freakley



Now, Maybe You'll Study

The Selective Service may soon be drafing you if your Q.P. average falls into the bottom fourth of your class.

Seniors should have better than a 2.041 quality point average, juniors should rank abouve a 1.897 average, and the sophomore needs better than a 1.743 average. Freshmen rank at a low of 1.647. These are last years top figures in the bottom fourth of the classes.

Seniors will be effected most because the draft will begin with them and work down to the freshmen if necessary.

It is no longer just a matter of avoiding the flunk-out. You must now avoid the draft before the flunk-out. There must be a better way to give students the incentive to make good grades, but for the time being this might do the trick.

Good luck on your exams, boys.—Judy Love

Attention All Coeds

Better watch your step coeds.

According to a 1940 town ordinance, "all dogs in the town of Chapel Hill shall be confined and shall not be permitted on the streets, sidewalks, or in any public place in the town of Chapel Hill, except when held by a leash."

The law also says that any police officer has the right to shoot or impound any stray dog.

* * *

In 1871 the town passed an ordinance against hot-rodders who "rode a horse through the streets at an unusually rapid speed."

As late as 1942 a law was passed saying "no person shall ride a horse or horses on the sidewalks."

The laws are still on the books, but the dogs haven't stopped roaming the streets.—Tate Rogers

Gnash's 'Nut Ward'

Maybe this poet who calls himself "Oddman Gnash" is trying to mock Ogden Nash, or maybe the masterpiece below was written by Nash himself (it's in his style).

All we know is the poem's author doesn't think too highly of the Air Force Academy.

Blue Zoo! Blue Zoo!
How I love you! How I hate you!
All you are is something gnu!
Your scholarship? Phoo!

Aluminum U! Aluminum U!
Just what the hell are you?
All you are is something gnu!
The Disneyland of the American U!

Tin Tent! Tin Tent!
Yer holy glory's came and went!
Yet Honor System's broke and bent!
To the nut ward you should be sent.

Alas, We're Not Alone

Namelessness at this large university isn't limited just to IBM-plagued students. Buildings can also be anonymous.

Journalism student Mickey Henkel discovered recently that Whitehead Hall once stood 26 years without a sign on it.

"We sometimes can't see the forest for the trees since we work so closely with these buildings," remarked Russel Perry of the Residence Hall Office.

BATMAN, ALONG WITH his faithful companion Robin, has declared war on television gangsters. They will apear twice a week—complete with Batmobile and shaved legs—on ABC television to combat "master criminals, jaywalkers, litterbugs, parking scofflaws, and mean old ladies in tennis shoes."

Batman Leaves Comic Books, Declares War On TV Hoods

BY JOHN GREENBACKER

"That heroic scourge of the underworld, that caped crusader, Batman, sets out to do battle with the forces of evil in Gotham City.

"Premieres Wednesday, January 12, at 7:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time," the announcer gushed excitedly.

Millions of weary television viewers wiped the numbing luminous mist from their eyes last week and turned to their companions in front of "the tube."

"What, are they kidding us?"

"It's gotta be a joke!"

No, friends, it's not a joke. Batman, "whose very name strikes fear into the hearts of villanious villains everywhere," has leaped from the gaudy pages of "Code Approved" comic books onto the gaudy face of the television screen.

According to the ABC press releases, Batman and his youthful companion Robin will vanquish assorted heavies such as "The Riddler," "The Penguin," "The Joker," "Mr. Freeze" and "Zelda the Great" for a half an hour, two days a week.

Batman, who in private life is actually multi-millionaire Bruce Wayne, has dedicated his life to combating criminals and easing the duties of Gotham's Police Commissioner Gordon.

He makes his television debut complete with that "atom-powered, parachute - braked, multi-weaponed four - wheeled arsenal, the Batmobile."

Television's Batman will be played by Adam West.

He looks very much like his comic strip prototype, with peaked cape, leering mask and superbly shaven legs, except that West is obviously not as muscular as the old Batman we knew and loved so well.

Robin is played by Burt Ward, a pretty young fellow who sadly bears out Jules Feiffer's recent observation in "Playboy" that some psychologists classify the relationship between Batman and Robin as homosexual.

But we all love them, platonically, of course, and it will be good to see them on television in spite of their faults.

With cries of "gleeps!" and "holy barracuda," these two invincible defenders of the right should provide the catharsis millions of frustrated Americans are seeking in a modern world.

Direct U.S. Contact Made With N. Viets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House disclosed yesterday — for the first time since President Johnson launched his current peace offensive — that there has been a direct U.S. contact with the government of North Viet Nam.

Beyond stating this, Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers declined to lift the secrecy which has blanketed U. S. diplomatic communications in Johnson's seach for a path to a negotiated peace in South Viet Nam.

The U. S. peace campaign, accompanied by a halt in the bombing of North Viet Nam, began at Christmas time.

The disclosure of direct contact came at an afternoon White House news brieting when Moyers was asked about three Americans who made an unauthorized trip to Hanoi and returned to report there had been no contact between the North Vietnamese and American governments.

"They are incompletely informed," Moyers said.

Asked if that meant there has been direct contact with Hanoi, Moyers replied:

"That's a safe deduction."

It was understood that the U.S. — North Vietnamese contact was made at an official level sometime ago. Just how and where was not announced.

And as far as could be ascertained from Johnson Administration sources tonight, Hanoi was yet to indicate in any way a willingness to start negotiations on a Viet Nam settlement.

The same lack of a favorable response so far had been previously reported after U.S. efforts through third parties to persuade North Viet Nam to come to the conference table.

However, despite harsh public accusations against the United States which continued to emanate from Communist capitals today the White House was keeping the door open for negotiations. U. S. sources declined to take the Communists' public statements as final and conclusive rejection of the idea of negotiations.

Sen. Mike Mansfield, D - Mont., the Senate majority leader, said "All I can say is it is a very hopeful sign, and it is the first sign of contact with Hanoi."

Mansfield told a reporter he had had no official word on the development "but it speaks well for the intensive efforts made by President Johnson not only over the past two weeks, but over the last eight months."

Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., who accompanied Mansfield on a recent fact - finding trip to South Viet Nam, said he knew nothing of the contact, but commented:

"Even if I did, I wouldn't want to say anything about it and thus complicate the prospect of further contacts. I hope it is true."

Welch Coming To UNC Forum

John Birch Society founder Robert Welch will speak to UNC students here on either March 11 or 13, according to Carolina Forum Chairman George Nicholson III.

Welch will be the third nationally prominent figure to speak on campus under the sponsorship of the Forum this year.

Other Forum speakers were U. S. House of Representatives majority Whip Hale Boggs (D-La.) and U. S. Representative Charles Weltner (D-Ga.).

The 66 - year - old retired fudge maker and professional anti - communist graduated Phi Beta Kappa from UNC in 1916.

Welch was a member of the Dialectic Senate as a student here.

He spent a year at the Naval Academy and two years at Harvard Law School before going into business. He led his class at both institutions before dropping out.

A former board member of the National Association of Manufacturers, Welch founded the Birch Society in 1959.

The society is named for army Captain John Morrison Birch, an officer in the wartime Office of Strategic Services who was killed by Red Chinese guerrillas in 1945.

Birch Society members claim he was the first American to be killed by the communists.

India's Shastri Dies From Heart Attack

TASHKENT, U.S.S.R. (AP) —India's Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri died yesterday, a few hours after he signed a limited agreement with Pakistan to pull back their opposing forces. He was 61.

The 5-foot-2, 110-pound Indian leader was felled by a heart attack, the Soviet news agency Tass said.

He had a history of heart disease, having been stricken by a serious attack in 1959. He became ill again in June, 1964, shortly after he succeeded Jawaharlal Nehru as leader of India's millions.

Shastri was to have seen President Johnson next month on a postponed visit to the United States. Pakistan's President Mohammed Ayub Khan, with whom Shastri signed the "Declaration of Tashkent," saw President Johnson in Washington last month.

Shastri had been scheduled to fly back to New Delhi to-

Committee Sets Campaign Rules

RICK STOFF
Special to the DTH

New legislation governing campaign practices for the upcoming spring elections was drawn up by the Fair Election Practices Committee yesterday.

The meeting, attended by Elections Board Chairman Alvin Tyndall and leaders of the University and Student parties, was held on the recommendation of former SP chairman Frank Hodges.

Hodges made the suggestion in the wake of last November's Morrison Hall lewd film scandal. Both parties accused each other of unfair campaign practices after the incident.

The possibility of ballot box stuffing and falsification of ballots were the major complaints of party leaders in attendance.

The Elections Board has suggested a new system of voting for this spring which will employ the use of IBM cards to prevent mistakes in counting and marking ballots.

The committee also approved a bill to require each student voter to put his name, ID number and time of vote on a list in addition to filling out his ballot and signing the pledge.

The committee also outlined schedule of speeches of the big four candidates at the separate residence colleges for the spring elections.

Chairmen Jim Little of the SP and Neil Thomas of the UP endorsed the committee's plan to classify the Residence Halls into nine groups to hear the addresses of candidates for the offices of president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer of the student body.

These meetings will be announced at least a week ahead of time to the dorm residents and the speeches of the candidates will be limited to allow for a long question and answer period afterwards.

The committee also decided on rules for the practices of campaigns on campus which have caused trouble between the wrties in the past.

The tearing down of posters is an honor code violation which has been lightly regarded in previous elections.

"The only way to solve this problem is for the party leaders to police their own constituents and specifically tell all party supporters that there are to be no posters torn down.

"If one of the party members is seen doing this the party will tell him that his services are no longer desired by the party.", suggested former UP legislative floor leader Don Carson.

"This system has worked well in the past within our party, and if both parties agree to do this the problem may be solved." he said.

UNC Student Dies In Car Crash

A 22-year-old University sophomore died Sunday afternoon of injuries received in a one-car crash between Smithfield and Princeton just off US-70.

Roy Stewart Narron, of Selma died at 4 p.m., two hours after the accident, in Selma's Johnston Memorial Hospital.

Narron is the fourth Carolina student to die following an auto accident since school opened in September.

According to State Trooper J. P. Carter, who invesitgated the accident, the car in which Narron was riding was driven by Linwood Earl Ward, 19 also of Selma.

Trooper Carter said the car veered off to the right on a curve on a rural road eight miles east of Smithfield. He said the car overturned at lease once and landed in a ditch.

Ward, and two other passengers, both of Selma, Robert Eli Kennedy, 19, and Jerry F. Ward, 15, and brother of the driver, were listed in fair condition yesterday in Johnston Memorial Hospital. All suffered head injuries.

Narron, according to Carter, was riding in the back seat of the 1955 model car when the accident occured.

Linwood Ward, driver of the car, was indicted yesterday for manslaughter. He will appear in Selma Recorder's Court.

Exam Quiet Hours

Quiet hours for men's dorms will last 24 hours starting Jan. 16 and will be in effect until exams are over, according to the Men's Residence Council.

Quiet hours will include weekends.

Students breaking the rules will be dealth with severely according to the MRC.

Punishment for offenders will include official reprimand. fines, and probation.

At present quiet hours are from 7 p.m. to 8 a.m.

Resident Advisors

Applications for the position of Resident Advisor in men's residence halls will be available in the Dean of Men's Office until February 15.

Between 50 and 60 men are needed to fill openings next fall as College Masters, Head Resident Advisors and Floor Advisors.

Applicants should be seniors or graduate students, although some juniors will be selected. All men considering the position should have a high grade point average and an interest in student government and affairs.

College Masters will assume general responsibility for all facets of activity within the college and act as supervisor to Resident and Floor Advisors. All Masters should hold a baccalaureate degree.

Head Resident Advisors will resume responsibility for all activities within the house. Head Resident Advisors should also hold a baccalaureate degree.

Floor Advisors are responsible for the residents of the floor to which they are assigned. Counseling freshmen and other students is part of a Floor Advisor's job. No degree is required of a Floor Advisor.

Pay ranges from $625 yearly for Floor Advisors to a maximum of $2,500 yearly for College Masters.

Interested students should get applications from Fred W. Schroeder, Jr., 02 South Building.

Burgess To Sing

Mary Burgess, soprano soloist hailed by New York critics for her "marvelous way with Mozart," will appear in concert tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Appearing with Miss Burgess will be the Varsity Men's Glee Club, which will accompany Miss Burgess in Brahms' Rhapsodie for alto and male chorus.

Miss Burgess, a graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, has been a member of the New York City Opera and has made New York appearances at the New School in a Mozart concert, at Town Hall in Bach contatas and in Philharmonic Hall for a recital.

She is now a member of the Metropolitan Opera Studio.

Fair Practices At UNC

If exams be with us, can elections be far behind? Political maneuvering never completely dies out on this campus, but the pace is quickening as potential candidates are now seeking and being sought.

The most constructive aspect of this yearly phenomenon is the Fair Election Practices Committee's meeting yesterday. Representatives from the University and Student parties met for a frank and productive discussion. Hopefully the atmosphere of cooperation which surrounded that meeting will last throughout the long campaigns before us.

Those campaigns are, in fact, too long. As a survivor of last year's spring election, we have since contended that the candidates are forced to appear at too many residence hall meetings which are too long and offer too little evidence of influencing any votes. Most candidates could use those hours spent in "discussions" much more effectively in door-to-door campaigning.

The committee suggested yesterday that those meetings be minimized and organized through residence colleges. We have advocated and still advocate this sort of arrangement.

Other useful suggestions were made yesterday, and we expect more in the future. The committee, organized after protests against the use of "questionable" campaign tactics in fall elections, is performing a service to the student body and student politics. Our commendation to co-chairmen Jim Little (SP) and Neil Thomas (UP), committee members Phil Kirstein, David Keil, Don Carson, Steve Hockfield, Bob Wilson and Bill Withrop and to Elections Board Chairman Alvin Tyndall.

Some Things Never Change

The life of the student has changed considerably since the turn of the century, but the same problems are still facing the University. With this in mind, we reprint the following news story from the first issue of The Tar Heel, February 23, 1893.

The following members of the legislature composing the visitation committee arrived at the University on a special train Friday morning, February 3rd.

Messrs. Battle, chairman; Cheek, Aycoke, James, Pott, of the senate; the Messrs. Holt (chairman) Euse, Parker, Starnes, Walker, Ward, of the house.

After breakfasting, the regular chapel exercises were attended, then visits were made to the reading room, libraries and various lecture rooms where classes were assembled. The numerous laboratories were inspected as well as some of the student's rooms. In the afternoon, meetings of both the societies were held and the gentlemen who were not alumni were made honorary members. Just after prayers the boys called repeatedly for speeches from our visitors, a majority of whom responded most felicitously and gave words of encouragement for the future outlook of the university, from a legislative appropriation standpoint. All saw the need of a sufficient appropriation to fully equip, this the most useful and important of all State property, and give to a university of whose past brilliant record and whose future prospects are such as would make any State in the union proud to be the possessor of such an heritage to hand to posterity, a sufficient appropriation to put the university on a financial basis equal to its rapid expansion and growth. When some of the committee expressed their deep regret at not having had an opportunity of receiving an education, in their youth, we could not but feel that it was a duty that was owed to future generations, and which has been due to those that have passed away, that the supreme law making power in the State ought to make tuition at the university free to North Carolinians as is done at the University of Virginia to Virginians and the only way to do this is to appropriate a sufficient amount to keep the university up, until resources from outside States and the technical courses shall make itself sustaining, and too, we could not but think what a shame and loss it was to North Carolina, that it had failed to open the doors of the university, in the past to such sterling manhood as represented the legislature on the committee. The body of the students were well pleased with our friends if they are a fair sample of our legislators this year. North Carolina is in good hands. They know the needs of the University.

Students do not gather for prayer now, but on the whole not much has really changed. The University is still wheedling funds from a legislature that from time to time seems yet to be made up of men who did not have "an opportunity of receiving an education in their youth."

Fare Increase Needed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Andy Myeres' tirade on "Rabid Unionism" (DTH, Jan. 8) deserves a rebuttal. His thesis was that Mike Quill is irresponsibly leading 33,000 transit workers in a massive attempt to blackmail the people of New York and the Transit Authority into making an absurdly expensive settlement.

As evidence, he cited the T.A.'s press releases concerning its and the T.W.U.'s bargaining offers. Quill, Myers contended, has refused to submit the dispute to mediation. The facts are as follows. Quill is following rather than leading his union membership. Because the settlements Quill is following rather than leading his union membership. Because the settlements Quill is following rather than leading his union negotiated in the last several years have been too low to please much of the membership, he is under heavy internal pressure to hold out for a "fat" package this time.

The union, T.A. and mediators met continously for two months before the contract expired and the T.A. did not even make an offer until four hours before the deadline. But to fix the responsibility for this strike on either the T.W.U. or the T.A. is to misunderstand the complexities of this situation. Because the politicans are afraid and unwilling to raise the 15 cent transit fare (lowest in the country), the T.A. runs an annual deficit which is made up by various "under the table" payments from the city and state.

Both these governments are now deep in the red and thus the T.A. has nowhere to turn for the money necessary for an equitable settlement. It seems inevitable that the transit fare will eventually go up. Now is the time for Lindsay to show that he has courage, as well as looks and personality, by securing an immediate fare increase to lay the essential groundwork for a quick and satisfactory settlement.

Peyote Brings Trouble

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Students, arise! Follow the careful outline provided by Chief Blake for the Associated Press and turn on. Go out and buy those thrilling sunflower seeds or, better, go to the carefully plugged company which sells morning glory seeds and consume the prescribed spoonful of "seeds, which contain . . . the same drug found in peyote" (sic).

You will quickly conclude that either the police department or the beatniks are pulling your leg about drugs—especially if you get sick from the chlordane insecticide, which the article neglected to warn the morning glory lovers about.

No, my curious scholars, being a beatnik and "turning on" isn't the easy, undisciplined thing which you have been led to believe. Those drugs, ostensibly simply for "kicks," seldom fail to test the weak and indecisive by nausea and revolting taste (as one officer can attest after impulsively munching on a peyote button allegedly belonging to a local former student).

Enduring these effects, one goes on to an awesome experience which, when properly misguided, may even reveal him to himself. Lastly, after this physically and mentally harrowing experience, one may find his discipline tested by the ultimate harrassment, i.e., legal.

Don't feel too sorry for that beatnik, though. He obviously has a reason for facing all these trials and taking up a life of perpetual paranoia in a own where "beatnik files" are kept on those who walk the streets at odd hours.

A lot of misinformation circulates about that beatnik and his "kicks," but he is not going to set the record straight, because the first guy who walks up to him on the street and asks him what it's really all about will get a suspicious stare followed by a speedy and guarded disappearance.

The "beatnik" has a rough time, and perhaps one of his few lighthearted moments is provided by a press release describing how to turn on with sunflower seeds or a spoonful of Pearly Gates and Blue Heaven.

He's Proud Of South

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In response to the Dec. 14 editorial "Dixie Must Go" by Peter N. Thomas, I can safely say that I have seldom seen a more prejudiced view of the South than he presents. He speaks of the nauseating harangues of George Wallace, Robert Shelton, etc., while he, himself, biasly points to the South as being a land of "archaic ideas" and "lost causes."

Thomas' accusations, differing in intended victim only, sound like something one might hear at a Nazi rally. I was born in the South and I'm proud of her just as I am my nation as a whole. The "Stars 'n' Bars" and "Dixie" are as much a tradition of a modern South as the Liberty Bell and Bunker Bill are of our Twentieth Century America.

I agree with Mr. Thomas that to ban such Southern symbols as "Dixie" would be ludicrous. I disagree with the extreme absurdity of his statement in which he says that these symbols are themselves ludicrous. If "Dixie" is ludicrous, then "The Star Spangled Banner" is just as laughable. If the "Stars 'n' Bars" must be banned, the "Old Glory" must go also, for all are a part of a past we as a people of a democratic nation have inherited.

We Southerners display the "Stars 'n' Bars" and sing "Dixie" for the same reasons we fly the "Stars and Stripes" and sing "The Star Spangled Banner": Southern men and women have proudly died for both flags and just as proudly sing both songs.

We are Americans first, but we should never be banned by ignorant laws and frightened by biased, ignorant accusations into forgetting that we are Southerners also.

Dogpower Needs Rise, Army Resorts To Draft

The number of sentry dogs serving in the Armed Forces is being doubled from 1,000 to 2,000, says an Associated Press dispatch from Washington. Bigger U. S. Viet Nam commitments have supposedly caused the increase.

According to the AP story, the dogs are "recruited," but I have learned through well-informed sources high in the Johnson administration that this is not entirely true.

Already, hundreds of dogs across the country have been drafted.

I can now reveal the inside facts:

Once the Army started conscripting dogs, military officials soon discovered that many from West Virginia and Mississippi failed to meet the mental requirements for the service.

K-9 schools in these states were found lacking.

Over-stuffed French Poodles in New York couldn't pass the physical tests. Thus, the dog - walking companies, far from wasting money as first suspected, actually were fulfilling a vital national defense need by giving the dogs exercise

As the Viet Nam situation worsened, Kansas draft boards decided to remove the 2-S classifications of dogs who had completed their preliminary kenneling and who were now prepared to continue their educations. "We have found no evidence that graduate schooling is for the dogs," one draft board spokesman commented.

The Army carefully weeded out draftees with subversive political beliefs, although three Russian Wolf Hounds and ten Pekinese somehow slipped through the screening process.

Authorities in Illinois discovered a dog tag - forging operation going on at several kennels to help graduating seniors duck the draft.

Dogs favoring the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Viet Nam protested the use of metal tags, which, they felt, muzzled "the right to dissent" by being unburnable.

At times, problems of morale arose. Once, for instance, the Secretary of Defense unwisely declared: "I prefer bird dogs to kennel-fed dogs."

And there were frequent complaints about the "fat cats" back home who had not been drafted.

German Shepherds insisted they be given control over nuclear weapons.

French Poodles refused to participate in NATO exercises

Human soldiers asked the army to change their diets. "I prefer K9 rations to K rations," one serviceman declared.

"Lassie" and "Rin-Tin-Tin" helped Bob Hope entertain the troops in Viet Nam.

Dogs retired from the service complained they had not received a fair compensation for their patritoism. So they went to Washington to lobby for increased vet benefits.

The Student Speaks

Liberals Show Their Bigotry

By STANLEY GILLIAM

The last Carolina Forum, whose subject was the resurgence of the KKK, was quite revelatory in a way probably not foreseen by its planners:

The evening began in a jovial way with the showing of the hour - long CBS documentary on the Klan. It was quite a treat for the self - righteous "liberal intellectuals" among the audience whose convictions it upheld that the Klan is ignorant, hateful, and above all a big joke; the audience as a whole roared or giggled throughout the incriminating documentary.

With this as come-on, the audience expected verbal diatribes from the panel members which would boost their own puritan egoes. Therefore the remarks by Rep. Weltner and Major McClendon were well received, having heavily indicted the Klan and explaining why it should be destroyed.

Then Peter B. Young spoke and upset the liberal apple - cart. He claimed the existence of "white ghettoes" in which the "indigenous leaders" are usually Klansmen. (He observed these conditions first hand recently when he toured the state with Stewart Alsop in preparation for a story in the Saturday Evening Post.) And he laid partial blame for the resurgence of the Klan on governmental agencies who have not approached the poor whites as they have the Negroes.

It was refreshing to hear someone speak the undiluted truth for a change; but many individuals in the audience who probably consider themselves truth - seekers refused to admit that there was a particle of truth in what Young said. As a matter of fact, they thought that Young was impudent to have suggested such offensive things and to have stolen so much of hero Weltner's thunder.

Yet there were many in the audience who sided with Mr. Young; so many, in fact, that when Major McClendon flatly denied the existence of any "white ghettoes" he was hissed very loudly.

Another ray of light shone forth when Floyd McKissick stated his opposition to the HUAC investigation of the Klan. To Mr. Weltner's chagrin, the audience loudly applauded.

The biggest surprise of the evening was the appearance of a respectable - looking gentleman who intoduced himself as a clergyman and Klansman and requested permission to ask three questions of the panel members; they are paraphrased as follows:

1—Why is there not a Klansman on the panel?

2—How can the entire Klan be held responsible for the actions of a few of its members?

3—why does Congress not investigate some of the shady dealings of its own members?

Regardless of the relevance or content of, or ideas behind, these questions, I could not help admiring the gumption of that gentleman. But not the indignant liberals in the audience. At his every word they gasped as if the air had been defiled by his presence or as if their own characters were being undetermined by hearing his voice. They ogled widly at each other and whispered "Can you imagine that? Oh, how ignorant!"

It boils down to this: liberals tend to see conservatives as non - intellectual and insensitive; and they believe that liberalism has a monopoly on truth. But their behavior at the Forum certainly disproved such notions. One axiom we may safely accept, however, is that conservatives have no monopoly on bigotry.

day after agreeing with President Ayub Khan on eliminating most of the after-effects of the 22-day undeclared war between their countries last September.

Shastri arrived in Tashkent Jan. 3 at the invitation of Premier Alexei N. Kosygin of the Soviet Union to discuss peace between India and Pakistan.

But they agreed to start withdrawing troops from each other's soil and to strive for peace.

In New Delhi, Hme Minister Guilzarilal Nanda, 67, was sworn in as prime minister. He held the job briefly after the death of Nehru.

The Indian nation was told Shastri's body will be flown home from Tashkent Tuesday morning.

In Washington, President Johnson described Shastri's death as "a grevious blow to

In New Delhi, Home Minister Guolzarilal Nanda, 67, was the hopes of mankind for peace and progress." He said Shastri had "proved a fitting successor to Pandit Nehru by holding aloft the highest ideals of Indian democracy.

Shastri's death injected new uncertainties into South Asia.

Ever since hostilities flared with Pakistan there had been mounting pressures in India for the elevation of a stronger, more nationalist - minded leader into the premiership.

The choice of Nanda could be a step in that direction.

The question now is how Nanda will set out to fulfill the terms of the agreement Shastri reached with Ayub to strive for peace.

They sidestepped, however, their quarrel over Kashmir, which touched off two wars in South Asia in 18 years, and official spokesmen of both sides immediately differed on terms of the declaration and how they will be implemented.

Aside from Kashmir, the most difficult—and dangerous—problem to be worked out is how to withdraw divisions of heavily armed troops from along a 1,500 - mile cease-fire line stretching from the Kashmir Mountains in the north to near the Arabian Sea in India in the southwest.

India and Pakistan hold thousands of square miles of each other's territory, not only in Kashmir but elsewhere.

The University of North Carolina maintains the state's educational television system, with four broadcasting stations — at Raleigh, Greensboro, Chapel Hill and Columbia. Six more stations will be established to set up a statewide network.

Chapel Hill is one of three national university centers for studies and research in the "population explosion" and what can be done about it. Ways of birth control and publication education in population control is object of a long - term study financed by the Ford Foundation and others.

This is Charger
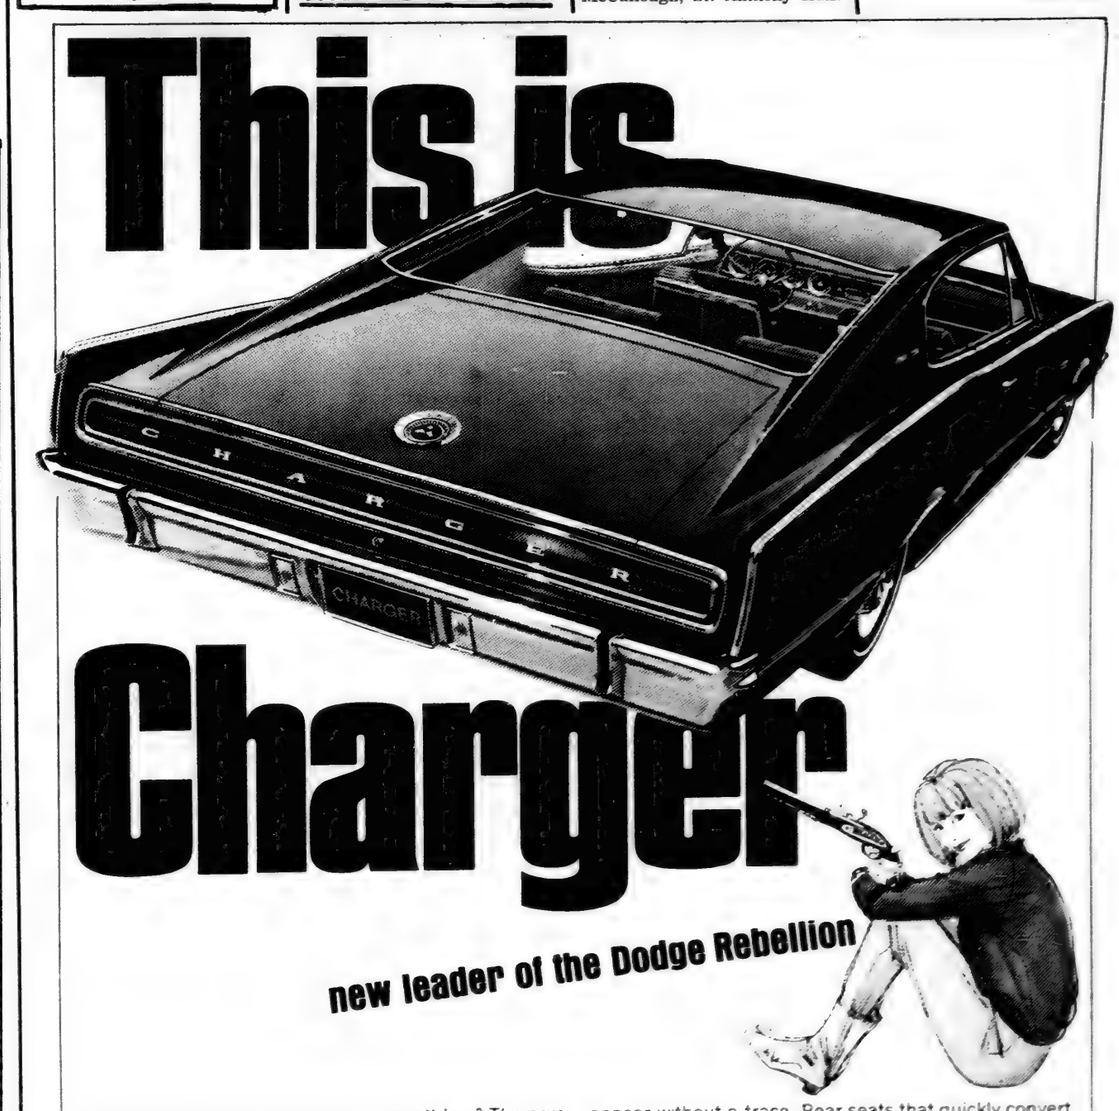
new leader of the Dodge Rebellion



Tired of looking at dream cars you can't buy? The cars you see at the Auto Show and never see again? Well, then, do something about it. See the one you can buy, right now, today, at your Dodge dealer's. It's Charger, a full-sized, fastback action car that's all primed up and ready to go. With V8 power. Bucket seats, fore and aft. Full-length console. Disappearing headlights that disappear without a trace. Rear seats that quickly convert into a spacious cargo compartment. Just pop the rear buckets down and watch the cargo space go up. That's Charger—breathtaking new leader of the Dodge Rebellion. Until you've seen it, you haven't seen everything from Dodge for '66. Charger, a brawny, powerful dream car that made it—all the way to your Dodge dealer's.

Feeder Of Athletes— That's 'Doctor' Monroe

BY SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

John Lacey sat back in his swivel chair in the training room in Woollen Gym and talked about a man named Doc Monroe.

"Doc is an extremely conscientious and obliging man," the trainer began. "He goes out of his way to make the meals enjoyable. I make up the menus for the training meal. Each boy should get about 6,000 calories a day.

"Doc's first interest is to make sure the boy is taken care of. And he gives his best. If the boys are happy he's happy. They all respect him and like him very much."

Doc Monroe walked into the cafeteria in Ehringhaus yesterday afternoon. He wore a dark tweed coat and a warm smile. He hung the coat up by a vacant cash register and began talking about himself and his job.

"I've been connected with the University for about ten years. I used to run the Pine Room, but I've been over here for the past three years.

"Because of Chase Cafeteria students don't eat here any more. Now we only have pregame meals and the training meal in the evenings.

"Football players, basketball, baseball, swimming and track — I guess about all of them eat here.

"We always have steak as the pre - game meal regardless of the sport. They get a lot of vegetables and orange juice. They seem to like it — the boys eat it all right.

"I know most of the athletes personally. All of them are nice fellows. The coaches are also very congenial guys. When I have a chance I follow the teams but I'm usually tied up here."

Doc turned and went back to work. He's one of many men who are the unknown and unsung members of Carolina's vast athletic program.

But in that program, Donald J. Monroe is just as vital as anyone.

Dolphins Dip Deacs

UNC's Dolphins breezed easily past Wake Forest on Saturday, 55-38, for their sixth win of the year against two losses.

Pete Worthen of UNC posted wins in the 50- and 100-yard freestyle events. He had a 21.7 time for the 50 and a 48.8 in the 100. Jay Scattergood of Carolina finished second in the 50.

Coach Pat Earey was pleased with Worthen's performance.

"This is the best time he's had all year in the 50, and Pete shows signs of returning to the old form that he showed last year."

Wednesday evening's basketball encounter with the Wolfpack of N. C. State should prove to be an interesting offensive struggle for the Tar Heels.

A pressing, harassing defense is the Wolfpack specialty and the Virginia Cavaliers felt the sting this past Saturday night. Although Virginia almost doubled the Wolfpack rebound total, over 30 offensive errors—due to the tenacious press of the Wolfpack—made the State effort an easy one. Final score: State 86, Virginia 69.

The weaving, faking, scrambling offensive moves of Bob Lewis have made life uncomfortable for quite a number of "would-be" defensive men this season.

Bo Wyenandt, whose Vanderbilt club defeated the Tar Heels earlier in the season 81-72, described his evening with Mr. Lewis.

"It was like standing in a barrel of snakes and trying to grab the one with the beady eyes.

"He was all over the place, jumping, stopping, starting, twisting, faking and shooting. And, man, can he shoot!

"Just about the time you knew you had him, he'd slip away and score."

Wyenandt must have "zigged" when he should have "zagged." Lewis checked in with 33 points for the evening.

* * *

Former Tar Heel basketball great Bill Cunningham had his finest night in professional basketball Monday evening against the St. Louis Hawks.

Cunningham, playing his first season in pro ball with the Philadelphia '76ers, pumped in 31 points and grabbed 16 rebounds as the '76ers defeated the Hawks 127-117.

Twenty of Cunningham's points came in the first half as Philadelphia forged ahead 62-48.

Cunningham's previous high was 24 points.

CUNNINGHAM

BARNES

The wonderful world of UNC wrestling coach Sam Barnes has that familiar ring. Barnes, noted for his witty posters to attract wrestling prospects, has a banner stretched across the wall of the training room in the basement of Woollen Gym. It reads: "I may not be the best in the West, but I'm certainly not the least in the East."

Tickets Remain

Some 2,000 tickets can still can be picked up for UNC's Wednesday night's encounter with the Wolfpack of State.

Bob Lewis Likes 'Screaming' Fans

BY BECKY HUNTER
Special to DTH

Last Friday afternoon before the Saturday game with Duke, Bob Lewis sat in Bob Quincy's Sports Information Office and talked more about himself than basketball. He exuded quiet confidence on the eve of the game against the country's number one team.

"Out on the court when all those people are screaming, that's the greatest feeling. You feel like you could jump 50 feet off the floor.

"But when you lose, you're sick inside. After any game I don't get to sleep until may be five o'clock in the morning. Whether you win or lose, it's hard. Especially if you lose."

"I love basketball. That's it. I don't think I could play any other sport as well." He almost whispered, "Oh, basketball."

One of Lewis' heroes is the Cleveland Browns' Jimmy Brown. Another is Willie Mays. "They never lose their tempers," he said. Bob Lewis has a little trouble with his. "I've been pretty good this year. I've only lost mine once — at Greensboro in the game against Princeton. I've been pretty good. Only once."

He doesn't read sports stories about himself as much as you'd think he would. "After a bad game I don't read them. Unless it's a real good write-up. I like to be alone and think about it."

When he walks around campus or goes uptown he feels a little conspicuous. "People speak to me that I don't know and I say, 'Hi, how are you?' I forget people's names. They are here and gone in a second. It's bad but I can't help it."

Before Saturday's loss to Duke, Lewis was averaging 31.3 points per game. Asked if he felt pressured to maintain the second-highest scoring average in the nation, he replied, "People expected me to score like 30 points a game beginning my sophomore year. Playing varsity gets harder. It's hard to keep it up there. If the team wins, it's fine. Whether I score or not.

"When I'm not scoring and the team's down, it's hard not to become emotional. It's the worse thing that can happen."

Since the beginning of basketball season he's been receiving several letters a week from youngsters "12 to 13 years old or thereabouts."

From the time Bob Lewis was 12 until now he's practiced "at least three hours" every day. And that's helped," he said.

Chapel Hill is a prison.

The jailors here consist of what we call middle-class merchants. They have a captive audience—12,000 University students—for nine months every year.

During the summer there is a decrease and these jailors only have to worry with about 5,000 inmates.

Punishment is dealt out in dollars and cents. Prison guards get together every so often and decide how much punishment is to be taken in.

Last summer the laundry wardens conferred and decided that 25 cents wasn't quite stiff enough for a clean shirt. Up went the price to 28 cents.

The average prisoner is paying roughly an extra $4.05 over the nine-month period, if you assume that he or she wearing shirts or blouses has them cleaned after wearing them two times.

This means the laundries are bringing in about an extra $48,600 from the regular 12,000 inmates.

Of course, this does not include the steep prices for dry cleaning.

Take a look at the menu in any dining hall. Notice how old prices are scratched out? Even in the main campus eating establishment the so called "student special" has gone up 10 cents over last year. Perhaps they are cooking the food now.

Clothing wardens, who sell everything from shoes to striped shirts, probably run death row more efficiently than the rest.

True, they have their regular pardons two or three times a year. But even then the prices only come down to a little above normal.

The book sellers make a killing, too. When inmates sell a book back they have to take less than half of what they paid for it. The dealer then resells the book for a dollar or so under the previous price.

After three or four rounds of buying the book back and reselling it again the dealers are making a 200 per cent profit. But some writers cut them short by putting out a new edition every year.

However, even here the inmate takes the pocket punishment. The dealer won't buy back his book if it isn't being used, and he is stuck once again.

The walls here get steeper every year. It won't be long before inmates won't be able to afford to come to this prison.

Attorney Stresses University Image

Victor S. Bryant, a member of the Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees, told the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors Monday night that UNC professors should exercise self-restraint as well as academic freedom.

The Durham attorney called for increased communication between the professor and the people of the state at the meeting, which was held in the Morehead Planetarium lounge.

"We have seen that the principles of academic freedom may be temporarily lost or curtailed," he said "Academic freedom is such a just and necessary thing that it could never be withheld for long by any administration or Board of Trustees.

"This, however, does not relieve them from the obligation to distinguish between right and wrong, or between truth and falsity," he said.

Bryant told the professors that they had a duty to uphold the "image" of the University.

"The faculty members themselves should enforce discipline in their own ranks," he said. "In this way only can real protection against the abuses of academic freedom be effectively exercised.

Bryant cited a section of the University Code which states, "The professor should recognize that accuracy, forthrightness, and dignity, befit his association with the University and his psoition as a man of learning."

He described the supporters of the recently modified Speaker Ban Law as "friends of the University, acting in what they believed to be its best interests.

"They had just granted the largest appropriations on record for the University," he said.

"The professor has been set apart from the man who pays his salary check," Bryant said. "There exists a gap between the two.

"The taxpayer and the university professor have had no misunderstanding," he said. "They have simply failed to have an understanding.

"This lack of understanding can be attributed in large measure to the failure of the professor and the public to communicate with each other," Bryant said.

"There must be an intelligent study and careful consideration of both their points of view," he said.

"The responsible guardians of academic freedom look upon communication with their colleague, their trustees and the public as a definite responsibility," Bryant said.

Selection Committee Wants Ideas

Faculty members and students who have suggestions for changing the office of Chancellor of the University or know of someone who might fill the office are asked to write to Dr. William Wells of the English Department in 305 Bingham Hall.

Wells is the chairman of a special committee to select a new chancellor and study the office of chancellor.

The committee has planned a special conference with outgoing Chancellor Paul Sharp, who resigned his position Dec. 9 to assume the presidency of Drake University.

Other committee members include professors Kenneth Brinkhaus, John N. Couch, Frank W. Klingberg, William S. Mason, John Charles Morrow III, and Rollie Tillman Jr.

Sharp came to UNC in July, 1964 from the presidency of Hiram College.

He declined to comment on the reasons for his resignation.

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, Kenan Professor history, is serving as acting Chancellor until the committee can find a replacement.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday, who named the committee, said he would speak to alumni and other interested groups before presenting his recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

UNC Blood Drive Begins Next Month

By ERNIE McCRACY
DTH Editor

A blood drive for Viet Nam will be held on the UNC campus Feb. 16 and 17.

The Daily Tar Heel has made arrangements with the American Red Cross to have a drive here as a part of the Defense Department's College Blood Donations for Defense program.

Bill Cade, representative from the Piedmont Carolina Blood Center in Charlotte, visited Chapel Hill yesterday to help organize the campaign.

A goal of 600 pints has been set. "Even though we're sending all our available equipment," Cade said, "we just can't collect more than 300 pints a day."

None of the blood will go for civilian use, although little of it will be sent to Viet Nam as whole blood because it is perishable and difficult to store.

WARM BLOOD, just like the kind you can give next month, is held in plastic bag by Irene Ferris, medical technologist in the Blood Bank.

Defense Secretary Robert McNamara said several months ago, "I want to express my deepest appreciation to the thousands of students and other groups across the country who have volunterred to donate blood as a gesture of support for our servicemen fighting in Viet Nam.

"Although at the present time our blood supply for Viet Nam is adequate, the Department of Defense does have a requirement for blood which can be processed into anti-hepatitis globulin and albumin for treating shock. These two derivatives, unlike whole blood, can be stored for long periods of time and are being used to protect and support our military forces in Viet Nam. Reserve supplies of anti-hepatitis globulin have been particularly depleted as a result of the build-up there," McNamara said.

Red Cross spokesmen told the DTH that Defense Department needs for blood have doubled since the first estimate was made last year.

Sonny Pepper, president of the Men's Residence Council, has consented to coordinate the drive to get blood donors and workers to man the collection facilities. Some campus groups have been discussing the possibility of a blood drive and two of them, Arnold Air Society and Sigma Nu, have expressed interest in working with Pepper. Any other campus organization wishing to help should call Pepper at 929-5282 or at the Dean of Men's office between 1 and 3 p.m.

Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey strongly supported the blood drive in a statement yesterday. "I think this is the most helpful contribution students can make. I am confident that the program will be supported from all over the campus," he said.

New Student Union To Be Inadequate When Finished

By TONY GARDNER
Special To The DTH

Construction of the $2 million Frank Porter Graham Student Union Building will begin on Emerson Field this spring with a tentative completion date set for November, 1967.

The new union will be too small "even before ground is broken," according to Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, "but it is far better than the facilities now available."

Originally, construction was to have started in December, 1963, Cathey said. The new student union is one of three new buildings to be built together and it was desirable to let the contract for all three to one contractor.

Letting the contract to only one contractor eliminates any confusion that would result in three different contractors building three buildings next to each other.

In order to get bids and let the contract all the plans must be complete. The plans were held up when it was decided to redesign the Book Exchange Building to house the Duplicating division and some administrative offices from Steele Hall as well as the Book Ex. This meant changing the building from five to nine stories and causing the delay.

The new Union will be located in the heart of student traffic, which will be increased by this building as well as the new Book Exchange and the new Undergraduate Library.

At five times the size of Graham Memorial, the new Union will have 100,000 square feet of floor space and be capable of expanding another 74,000 square feet with the addition of a wing on the east end and by adding another floor.

The building will be three stories with an entrance on the ground floor from Raleigh Road and an entrance on the main floor from the Lenoir Hall side.

The ground floor will contain service areas, the air conditioning unit, storage rooms, a snack bar, 12 bowling lanes, 17 billiard tables, an arts and crafts shop, a lounge for chess, checkers, cards, etc., and a barber shop.

The main floor will have the main desk and information service, a snack bar, a lobby lounge and a south lounge. Daily Tar Heel space, and a large general purpose lounge for lectures, plays, dances.

Peddlers Caught Selling In Dorms

By ANDY MYERS
DTH News Editor

Four magazine peddlers were arrested in Craige Residence Hall Monday night, according to Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont.

They were charged in the Chapel Hill Recorders Court and convicted for soliciting, said. No sentence was made provided they left town.

Beaumont said their crew leader was not able to post bail for his salesmen because "he was on probation for doing the same thing last year."

They represented the Union Circulation Co. of Peach Tree Street, Northwest Atlanta, Ga. "Various" addresses were given, Beaumont said, but none of them was local.

Chief Beaumont has "at least 15 checks" the solicitors had collected from students, and some ten more orders for which checks had already been cashed.

"They have the students make the checks out to them," he said, "and they cash the checks as soon as possible."

They admitted soliciting without licenses in Grimes, Morrison. Beaumont said they Manly, Old West, Craige and had tried to obtain a license earlier Monday but were denied one.

"They went ahead and tried to sell anyway. These peddlers had almost every kind of magazine available. "You name it, they had it," Beaumont said.

Students who bought magazines from them can pick up their checks from Beaumont, on the second floor of the Y-Building at 8:30 a.m. or 3:30 p.m.

However, some of the checks were already cashed, Beaumont said. He indicated that some orders might have been hidden by the salesmen, so not all of the money was recovered.

Astronauts Visit Campus

Gemini IX astronauts Elliot See, Charles Bassett, and Eugene Cernan have just completed the first step in their training at the Morehead Planetarium.

The Gemini VIII through XII missions will concentrate on perfecting rendezvous and docking techniques.

The three began their study session Monday evening, Jan. 10 and left yesterday afternoon.

Each team of astronauts regularly comes to north Carolina two or three times for an intensive study session, according to planetarium director A. F. Jenzano.

Morrison Gets Pins

Morrison Residence College is the first hall on campus to have its own fraternity-type pins. According to Jim Lenz, president of "A" House, Morrison is probably the first in the nation to have them.

The idea originated last fall in the minds of Lenz, John Ellis, Byron McCoy, and College Master Chuck Longine.

The plan is designed to add to the unity of the dormitory.

There is no intention of detracting from fraternities, but simply to add loyalty to Morrison, according to Lenz.

The pins, to be distributed initially to Morrison officers, are diamond shaped with an inlaid onyx. Later models will include actual diamonds set in the gold trim.

After officers receive their pins, sales will be made to all residents of the College.

Room Rent Refund

All students eligible for the $12.50 room rent refund this semester who did not pick up their check, have had the amount credited to their accounts, according to University cashier, M. E. Woodard.

These refunds total $8,937.50. Seven hundred and fifteen men students were eligible to receive them.

Students who were eligible for the refunds and do not owe the university money may have their fees and tuition for the spring semester reduced by $12.50. Students who will not be here for the spring semester will be mailed their checks if they do not pick them up.

K Lot Expanded

The K parking lot behind the Carolina Inn will be changed during semester break in order to create more spaces for students, according to Assistant Dean of Men Bob Kepner.

The lot is shared by students and the employes of the Carolina Inn.

The change will provide about 18 more spaces for students.

Kepner said there were about 100 students spaces before Thanksgiving at which time the lot was changed to provide more spaces for Inn employes.

The new change is designed as a compromise between the number of spaces in the old lot and in the present one.

Dr. George C. Ham, clinical professor of psychiatry and former chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at the North Carolina School of Medicine, will leave late this month on a seven week world tour as a consultant for the National Institute of Mental Health, the Peace Corps and other agencies.

His tour will include Honolulu, Japan, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Ceylon, India, Nepal, Kenya, Ethiopia, Israel, Greece, and Italy.

Spitaleri Wins

Mario Spitaleri, a graduate student in the Department of Radio, T.V., and Motion Pictures at North Carolina has been awarded a $1,000 prize for dramatic playwriting by the University of Los Andes.

He won the award for a two act play "Pantero."

WUNC Seeks Help

WUNC-FM radio is looking for people interested in working for them.

They need music continuity writers, announcers, engineers, interviewers, news reporters, and anybody with an idea for a program they would like to see produced.

Anyone interested in doing any of these or something else should contact John W. Dawson, program coordinator.

Library Schedule

Wilson Library will go on a special schedule during the semester break from Jan. 27 through Jan. 31.

On the 27th it will be open from 7:45 a.m. - 5 p.m.; on the 28th from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.; on the 29th from 9 a.m. - 1 p.m. The library will be closed on Sun. the 30th. On Monday the library will be opened

The library will resume its regular schedule on Tues., Feb. 1 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Internship Program

Governor Dan K. Moore today urged college students interested in state government to apply for the 1966 Summer Internship Program.

He said 25 students will be selected to take part in the 11 week program.

Pub Board Will Meet

Editors and business managers for the Carolina Handbook and the Course Evaluation Booklet will be selected Thursday. Interviews will be held by the Publications Board at 3:00 in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

The Carolina Handbook is published each spring and distributed to freshmen and transfer students in the fall. It contains a synopsis of campus organizations and extra curricular activities as well as a "Majors Handbook" and Carolina "Who's Who."

The editor is responsible for revisions, layouts and materials. In the past this position has commanded a $100 salary.

The business manager solicits and collects advertisements for the handbook. He receives a straight ten per cent commission.

The Course Evaluation Booklet was first published last spring by the Academic Affairs Committee. The Student Legislature hs voted to make the booklet a permanent, bi-annual publication.

As set up last year, the booklet gives a brief review of favorite elective courses and the professors teaching them.

The editor is responsible for collecting information and layout. No salary has yet been established for the editor, but according to Hugh Blackwell of the Student Government Finance Committee, payment should parallel that of the Carolina Handbook editor.

The business manager for the Course Evaluation Booklet will also receive a ten per cent commission on all advertisements.

Any student in good standing who is unable to attend the Publications Board meeting should contact Dave Heacock at 968-9215.

Playmaker Play Begins Run

The Carolina Playmakers will open tonight in Playmaker's Theater with Ugo Betti's comedy "Holiday Mountain."

The play will run through Sunday night, including a Sunday matinee at 2:30 p.m. Evening preformances will begin at 8 p.m.

Harry Davis, director of the Playmakers, has selected Anne Mallard Davis of Chapel Hill, and veteran of the New York professional stage, for the leading role.

Others in the production include Ben Jones of Chapel Hill, Sherry Elledge of Marion, J. Earl Lasater of Pittsboro and Catherine Waring of Goldsboro.

The settings for the production are by Tommy Rezzuto, costumes by Irene Smart Rains, and the lighting by Russell B. Graves.

Playmakers Business Manager John W. Parker announced yesterday that good seats still remain for all performances. Reserved seat tickets are available at the Playmakers Business offices, 214 Abernathy Hall, and at Ledbetter - Pickard's on Franklin Street.

Tickets will also be available one hour before each performance at the box - office in the Playmakers Theatre.

Rush Registration

Today is the last day for junior, sophomore, and freshmen women to sign up for sorority spring rush according to Madeline Gray, president of the Pan Hellenic Council.

Women should sign up in the Dean of Women's office, 202 South Building.

The Carolina Blood Drive

The idea of a campus blood drive is anything but original, but that lack of originality detracts nothing from the value of such a campaign.

A blood drive separates the "doers" from the "sayers." Many students will spent hours telling all who will listen what he thinks "Ol' Lyndon ought to do to win the war in Viet Nam."

Those who do not have "solutions" to the war's problems ask, "Well, what can I do about it anyway?"

Actually, not much—short of enlisting in military service. Signatures on a letter of support of a Christmas card are nice, but not very vital or lasting.

In truth, there is not much a student can do—except give a pint of blood. It is personal, it requires some distinct effort on the part of the donor and its need is unquestioned.

Red Cross officials say 600 pints is all they can handle in two days. We feel that UNC students will want to contribute far more than that, but those who do not get to participate now will be called on later.

The campus should approach this opportunity with unity and the intention of performing with pride.

Let's give, but not with the idea of attracting praise for ourselves and our "generosity," because "generosity" can hardly be defined as "giving that which is owed."

Off To A Busy Start

North Carolina's community college program is an infant in trouble. Less than three years old, the system is already outgrowing itself.

Enrollment projections for the junior colleges and technical institutes were much too conservative and the number of students at the 43 institutions has already doubled.

The concept behind the establishment of the schools was to provide higher education for everybody who wants it. Because it is already running into enrollment excesses, this concept may soon be abandoned. The number of students this year—25,000—is almost 25 per cent more than what the General Assembly expected for next year when appropriations were made for the 1965-67 biennium.

Dr. I. E. Ready, director of community colleges, said the enormous increase in students seeking admission to the schools was unexpected and he is "seriously worried" abut limiting enrollment.

Hopefully the situation will be a temporary one. Last year's high school graduating class was the largest ever and future ones are not expected to be as big. Educators point out, however, that a greater percentage of high school graduates will want to attend college.

Enrollment might level off, but it will never decrease and the only way to solve the problem is in the Budget Committee.

The problem is one of real concern to the University of North Carolina and state-supported colleges because as they become more crowded and reach limits of expansion, these community colleges will have to take up the load. Many students will attend community colleges for their freshman and sophomore years, transferring to the senior colleges for the rest of their undergraduate and graduate work.

As this situation becomes more widespread, the community colleges will become increasingly integrated with the University and its functions and will help relieve some of its educational burden.

But if the community college system itself is overloaded from the start, its needed contribution may never be felt.

Court Ruling Seems Safe

The future of North Carolina's legislative apportionment is being worked out now in Raleigh and Washington. Its fate is in the hands of the men in the General Assembly and in Congress, both of which convened Monday.

With the Tar Heel legislators facing a court - imposed Jan. 31 deadline, any action Congress may take to modify the Supreme Court one man-one vote edict will come too late for North Carolina. Other states are still interested, though.

One of the items of business left over from the first session of the 89th Congress is the now - famous Dirksen Amendment. This Constitutional amendment, for which the Illinois Senator has fought valiantly, would allow a state to apportion one house of a two-house legislature on some basis other than population.

Were Dirksen's proposal adopted by two-thirds of both houses of Congress and three-fourths of the state legislatures or conventions, the states would be able to consider such things as counties in making up the membership of one house.

Unfortunately, Dirksen's eminently sensible plan has little chance of passage. The cries of indignation and the bursts of energy which followed the Supreme Court's ruling have died down. Last year Dirksen lost one battle in his fight and only by applying parliamentary pressure was he able to get his proposal put on the calendar again. A second and final defeat seems likely in 1966.

Why will this promising amendment go down to defeat? In the first place, it goes against the trend of the times, a trend toward pure mass democracy. (The drive to have everyone register and vote, regardless of qualification or motivation, is another manifestation of this trend.) The liberal bloc in Congress, supported by the President, doubtless approves of the one man-one vote rule and will oppose any move to alter or subvert it.

Dirksen is also bucking the conviction that has grown up in recent years that the Supreme Court's decision is the "law of the land." Since much of the criticism of the Court has come from racist and extreme right - wing groups — those calling for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren — moderates and liberals have gotten into the habit of defending the Justices.

In effect, the critics of the High Court have cried "wolf" too often; and now that they have a legitimate complaint, no one will listen.

Finally, time is wearing away Dirksen's forces. As more and more states comply with the Court's ruling and complete their redistricting, the number of Congressmen who have a direct interest in overturning the Supreme Court decision becomes less and less.

While some of the representatives from the redistricted states will no doubt still support Dirksen's amendment simply because they think it is right, their desire to fight to the bitter end will be materially weaker.

The steady increase in states which have complied with the reapportionment order has also resulted in diminished pressure from the states themselves for relief. A drive that seemed to have a good chance of resulting in calling an unprecedented convention to amend the Constitution has bogged down. States that were eager for action to protect their own legislative arrangements are not so eager to work for other states.

In short, the Dirksen Amendment and the Constitutional convention, the only two hopes to forestall the Court's peculiar ruling, seemed headed for oblivion. The decision appears secure, at least until the 1970 census forces another round of reapportionment. Then the dormant forces which believe the Supreme Court made a serious mistake may come to life again.

Newspaper Didn't Overplay Murder

Last summer I got to see society at its worst — and newspapering at its best.

In early August the body of a prominent Winston-Salem woman was found on a mountainside near Pulaski, Va. A Virginia doctor stated after performing an autopsy that Mrs. Hilda Porth had been killed by a blow on the head with a blunt instrument. Murder seemed the only solution.

August wore on and no arrests were made. Many of the people of Winston - Salem, however, knew just who the murderer was — or thought they did. They phoned the Winston - Salem Journal office day and night to ask if Robert Porth, Mrs. Porth's husband, had been arrested yet.

I was working for the Journal at the time as an assistant at the state and city desks. I think I saw the myth of the blood-sucking newsman convincingly destroyed. The case began to take on all the elements of a mystery thriller as the FBI, the police of two states and local police slowly wove a net of evidence.

The case was the principle topic of conversation in the city, yet, in the newsroom, unnecessary talk about the murder was taboo. The editors talked about how they could place stories about new developments in their proper perspective, not about whether they should play them up or down. The atmosphere was cooly professional.

All the time the calls came in. Some callers said, "Well, you know who did it."

"No we don't — and, if you'll think about it, neither do you."

Outside the newsroom, the city was full of speculation. Inside, even facts were suspect until their relevance was proved.

In early September, Winston-Salem police took Robert Porth into custody on a charge of first degree murder. The date for Porth's trial is still indefinite, pending further investigation.

Interest in the case has subsided in Winston - Salem. Correspondingly, stories about it have dropped from the top to the bottom of the front page.

A friend of the Porths complained to me shortly after Robert Porth's arrest that the paper had just added fuel to the fire of gossip and speculation. This friend was naturally very hurt at the time and would possibly want to modify the accusation now.

Still, I want to take advantage of this clear accusation to reply not only to this friend but to all those who mumble about the sensational stories and brutality the newspapers "play up." A newspaper is an ex post facto document. Reporters cannot make up grisly stories to satisfy gossip-mongers.

Moreover, through a thorough statement of the facts about a sensational case, a paper provides the best rememdy for gossip. Irresponsible speculation must decrease proportionally as the facts become widely known.

I would like to ask the friend now which she would rather have: detailed, front page coverage of the murder case in the newspapers or rumors like the one she heard in a supermarket. A lady in the market remarked that she knew the location of the missing car Mrs. Porth was supposedly driving at the time of her death: it was in the lake behind the Porths' house. The lady had somehow overlooked the fact that the lake is nowhere more than three feet deep.

When the car was found in West Virginia, the Journal gave the story top front page coverage. Sensationalism? Well, suppose the paper had placed the story on the second page. Perhaps 90 per cent of the city's adult population read the front page story, while perhaps 50 per cent would have read the story if it had run on the second page. That would have increased by a factor of five the audience susceptible to rumors concerning the car's whereabouts.

"Yellow" or sensationalistic journalism exists only where newsmen join the gossip - mongers in idle speculation or in irresponsible proposals. The Winston - Salem Journal — and The Daily Tar Heel— were accused of sensationalism in their handling of stories during the late summer and early fall of 1965. Both accusations were made on the basi of the amount, rather than the kind of coverage the papers gave to stories.

Amount of coverage is the wrong criterion, for the best way to kill dozens of rumors is with hundreds of facts.

As long as newspaper stories are solid fact, they are the most potent weapons in our society against ignorance, rumors and lies.

DTH Is Big Enough

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In my opinion, the recent $10,000 appropriation of Student Legislature to increase the DTH to six pages is a misuse of funds which could easily be put to better use. Who says the DTH needs to be six pages?

It seems to me that the present four-page Tar Heel often contains a good deal of space filling. Granted that the DTH would not be financially possible without a good percentage of advertising, shouldn't the students who are paying for the paper be entitled to better quality writing, rather than mere quantity?

Unfortunately, a six-page paper will spread the DTH staff even more thinly than the four - page edition currently does. Certainly columns such as David Rothman's futile attempts at biting satire will become even more futile and less biting with two more pages of space to fill.

The majority of the students at this university just aren't interested in Mr. Rothman's social critiques of such subjects as "Bus travel . . . a mongrelized form of transportation . . . ", and the problems of "Battlefront TV."

I sincerely hope the DTH can avoid the obvious pitfall of quantity, not quality, but, judging on past performances, I wouldn't bet on it.

Arguments Are Blurry

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

After reading Bill Michaux's letter in the Sunday Tar Heel. I was suitably impressed by his sincerity, but I think I missed some of the finer points of the argument. In fact, I suspect that there were not many points, just a collection of blurry little spots. Could Mr. Michaux bring some of these into better focus? As a modest start:

1. What are "The evils of property rights"?
2. What is "the gravity of the corporate menace to our way of life"?
3. Is inequality of income evil? Why?
4. What are some examples of "exploitation" and "insecurity" in the "pre-FDR era"?
5. Is Business a "wellspring of conformity" (even though it promotes inequality)? What are you talking abou?
6. What is wrong with competition?
7. Are we a nation of "melancholy buffoons" ? What is a melancholy buffoon (defined in a manner relevant to the argument)?

If Michaux would clear up a few of these questions, he might begin to convince someone.

Air Force ROTC Growing, Performs Increasing Role

"The Air Force ROTC is increasing by leaps and bounds in the number of officers it is providing for the Air Force, and Arnold Air Society is playing an ever - increasing role in Air Force ROTC," according to Society President Charles Finch.

The Arnold Air Force Society at UNC, a professional, honorary service organization, is currently serving as area headquarters for area 2-B, which includes Duke, N. C. State, A & T, VPI, and East Carolina.

The Squadron, which now has 31 active members, has sponsored a Christmas Party for the children of the Pittsboro Christian Children's Home, Operation Build Up in the fall to recruit members for the Air Force ROTC, and participated in the "Paperbacks for Viet Nam" project.

The Society also sponsors "Angel Flight" and maintains contact with the Air Explorers and Civil Air Patrol in Chapel Hill.

The Arnold Air Society squadron at UNC was formed in 1952 and was named the "Jesse J. Moorhead" squadron after the professor of Air-Science.

The purpose of the Society is to sponsor a well-rounded program, not only for the Arnold Air Society but all Air Force ROTC members through social and service activities. To become eligible for membership, a man must have a 2.3 average and maintain a 2.0 average to remain active.

Brown Leads Tar Babies Against State's Wolflets

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

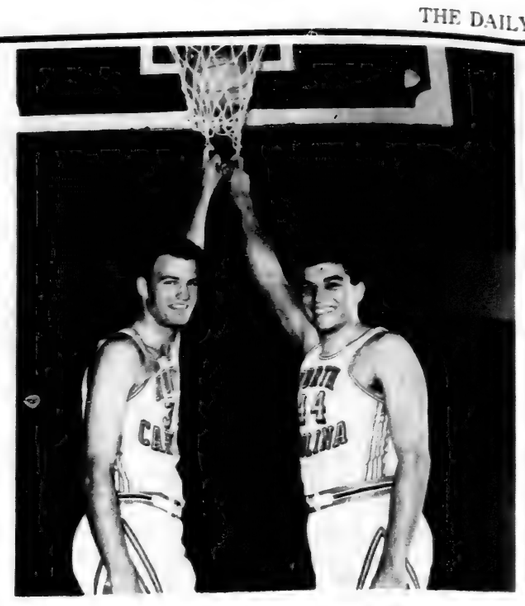
Larry Brown's frosh — sparked of late by the post-Christmas surge of big Joe Brown — complete their first circuit of Big Four opponents when they scrap with N. C. State's third-ranking Wolflets tonight at 6 o'clock in Carmichael Auditorium.

The Tar Babies, who played their first "had" game of the season last Friday and still tanned Duke (78-65), will be seeking to solidify their hold on the Big Four's top spot. Their record stands at 3-0 (6-0 overall) after two wins over runner-up Duke and a singleton over Wake Forest.

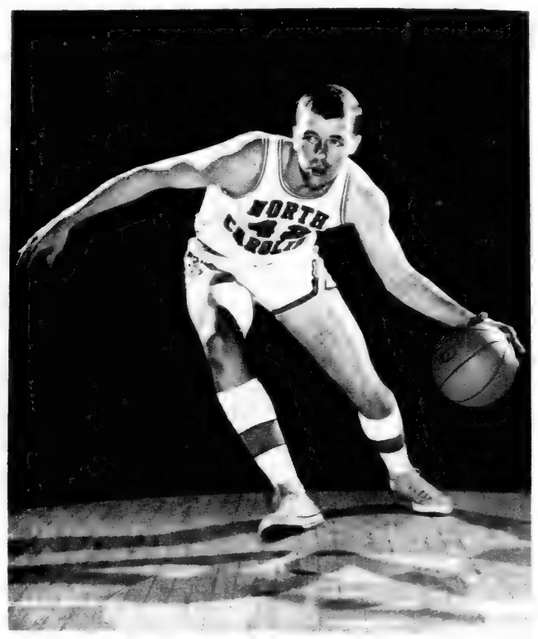
The Wolflets have beaten Wake (85-77) and lost to Duke (70-66) in the league, while achieving an overall mark of 4-2. The Wolves are led by guard Nick Trifunovich and forward Joe Serdich, both averaging an even 19 points per game.

In the three UNC wins last week, the key man was a hustling 6-5 forward named Joe Brown. Before the holiday break, Joe had his troubles, getting very few rebounds and averaging about seven points per game.

Of his personal rally, one of his team mates says: "Joe didn't have his confidence, I don't think, earlier, but he's found it now. He's real strong on the boards, and he can shoot any kind of shot. He's hit a terrific percentage this (last) week, and he could lead us in scoring as easy as anybody on the team. He's great to work with."



REACHING THE NET—Coach Dean Smith will depend on Bob Bennett (left) and Mark Mirken to do just that when the Heels take on State tonight. The two together have grabbed 119 rebounds so far this season with Bennett averaging 8.2 points per contest and Mirken 2.3.



FULL STEAM AHEAD—Sleek footer Tom Gauntlett eyes the basket as well as his opponents. The 6-4 junior is averaging 9.1 points per game this year with 53.5 field goal shooting percentage finding his mark much of the time from the outside.

Wolfpack Growls Tonight

BY GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The N. C. State, Wolfpack defending ACC champions, make their first appearance in Carmichael Auditorium tonight at 8 o'clock.

Speed and a pressing defense are the Wolfpack weapons — leading them to eight victories in 11 games.

Four starters return from last year's club which posted a 20-5 record, won the ACC Tournament and finished third in the NCAA Eastern Regionals.

Larry Worsley (6-5), the outstanding player in the ACC tournament, last season, is set at one forward post. Pete Coker, called one of the most complete performers in the conference, will alternate in the forward and center spots.

The guard combination of Tommy Mattocks and Billy Moffitt are back for their third season of varsity competition. Mattocks (6-2) plays both the forward and guard positions.

The Wolfpack of Coach Press Maravich use two formations to replace last season's All-ACC performer Larry Lakins at center. In the "three-guard offense," junior Eddie Biedenbach takes over at one guard position, Mattocks moves to forward, and Coker moves to center.

"We had great success with our 'three - guard offense' last year and we were able to keep our full-court press," said Maravich. "But if we have to sacrifice speed for height, I don't know how we'll come out."

But the Wolfpack may not have to sacrifice that height. Three sophomores have the size: Paul Hudson (6-11), John Sellers (6-8) and Bill Kretzer (6-7).

The Tar Heels, on the other hand, will be seeking to bounce back from their first loss in Carmichael Auditorium to Duke 88-77 this past Saturday.

Of course leading the Tar Heel offensive will be junior Bob Lewis and sophomore Larry Miller. Lewis has scored 393 points in 13 games for a 30.2 average. Miller, leading the Tar Heels in rebounds with 132, has accounted for 306 points in 13 games for a 23.5 average.

Miller and Lewis have individually hit in double figures in every game this season.

Secretary Needed

Needed: One beautiful girl to work as part-time secretary for the DTH. Looks are the only requirement. Inquire this week.

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

Attention All Jacks

Two attractive coeds wrote a letter to Tate Rogers who did a little piece about dogs and town laws in Carolina Style the other day.

These two weren't exactly happy with the item entitled "Attention All Coeds."

They wrote, "The law to keep horses off the sidewalks may have been effective; however, there should have been a clause to keep the jacks out of the DTH office. Such an oversight tends to creat a bigger mess than dogs.

"If you (Rogers) and Mr. Freakley think coeds better watch their step, I suggest that both of you watch yours or else you will have more on your heels than tar."

Humm.

They Definitely Communicate

You think you have problems?

We got the most pathetic story yesterday that you ever heard. Some poor guy who doesn't care to be known by anything but Jeff tells us he got his phone bill for Nov. 15 through Dec. 15. Total — $228.00.

The most expensive of these calls ran about $11. Twenty-six calls were made to Queens, N. Y. Of course, on the receiving end was a little darling. Diane's phone bill for the same period came to $107.

Jeff said he thought the phone company should give him a discount. His bill for the month before was only $112.

"It wouldn't be so bad if they gave Green Stamps," Jeff said.

We suggest marriage — it's a lot cheaper. And who knows a better way to have fun?

The Final Word

One final word on this fertilizer business.

It sure doesn't make the campus smell any better. But it makes you think twice before walking across the grass.

Long And Blue In The Face

T-Sticker holders arise! That is, T-Sticker holders who haven't picked up their $2.50 refund from the Office of the Dean of Men.

Bob Kepner, assistant to the dean said yesterday students don't seem to care about their money. "We can put notices in the Tar Heel until we're blue in the face." Still they won't pick up their cash.

Dean Long still has 350 refunds to give out. That's $875 going to waste. So arise, you lazy students. Even if you can't park on campus, at least you can walk to South building and get paid $2.50 for it.

View From Ft. Jackson--Sand, Pines, More Sand

The following are excerpts from a letter written by a former Carolina student to his old dormitory friends. He is now at Fort Jackson, S. C., in basic training.

"Hello — House and Mr. P and Mr. V. P. of such and anyone concerned:

"I am writing this in green because I knew you all would be green from envy because you can't be here with me.

"Just to let you know what you are missing, I'll describe a few things.

"The view — it's great — sand, pines, and more sand.

"We have the finest of 30-year-old tents available. None of the holes in the roof of the tent is over the size of a 50c piece. This is army regulation size for the largest hole allowed. I suppose. The sides and ends of the tent almost reach the ground. The tents are set up on concrete foundations.

"Our company area has about 40 tents in an area about the size of the quad between Alexander and Winston. This gives you a great roomy feeling of great outdoors. We have stoves in the tents but they are not hooked up yet.

"We have all the modern conveniences of home, such as:

"Lights — We were without lights for five nights.

"Running water — Have plenty in the latrine, but it is cold at night when you want to shower and shave, and warm in the morning when we need some to put in our canteens.

"Thursday we got into trucks and moved into the training corner of the camp where we still are — with little chance of leaving. They don't appreciate AWOL's or at least they say they don't. We have had two or three so far, but all have been caught and are now in the stockade.

"Two guys have been sent to psychiatrists because they didn't appreciate being here and the sergeants didn't appreciate their not appreciating it . . . I haven't heard what has happened to them.

"The sergeants are great guys I'm sure. I know they are just waiting for us to give them a chance to be nice. And the day they are nice I'll be as shocked as if I had just found out that I aced Mod. Civ. II. I would figure out the odds on that happening, but I only have about 60 more pages in this tablet.

"My uniform is fatigues with those kangaroo pocket pants and a baggy fatigue shirt. My boots are size 13, and according to the guy who measured my feet they should fit. But they don't.

"I am supposed to go back Monday and get measured again, as my ankles have swollen and my toes cramp and go to sleep because they are crampted together. Anyway, I hope to get bigger boots or smaller feet.

"All in all this is a great experience if you happen to be all muscle, and especially all muscle in the head.

"It is true that they tell you exactly what to do and when to do it. But they change the what and the when of the same instructions every time they give them; and no one could possibly keep up with what they mean when they don't mean when they say what they say.

"Well, at least it is only seven more weeks if I really want to get optimistic. But as sore as I am now from running I can't afford to strain another muscle thinking about it. It's a great life if you don't care how you live.

"Bye,"

Blood Drive Gets Support

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

Response to plans for the Carolina Blood Drive is "tremendous," according to coordinator Sonny Pepper. "The people who have contacted me are all very enthusiastic and I think we could easily collect more than 600 pints," he said.

The collection date of Feb. 16 and 17 was set by the American Red Cross because it is the only time bloodmobile equipment will be available. Red Cross officials say 300 pints per day is the maximum which can be collected under normal conditions.

All blood collected will be turned over to the Defense Department for use in Viet Nam or at U. S. Hospitals which treat evacuated casualties.

Senior Class President Armistead Maupin said yesterday that the class will offer engraved plaques to the men's residence hall, fraternity, women's dormitory and sorority which have the highest percentage of donors.

At the request of the DTH, Dr. Edward Hedgpeth, head of student health services will serve as faculty advisor to the Blood Drive Committee.

Yesterday afternoon Pepper said two more organizations, Semper Fidelis and the NROTC, have asked to help staff the collection center and provide donors. Other groups wishing to participate should call Pepper at 929-5289.

East Carolina College and Duke University had campus blood drives early in December. ECC collected 1,219 pints in three days. Duke furnished 385 pints in two days.

The last blood campaign at UNC was held Nov. 18 and 19, 1953, for Korean War needs.

Early UNC Surge Crumbles Wolfpack

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels rode a lightning-quick start and a nervous finish to an 83-78 victory over the Wolfpack of N. C. State last night in Carmichael Auditorium.

The Tar Heels, led by the hot shooting of sophomore Larry Miller and junior Tom Gauntlett, jumped on the defending ACC champion Wolfpack club—zooming to a 10-3 lead after the first three minutes of play.

With 13:10 to go in the half, a Bobby Lewis jumper gave the Tar Heels a 10-point lead at 18-8. A three-point play by Gauntlett with 11:30 to go made it UNC 25, State 12.

The Tar Heel lead was 15 with 10:34 remaining as Gauntlett struck again — 29-14 in favor of Carolina. The Tar Heel surge reached its summit seconds later as reserve center Mark Mirken hit a foul shot for a 30-14 Tar Heeli lead.

But the Wolfpack, switching from a press to a zone, began to slow down the tempo—and cut the Tar Heel lead. With 6:48 remaining, a Pete Coker foul put the Wolfpack within 12 points at 34-22. Guard Billy Moffitt's field goal cut the lead to 10 at 34-24 with 6:06 remaining. With 4:50 to go, the UNC lead was eight points as Pete Coker hit again making the score 36-28, Tar Heels.

But Carolina did manage a 10-8 edge the remainder of the half—taking a 46-36 edge at intermission.

The Wolfpack outscored the Tar Heels in the second half—39-37—but were never able to get closer than three points.

Three straight baskets in the opening seconds of the second half by Billy Moffit, Coker and Larry Worsley cut Carolina's lead to 52-46.

With 10:38 remaining, the Tar Heels were still on top, 65-59. With 9:40 to go, Worsley struck from the corner making the score 65-61 in favor of the Tar Heels.

The Wolfpack made their big-8:20 remaining. Guard Eddie Biedenbach hit a foul shot cutgest charge of the evening with ting the Tar Heel lead to three 67-64.

But the Tar Heels turned on the steam at that point. Field goals by Mark Mirken and John Pokley shot the lead to seven at 71-64 with 6:48 remaining. With 3:40 to go, a lay in by Lewis increased the margin to nine at 75-66 and the Tar Heels were home free.

State coach Press Maravich was disappointed with the Wolfpack showing. "We thought if we could hold Lewis and Miller to 40 points, we could win it. Well, we held them to 39 but Gauntlett and Yokley pulled up the slack."

Scoring totals for the Tar Heels found Miller and Gauntlett sharing top honors with 21 points each. Bobby Lewis, the ACC's leading scorer, checked in with 18 points. Guard Johnny Yokley hit for 11 points.

Leading the Wolfpack was Pete Coker with 23 points—the game's high scorer. Next in line was Larry Worsley with 21 points. Billy Moffitt and Gary Hale with 11 and 10 points respectively were next in line.

The Tar Heels outshot the Wolfpack from the floor hitting on 33 of 58 shots from the floor for 56.9 per cent. State connected on 31 of 69 attempts for a 44.9 per centage.

UNC hit 17 of 29 free throws while the Wolfpack made good on 13 of 21. The Tar Heels led in reounbding 47-36.

Walkways Will Join Buildings

BY PAUL BERNISH
Special to the DTH

Students living in Morehead College two years from now won't recognize it as just five similar buildings — if present plans materialize.

By the fall of 1967, Graham, Aycock, Lewis, Everett, and Stacy dorms might be connected by either covered walkways, a common building in the center of the quadrangel, or additional structures between the present buildings.

This plan, par of the reorganization of student housing, is envisioned by university officials, particularly James E. Wadsworth, the director of Student Housing.

It is hoped that the connections can be made between the dormitories by he beginning of classes in September, 1967, about the time when the Lower Quad will be converted to all-women housing.

"With the increase in the number of women students," says Wadsworth, "we must solve the problem of housing them all in unified sections of the campus. We feel that this idea will not only give the women a sense of identity on a large campus, but will also make it safer and easier for them to get to such places as the library and the dining hall."

But there are a lot of "ifs" involved in the plans. One is that the new high-rise men's dormitory planned for the Morrison Dorm area can be constructed on time.

A major problem will be money; although dormitory rentals pay for building renovation, money for such projects as connecting the five dorms will have to be authorized by the General Assembly, which does not convene again until 1967.

"Something will have to be done, however," adds Wadsworth. "Perhaps if these plans work out satisfactorily, we might try it in other areas of the campus."

Meanwhile, renovations in the Morehead College dorms will continue. Lewis, Stacy, and Everett are scheduled for renovation after the first term of this coming summer session. Eventually, the other dorms needing improvements will be worked on as time and money permit.

"One thing is certain," concludes Wadsworth, "we must implement these plans as soon as possible so we will be ready for the day when the men move out and the women move in."

Reedy Wins Fulbright

Dr. Daniel Reedy, a specialist in Spanish American literature at North Carolina, has received a 1966 Fulbright Fellowship for research in Lima, Peru.

Reedy is an assistant professor of Spanish in the Deguages.

He will begin his research studies in Lima on Jun. 1 and be there until Feb., 1966.

He is the author of a book and several articles on colonial and nineteenth century Peruvian literature.

Greenbacker Elected

Greenbacker, who has served for a year as President Pro Tem of the Senate, will succeed outgoing presiden John Harrison in inaugural ceremonies next month.

Harrison was elected to the President Pro Tem's position.

Greenbacker was opposed by Jerry Monro, who is currently serving as President of the Dialectic Senate.

The Di-Phi Senate is a union of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies, which were founded were in 1795.

They are the oldest debate and literary societies in the nation, and were the prototypes of Student Government on campus.

The Senate meets on Tuesday evenings to discuss issues of national and international interest.

Other officers include Miss M. S. Carson, Sergeant at Arms, Don Wilson, Parliamentarian, Ted Murphy, Treasurer and Baxter Linney, Critic.

Chancellor To Speak

Dr. Paul F. Sharp, who was resigned the chancellorship of North Carolina, will address the annual press dinner at Duke on Jan. 21.

Sharp will leave North Carolina on Feb. 15 to become the president of Drake University.

His talk will be on "The Ivy Towered Market Place."

Sharp's speech is expected to be one of his last major ones in this area before he leaves.

The Duke Press Dinner is an annual highlight of the Press Institute conducted by the North Carolina Press Association.

Folk Singer Coming

Dave Jones, folk guitarist, singer and student at North Carolina will perform in Graham Memorial lounge Friday at 8 p.m.

Jones has toured the United States and Canada performing in nightclubs and lecturing and performing at colleges. He is known locally for his Mississippi Delta blues and Chicago blues music. Jones has appeared at the "Sidetrack" in Raleigh as well as having played for Luci Baines Johnson.

He was at one time featured at the famous night spot in Memphis, Tenn., "The Fatted Calf."

The guitarist amazes his audiences with his intricate finger pickings that produce a sound all his own. Jones also uses open "bottleneck" tunings at his informal concerts.

The senior anthropology major has only recently entered the recording field with an album named "Devil's Child" which is recorded on the Inner Records label.

Admissions Director

Mr. Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions at North Carolina will speak at a meeting of the In-Service Training Program for staff members of the Office of the Dean of Women and for associates on the Admissions Office on Jan. 20 at 4 p.m. in 105 Hanes Hall.

Late Hours Approved

Women students will be given late permission from Tues. Jan. 18 through Wed. Jan. 26, according to Dorothy Fulghum, assistant to the Dean of Women.

The Women's Residence Council made the recommendation on Dec. 14; it was approved by the Dean of Women on Jan. 11.

Going To Grad School? Here's What It Takes

BY STEVE BENNETT
Special to The DTH

More undergraduates than ever want to go to graduate school, and according to the latest ratings, UNC grad schools are the best in the South.

What does it take to get into graduate school? The competition is keen, but every applicant must have at least the following qualifications for admittance:

—Have a bachelor's degree from a recognized institution.

—Have a strong overall record with a "B" average in his major.

In some cases, take the Graduate Record Examination.

—Supply two transcripts of all undergraduate work.

Supply three personal references.

Have a reading knowledge of one modern foreign language.

—File a completed application before the deadline.

If his application meet minimum Graduate School requirements, it is sent to the appropriate school for a recommendation.

There are 2,517 students enrolled in Graduate School at UNC, and 342 of these are graduates of Carolina. Duke graduates number second wih 85. The remaining 2,090 graduate students are graduates of colleges and universities all over the world.

No preference for admittance is given to a UNC graduate.

There are over one thousand North Carolina residents attending Graduate School at Carolina but many of them live in town. Other states with the largest numbers enrolled are S. C., Va., and N. Y. There are also 135 foreign students.

UNC boasts of 45 departments in its Graduate School. Over one third of the graduate students are enrolled in the departments of Public Health, English, Education. Library Science, History, and Business.

M. E. Woodard, university cashier said, "The tuition of graduate students is compiled on a semester hourly basis up through nine hours. The charge is $9 per hour for an in-state student and $32 per hour for an out-of-state student.

"If the student takes more than nine hours a semester his tuition is a flat rate of $87.50 for an in-state student and $300.00 for an out-of-state student. In addition every student is charged fees of $62 per semester."

There are many fellowships, assistantships, and other appointments available to help graduate students finance their studies.

Graduate students can take a maximum load of sixteen hours a semester. They can receive a full semester of residence credit if they successfully complete nine or more graduate credit.

Teaching fellows, graduate assistants, and instructors, whose time is partly devoted to service to the Universiy, are limited to nine or twelve semester hours a semester.

Out of the 2,517 graduate students, 1,651 are men and 866 are women.

Direcor of Housing, James E. Wadsworth, said: "More than half of the graduate students live off campus in apartments or rooms. Very few live in fraternity or sorority houses."

Single men that live on campus live in Conner Dormitory and the fifth and sixth floors of Craige Dormitory.

Single women live in Kenan Dormitory. Many of them also live in the privately owned high-rise Granville Hall which just opened this year.

There are about ten graduate men and seventeen graduate women serving as dormitory counselors.

The vast majority of married graduate students live in University Housing in Odum or Victory Village. There are 550 husbands and 150 wives living there that are graduate students.

ECU And The Single University Concept

The Smithfield Herald

The Johnston County Board of Commissioners has adopted a resolution which, in effect, declares opposition to the State's "single university concept."

The Board's resolution does not specifically oppose the single university concept. It simply gives support to conversion of East Carolina College into an independent state-supported university. But the real significance of the Board's resolution should not be overlooked.

What President Leo Jenkins of East Carolina College is seeking is not simply an expansion at Greenville which would give the college university status. He wants East Carolina to become a university separate from the Consolidated University of North Carolina. He challenges the validity of the single university system.

The single university concept has been formally adopted by the State of North Carolina. The concept is written into law. It calls for a single state-supported university with a single president and a single board of trustees. But the University of North Carolina is not confined to a single campus. There is the University at Chapel Hill, at Raleigh, at Greensboro, at Charlotte. The single university concept does not rule out University of North Carolina units in other communities. It does not rule out expansion of East Carolina College into the University of North Carolina is not confined to a single campus. There is the University at Chapel Hill, at Raleigh, at Greensboro, at Charlotte. The single university concept does not rule out University of North Carolina units in other communities. It does not rule out expansion of East Carolina College into the University of North Carolina at Greenville. The single university concept does oppose establishment of state-supported universities separate from the Consolidated University System.

In a democratic state, it is not wrong to challenge any policy of government. It is not wrong for President Jenkins to challenge the validity of North Carolina's single university concept. Nor is it wrong for the Johnston County Board of Commissioners to challenge that concept.

What would be wrong is hasty abandonment of the single university concept without careful study of the effects of the change in policy. Advocates of the university policy contend that the policy holds in check bitter rivalry among state-supported campuses in bids for legislative financial support. A single university system discourages unwarranted duplication of educational functions. The economies of a single unitversity system enable the State to stretch its dollars in the service of young people pursuing education. The single university concept is advocated as a means of promoting state unity in a common cause. It is a concept that did not suddenly spring up in North Carolina. It has evolved under the wisdom of thoughtful leaders, from the time of Governor Gardner to the present. In recent times the concept has achieved fulfillment with the blessings of two governors representing divergent political factions. The concept was promoted by Governor Sanford and is supported by Governor Moore.

The issue raised by President Jenkins should be decided on the merits of his proposal. President Jenkins and the county boards of commissioners that support him have the obligation to spell out what is wrong with the single university concept and to make clear how an East Carolina University separate from the single university system would serve the welfare of North Carolina.

It will be tragic if the proposed conversion of East Carolina into an independent university triggers an emotion-packed controversy that leaves buried the arguments based on reason. Already there are signs that some of President Jenkins's potential support lies among Eastern North Carolinians who (1) are sectionalists bitter over reapportionment and a shift of political power to the urban Piedmont; (2) are chronic critics of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and are especially angry just now over the recent amendment of the Speaker Ban law; or (3) are inclined to believe, without cause, that the single university system with headquarters in Chapel Hill is somehow involved in a conspiracy to impose Communism and racial integration on the people of North Carolina.

President Jenkins, of course, is an enlightened educator who has no spiritual kinship with people in our region who are afflicted with political paranoia. We may be sure that he bases his proposal on reason rather than emotion and that he identifies an independent university at Greenville with the economic and cultural advancement of Eastern North Carolina. President Jenkins deserves a full and fair hearing. Unfortunately, there is danger that his proposal could become a rallying point for embittered and frustrated people of the region who look longingly to the past instead of hopefully to the future and what the future conceivably could bring that is good for all North Carolina.

White House Has Bugs

The White House has a new efficiency expert — W. Marvin Watson Jr.

Watson has reportedly been monitoring telephone calls of presidential staff members. But, he claims, the only reasons he's doing this is his quest for the much-advertised LBJ efficiency.

This quest, Watson insists, also leads him to follow the comings and going of White House assistants.

Columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak say Watson has unnecessarily invaded the privacy of LBJ's staffers. But I disagree entirely. I'm sure he's perfectly honest when he claims he does everything in the name of "efficiency."

The following dialogue I overheard recently ought to prove my point (and, lest anybody doubt my intentions, let me say I overheard the dialogue not in the interest of snooping but with efficiency in mind.

"Please, McGeorge — me and the other gumshoes would like you to use that tapped telephone."

"But I don't want my civil rights invaded."

"Nonsense. LBJ is big on the efficiency bit, and he's complaining that White House security operations are costing too much money."

"But . . ."

"And while you're at it, how about moving over to the other side of the room."

"Hugh?"

"You see, McGeorge, we'd like to eliminate the cost of that extra hidden microphone we have in there now."

"I still say you're invading my personal liberties."

"Never mind that at the moment I'm also asking you to use only that olive over there when you mix up your martinis. You see, that's the one we've got bugged."

"What's next?"

"Next, McGeorge, we'd like you to remove the picture of your wife and family from your desk so we can substitute the one with the radio transmitter."

"You needn't go to the trouble. The Internal Revenue service had it wired for sound several months ago."

"Fine, McGeorge. That takes care of your office. Now — about those travel costs The President informs me you have stayed well within your expense account, but my gumshoes who follow you complain they have exceeded their budgetary limitations So please don't leave Washington unless it's absolutely necessary so we can spend less money keeping track of your whereabouts."

"What else?"

"We want you to neaten up your desk, McGeorge. We've been having trouble lately ransacking your papers."

"I swear, I'm going to submit my resignation."

"But why? If you follow the President's instructions, LBJ says he'll let you keep the lights on when you work late at night—provided you pull shades down."

Proposed Committee Can Cure Book Ills

By ALAN BANOV

You try to order your freshman math book, but the man at the Book Exchange says it might take weeks for it to arrive.

You try to sell your political science book, which you've rarely used, but the man at the Book Exchange offers you one-third the price you paid for it originally.

You need a certain book for parallel reading for a course, but the Book Exchange never stocks it.

Sounds like bad news, which it certainly is. But how can you change this situation?

The Cooperative Committee of Student Government has a proposal which will probably ameliorate these problems, after very extensive study of the book store systems at other schools as well as Carolina's, the committee has recommended to the University Board of Trustees that a faculty-student-administration board be established to oversee the management of the Book Exchange.

The board would include three student representatives appointed by the student body president for two year terms; three faculty members appointed by the chancellor for two year terms; and the University business manager, the dean of campus affairs, and the chancellor or his appointed representative.

The board would hold an open hearing at least once each semester to hear the many complaints about campus stores, would meet once a month, and could conduct an investigation of campus store operations at any time.

The policies of the board would be subject to the approval of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the University, but students would finally gain a voice in the policy decisions of the Book Exchange.

The UNC Book Exchange has been criticized for charging too much for textbooks. Although publishers generally suggest prices for books, other sores in the area have been known to charge less than the Book Exchange.

Another valid complaint about the store's policies is its habitually low re-purchase payments. The condition of the book seems hardly to be taken into consideration for determining its value, for the exchange usually pays only from one-third to one-half of the original cost of the book.

Students have found other stores and fellow students paying better prices for their used books. And Ehringhaus last year conducted a free book swap for its residents in a very successful project.

Like many services of the University, the Book Exchange seems more intent upon making a profit than serving students conveniently. The Book Exchange should be a viable institution, but its use of profits must also be examined.

Some $400,000 of cumulative income in the University stores over the last few years has been earmarked for a new Book Exchange. However, students have yet to hear word one about when or where it is to be built. After this year, the fund for the new building should be adequate for the proposed structure, which might cost about $500,000.

Some of the profits are supposedly appropriated for scholarships and fellowships. The appropriations for this item totaled about $875,000 from 1957 through 1965. These profits are probably used wisely, but students should be told what qualifications are required for the scholarships, so more might be able to share the Book Exchange's wealth.

The Coop Committee, which was originally designed to propose a student operated cooperative book exchange, has examined such facets of the store's management. It has concluded that the coop would be "unfeasible" here because of lack of funds, lack of permanent personnel, and lack of a store facility.

In addition, a clause of the State's Umstead Act prohibits "any unit, department, or agency of the state government . . . to purchase for or sell to any person, firm or corporation any article of merchandise in competition with private enterprises."

Campus opinion, evidenced in a poll conducted by Student Government's Communications Committee, overwhelmingly supports the establishment of a student-operated bookstore. Som 89.5 percent indicate their approval of such a venture, and 78.2 percent said they were dissatisfied with the Book Exchange.

The Board of Trustees has been presented the proposals, and students would be wise to study them. Student support would be necessary in any sort of legislative action or referendum on campus to effect these recommendations. If you want to see the services and prices of the Book Exchange improved, you should consider the proposals favorably.

The proposals are hardly radical, and the idea for a cooperative store has been discarded at this time. Student representatives on the proposed board would introduce the students' opinions on the Book Exchange for the first time. And the investigations conducted by the board would certainly enable the Exchange to seek solutions for students' gripes.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Flowers May Represent New Breed

BY RICHARD KING

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Until late summer or early fall if I had been asked, "Can anything good come out of Alabama?" the answer would have been no. Now I'm not so sure. The person in question is Richmond Flowers, Attorney-General of Alabama, and about him the only reply is, "Well — I'm just not sure."

By now Flowers' name has become relatively well known in the South and parts of the North. He has made the circuit of Ivy League colleges, appeared on national TV and been profiled in at least two national magazines.

But despite his claim to say the same thing in all his speeches, whether in New Haven or Tuscaloose (where I heard him), Flowers is something of a mystery. Physically he is a large, rather good-looking man with a knack for vernacular and popular phraseology which stick in the mind. What he is trying to do is another matter.

Strangely (or perhaps not so strangely) enough, those at the extremes, the George Wallace supporter and the civil righter, evaluate him similarly. To them, Flowers is an opportunist who has jumped on a bandwagon and is out only for his own political advancement.

The segregationist reminds us that Flowers was earlier noted for his skill in telling Negro dialect jokes and maintains that he is still a segregationist. Those at the other end of the spectrum claim he is not really sincere but that he has some ulterior motive.

To these people one can only say, "Yes, BUT." Opportunism and politics are certainly not mutually exclusive in our system of government and to say that Flowers is an opportunist is like saying he is a human being. It tells us nothing about him really. To say that he has shifted his position is also a truism.

Every Southern politican (here one can dare an absolute statement) who has ever been elected and served in the South has at one time or the other had to defend, usually openly and with a loud voice, the Southern Way of Life — that is, segregation. Of course, here we could begin with President Johnson and go down the list. These objections to Flowers may very well be true as far as his personal feelings go, but they aren't very helpful otherwise.

What to me is encouraging is that a Southern politician, in Alabama to boot, is vying for the political support of the Negro. If this is hypocrisy, it is one of the rare examples of hypocrisy which is to be welcomed over honesty. This is an hypocrisy which the South has seen precious little of.

Again my point is that a public display such as Mr. Flowers has put on this fall is a change and one for the better, no matter how limited, petty, and inadequate it may seem to the dedicated civil rights advocate or the liberal Northerner.

From reactions by Negro students to Flowers' talks in Tuscaloosa, I think there is little danger that the wool will be pulled over their eyes; and they do not see Flowers as a kind of white Messiah.

I think that Flowers' main appeal is to the much maligned (not altogether unjustly) Southern White Moderate. He is someone they (the Moderates) can be proud of. He stands for "the Law" and moderation. Flowers tells the Moderate that the Klan and Reverend King are at fault, that they both are troublemakers and just complicate an already difficult problem.

This is what the Moderate has thought all along and feels in his bones to be true. (To equate the Klan and King is obviously a gross oversimplification, if not a lie. The ironic thing is that Flowers is considered a liberal or even a radical by some. This says more about the South's thinking on the race problem than anything else.)

Flowers may just be right, however All his talk about the image of Alabama and the South being inaccurate may not be strictly correct, but by maintaining this he may rally enough support from various quarters to win an election at some time in the future.

Perhaps enough Southerners will finally get tired, from whatever impulse, of being the nation's whipping boy and try to change their image. To repeat an earlier point about hyprocrisy: that the South even cares about its image is a sart, however small and hypocritical, which should be welcomed.

At present Flowers is the man. He may be the forerunner of a new breed of Deep South politician.

Glee Club Review

A Review
BY GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

The University Varsity Men's Glee Club performed eloquently Tuesday night in their premier performance before a live Chapel Hill audience this year. And guest soloist Mary Burgess, in her initial performance in Chapel Hill, made those who heard her eager to her more of her in the future.

From the beginning of the 90-minute program to its end the Glee Club showed its versatility in doing both contemporary serious music and the more classical melodies in superior fashion.

Under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, the glee club and the soloist highlighted the concert with Johannes Brahams' Rhapsodie for Alto and Male Chorus.

Other than the highlight of the concert the Gleemen accompanied by Mike Kelly at the piano, won the hearts of the audience with their presentation of Thompson's version of Robert Frost's poem "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening," "The Pasture," and Clarke's version of John Donne's "No Man Is A Island."

Miss Burgess after completing her first appearance in Chapel Hill was presented a bunch of "peppermint" carnations by Bill Reel of the glee club.

The gleemen showed Tuesday night by their superb performance why they have been invited to represent the United States in the Welsh International Musical Eisteddfod in Europe this summer during a one-month tour.

AIESEC To Go Abroad

By DICK WHITE
Special To The DTH

UNC students now have the opportunity to gain practical business experience in a foreign country through the auspices of a new student association, AIESEC (Association Internationale des Etudiants en Sciences Economiques et Commerciales).

AIESEC ("eye-seck") was founded in France in 1949 and now includes 270 Universities in 40 countries. The UNC branch was started this fall.

The highlight of the AIESEC program is the traineeship, the practical on-the-job training assignment in a foreign country. The traineeship lasts from 8 weeks to a year and gives the student the opportunity to observe a foreign country's economic system in action.

Membership requirements are only six hours of economics and an interest in business. Freshmen cannot participate.

The local branch has the responsibility of soliciting local businessmen and convincing them to offer a traineeship to a foreign student.

UNC's distinction in being the "oldest state university" is based on the fact that students were first admitted in 1795. The first graduating class at Chapel Hill was in 1799.

Tar Babies Ramble Past State Wolflets

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

State's Wolflets hit this streak, see, in which they went almost eight minutes without a field goal, and you just can't do that against his Tar Baby club and expect to stay in the game. State did it last night, and was soundly trounced, 103-83.

In that 7:41 bucket famine, the home standing frosh outscored NCS by 23-1, and it was "see ya later" for the capital city boys. The spurt shot the Babies into a 47-18 lead which they never came close to losing.

It was fairly close battle up until then. From the outset, the ball changed hands in a flurry of misses shots, and Trifunovich's basket from the left sideline — which took 2:10 to be scored — gave State a 2-0 lead.

The first Tar Baby basket didn't come until Bill Bunting took a pass from Dick Grubar for a layup at 16:52, but in the next minute, Joe Brown, Grubar and Bunting again connected to run the score to 8-2 for UNC.

With 11 minutes left, Wolflet center Robert McLean engineered a three-point play and Trifunovich faked through the Carolina defense for a layup which cut his team's disadvantage to 16-13.

UNC got four quick points from Jim Bostick and a long bomb from the top of the circle from Gerald Tuttle to move into a more comfortable lead, and when Dick Braucher hit a jumper at 8:45, the State famine started.

In the next 7:41, Rusty Clark got nine points and Grubar seven, while the Babies ran away from the suddenly sickly inept Wolflets. State didn't get another field goal until McLean hit from 15 feet with 1:04 left in the half to make the score 47-20.

It was 50-24 at the midway point, and the Tar Babies ran up a 13-2 margin in the first 3:58 of the second period to put it completely beyond any questionable doubt.

FCA Grabs Grail Tourney

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes won the Grail Mural basketball tournament on Tuesday night by defeating Phi Delta Theta, 70-49. Five players scored in double figures in the balanced FCA attack. Don Baldwin led with 14 points, Mike Knowles and Frankie Gibbs added 13 each, Bill Edwards had 12 and Bill Bouton had 10. Butch Winstead was the high man for the Phi Delts with 16 points.

Tuesday intramural scores: ATO I 78, Zctes 32; Kappa Psi Red 70, KA Black I 30; Pi Kappa Phi No. 2 35, PiKA White 27; KA Black II 22, Phi Delt Losers 16; TEP Tops 26, Chi Phi Blue 22.

Monday scores: Phi Delt White 116, St. A. White 25; Everett Rogah 44, Graham Crackers 42; Mangum Mites 49, Manly Riverrats 44; Aycock Aardvarks 41, Stacy No. 1 32; Morrison F Falcons 49, Morrison D Devildogs 34; Morrison I Inebriates 38, Morrison H Marauders 26.

Morrison A Rebels 54, Morrison H Bombers 38; Morrison G Gunners 36, Morrison C Red 28; Stacy No. 2 38, Everett Hustlers 32; Everett Eels 46, Aycock Addaxs 37; Phi Delts Theta 59, Pi Kappa Alpha 28.

The intramural department, like everyone else, must study for exams and all events are through for the rest of the semester. They will resume again in February.

No More Tickets At Duke

Blue Devil Business Manager of Ahtletes "Red" Lewis has announced the Duke-UNC basketball game on Saturday, February 26, is a sellout.

Tickets for the Wake Forest game can be picked up at the Carmichael ticket office on January 31, registration day for the spring semester. The new spring athletic passes will be necessary in order to receive Wake Forest tickets.

The return engagements between the Blue Devils and Tar Heels will be the final regular season contest for both teams prior to the ACC Tournament and will be the final ACC TV Game of the Week so, those fans who do not have tickets for the game will be able to watch it on television.

This is about the earliest date that a Duke-Carolina game has been sold out in recent memory.

Duke Indoor Stadium seats around 9,000 people, only 500 more than Carmichael Auditorium.

Star Grid Performer Signs Pact With UNC

William (Bill) Maddox, an all - around athlete who attends the Manlius School, near Syracuse, N. Y., has signed a football grant-in-aid at the University of North Crolina.

Maddox stands 6-4 and weighs 225 pounds. He plays baseball, basketball and football and last fall captained the Manlius grid team.

"Bill is a top-flight student and athlete," said George Boutselis, North Carolina assistant coach. "He should do well on the college level."

The largest margin of defeat Carolina has ever suffered was 43 in losing 63-20 to the Lynchburg Elks in 1915.

The following poem was sent to us by Prof. Danie Textoris of the Geology Department.

Textoris says the poem first appeared in the Daily Illini at the University of Illinois about two years ago. The author is unknown.

Textoris says he passes out this tragic poem to his students in Geology 11 and 12 just before final exams in hopes that it will convey a message.

We pass it along to you with the same hopes.

I SHALL NOT

And, it came to pass,
Early in the morning toward the last day of the semester,
There arose a great multitude smiting the books and wailing.

And there was much weeping and gnashing of teeth,
For the day of judgment was at hand.
And they were sore afraid, for they had left undone
Those things which they ought to have done,
And they had done
Those things which they ought not to have done
And there was no help for it.

And there were many abiding in the dorm
Who had kept watch over their books by night,
But it availed them naught.

But some were who rose peacefully,
For they had prepared themselves the way
And made straight paths of knowledge.
And these were known
As wise burners of the midnight oil.
And to others they were known as "curve raisers."

And the multitude arose
And ate a hearty breakfast.
And they came unto the appointed place
And their hearts were heavy within them.

And they had come to pass,
But some to pass out.

And some of them
Repented of their riotous living and bemoaned their fate,
But they had not a prayer.

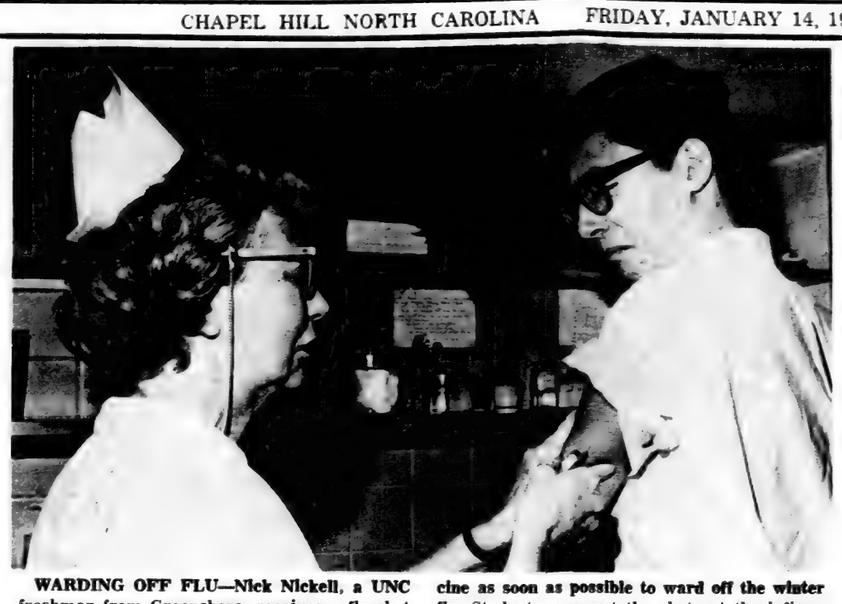
And at the last hour there came among them
One known as the instructor; and they feared exceedingly.
He was of the diabolical smile,
And passed papers among them and went his way.

And many and varied
Were the answers that were given,
For some of his teachings had fallen among fertile minds.
While others had fallen flat.

And some there were who wrote for one hour,
Others for two;
But some turned away sorrowful, and many of these
Offered up a little bull
In hopes of pacifying the instructor.
And these were the ones who had not a prayer.

And when they finished,
They gathered up their belongings
And went their way quietly, each in his own direction,
And each one vowing unto himself in this manner;

I shall not pass this way again."



WARDING OFF FLU—Nick Nickell, a UNC freshman from Greensboro, receives a flu shot from Margaret Cole at the Student Infirmary. Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth of the UNC Health Service said students should take the flu vaccine as soon as possible to ward off the winter flu. Students may get the shots at the infirmary from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and from 2 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. There is a fee of $1.—DTH Photo By Ernest Robl

Residence Hall Committee Improves Living Conditions

By PEGGY ALEXANDER
Special to the DTH

A coed sits in the washroom waiting to use the only washing machine in the dorm.

One girl shows her firend the bruised knee she got slipping on the Old Wing stairs.

Another complains that she is tired of taking showers and wishes that a bathtub were installed.

These three situations have little relation, yet all three represent dormitory problems which many UNC coeds face.

The problems arising in campus dormitories do not go unnoticed, however. The Resident Hall Improvement Committee within the executive branch of student government studies dorm problems and tries to improve conditions in the residence halls.

The committee, composed of members representing geographical divisions of residence hall areas, reports the opinions of students in the dorms and makes recommendations for improvements.

Appropriations are made by the student government for social projects designed to improve social conditions in the residence halls.

A recent bill introduced by the committee and members of dorms to the legislature requested color television sets for many dormitories.

The University administration provides funds for required improvements, such as repairing and installing needed facilities.

Such a joint project was the agreement for the addition of a social room in the Upper Quad Manley, Mangum, Quad (Manley, Mangum, case the administration is providing two - thirds of the cost; student government, one-third.

The women's residence halls are divided into six areas: Nurses' dorm; Smith and Whitehead; East and West Cobb; Winston; Spencer; and Kenan, McIver and Alderman.

The women's dorms which have been converted from men's dorms have the most improvement problems. These dorms, built for men, have not been completely changed to meet the requirements of women residents.

Most of the converted dorms do not have bathtubs, just showers. Winston has two washing machines and one automatic dryer for about 300 students. Whitehead has one washer and one dryer for 110 students.

Winston committee representative Pam Wise reports that, although the dorm's one study room is sufficient study space, better curtains are needed for the privacy of coeds studying there. She also said that ample study space was made in the use of small rooms on each floor.

Whitehead has one study room the size of a double room. It has no curtains, but shades on the windows.

Miss Wise also said that the parlor area had been greatly improved but that some minor changes are necessary.

"The parlors are adjacent to the television room, spearated only. by folding doors "Students watching television want more privacy," she said.

Whitehead has no private television room. It's television is placed in one of the parlors at the dorm entrance.

Other dorms have similar problems. Judy Whitaker of the Kenan, McIver, Alderman area reports that McIver has one washing machine and no dryer for its students. This dorm has no private television room either.

THE METAL STRIPPING on the edges of Spencer's old wing stairs, shown above, are worn to the point that they are slick. Such dangers in girl's dorms are being acted on by the Residence Hall Improvement Committee.—DTH Photo By Andy Myers

Coed Finds Sea Roaming Hard Work

By SUE THOMPSON
Special To The DTH

When the king-size cruise schooner Polynesia ran aground on a Bahama reef, Jan. 6 this year, Carolina coed Karen Schneider was glad to be warm and safely on dry land.

Karen, a junior philosophy major from Fayetteville, went to work in 1964 as a stewardess for the largest windjammer in the world, the Yankee Clipper.

During her ten-day cruise in the Caribbean, the Clipper, under the command of Captain Mike Burke, encountered no danger greater than minor engine trouble.

Karen was just lucky.

For within the past three years, Burke's "Windjammer Cruises" sailing fleet has had five mishaps.

In 1963, there were three accidents, and two in 1966. The Polynesia is the smallest of the fleet, and "the prettiest," Karen said.

When asked why she took on such a job, she exclaimed, "I just wanted to take out for the high seas."

Upon boarding the Clipper for the first time, she was handed a bottle of ammonia, which meant only one thing to her. She described her first assignment as one of "scrubbing the deck and just tearing the whole thing down."

Her reward came at night, that part of the day which was completely her own. "There's nothing more beautiful than waking up at three o'clock in the morning underneath the stars," she said.

Karen's sleeping quarters were outside the ship's cabin.

Another vivid memory which sticks in her mind was her first sight of the ship she would soon be sailing on.

She described it as a large boat with "the most beautiful sails you ever saw." Strong Negro men work to the rhythm of their song.

Karen explained that the ship's itinerary is determined by the passengers' wishes. "Sometimes we would make stops just so passengers could collect sea shells."

There were many added attractions for the tourists. The most impressive were the windjammer sails, which were strictly ornamental.

Karen said she was very disappointed to learn that while the Clipper appeared to sail across the water, an engine below the ship's deck was really doing the work.

The windjammer cruises are designed to give people a chance to get away from it all by casual travel.

For Karen, nothing was casual and after a ten-day cruise she admits she was "throughly exhausted and ready to abandon the seas for awhile.

This is exactly what she did.

Acquiring the job of governess for six children, she went from scrubbing the deck to scrubbing faces.

Her employer was a noted shipbuilder and boat racer in Cocoanut Grove, a suburb of Miami. Karen said he reminded her of the captain in the "Sound of Music."

And she was not far from being another Fraulein Maria herself.

Duties ranged from taking the children to church to taking them to the dentists to teaching them how to swim.

She said they taught her a thing or two also, for they were good sailors and learned all their sailing tricks from their father.

She remembers the Sunday morning when her four year old got into a keg of beer and went to church in Schlitz-stained clothes.

Having heard about the job from a passenger on the windjammer, Karen went for an interview, was introduced to her temporary family and "plush living quarters." She immediately moved in.

She was no longer underneath the stars, but her room was much warmer than the deck of a ship.

N.C. Senate Okays Reapportionment

RALEIGH (AP)—The North Carolina House Thursday pushed a plan for redrawing the state's 11 congressional districts to the edge of enactment and wrote into law a reapportionment scheme for itself.

The legislature, its two chambers on the brink of an open feud, approved the House plan after a conference committee wrestled with it over night. It was a personal defeat for Rep. Chalky Wallace of Montgomery County.

The House approved the congressional redistricting plan, 78-35, but delayed final action until Friday when Rep. George Uzzell of Rowan objected to the third and final reading.

Before endorsing the proposal, the House moved Warren County to the Second District. The change will have to be approved by the Senate before the bill becomes law.

Under the proposal, the Second District would include Warren, Granville, Vance, Franklin, Halifax, Edgecombe, Wilson, Johnston, Greene and Lenoir counties.

The House defeated congressional redistricting plans offered by Rep. James Vogler of Mecklenburg and the Republican party. Vogler's plan received the support of 50 legislators.

The House also voted down an attempt to get Rutherford County moved from the 11th to the 10th District.

Rep. Lacy Thornburg of Jackson County argued that if Rutherford was taken out of the 11th District "it would play havoc" with the population of the district as compared with the ideal figure suggested by the court.

Uzzell attacked the congressional plan, saying "you are making the greatest mistake. You are hurting us Rowan County worse than any act you have ever enacted."

The debate on the House reapportionment plan centered around whether Montgomery County should be in the same district with Randolph County which consistently votes Republican.

The House approved the bill Wednesday, but it stalled for one day when it hit the Senate. At present, 49 counties in the state have districts in which candidates can reside any where in the county and run for the board.

Under the Britt plan, the county boards will be permitted to either realign their districts "if they feel there is unequal representation in those districts," or abolish the district lines and let the candidates run at large.

The legislation is designed to enable counties which have districts to head off possible lawsuits over representation on the boards. Two suits are pending in federal court attacking the commissioner districts in Onslow and Carteret counties.

Sen. Herman Moore of Mecklenburg contended the special legislative session was called to handle only legislative reapportionament and congressional redistricting.

Subways Rolling After 12 Days

NEW YORK — (AP)—With a roar above ground and a rumble beneath, New York's 800-mile subway and bus system rolled back to normal yesterday, with settlement of a 12-day citywide transit strike, first in the city's history.

Losses of $500 million to $800 million during the municipal crisis were grievious, and strike settlement terms placed the 15-cen transit fare in jeopardy. But eight million footsore New Yorkers hailed with jubilation the end of the mammoth tieup.

Peace terms were drawn up by a three-man team of nationally known mediators, although Republican Mayor John V. Lindsay hailed the agreemen as a triumph for collective bargaining. The cost to the city was estimated at from $52 million to $70 million over two years.

The strike ended before dawn and by noon subways and buses were reported on schedule on nearly all lines. Said conductor John T. Downes, 59, aboard one of the first subway trains to roll:

"It sure feels good. It was the first strike and I hope the last."

However, Manhattan underwent another big traffic jam as motorists poured to work before the resumption of transit service.

"I ask the people of New York to do the exceptional for just one more day," said Lindsay in pleading for patience on the clogged streets.

With the strike over, Michael J. Quill, president of the AFL-CIO Transport Workers Union, was released from imprisonment as were eight other strike leaders jailed for contempt. Quill remained in Bellevue Hospital where he is being treated for a heart condition. But the bills for his $48 a day hospital room and for extensive treatment were no longer being picked up by the city.

Also dropped was a $322,000-a-day damage claim brought against the union by the Transit Authority. In winding up this phase of the authority's conempt case against strike leaders, State Supreme Court Justice Abraham Geller said:

"If this had had gone further, God only knows what would have happened to the concept of colective bargaining."

Lindsay estimated losses due to the strike at $500 million. The commerce and industry association, scaling down a previous billion dollar estimate, put the loss at $800 million, and called the economic blow the severest "since the great depression."

Spring Rush Starts Feb. 13

Spring Rush will begin on Feb. 13, according to Intra-Fraternity Council President Frank Martin.

"An organizational meeting will be held sometime during the week before rush to explain the technical aspects of rush to all interested freshmen," Martin said.

This is the second year that rush has been held in the spring. Before this, rush was held during the fall semester. Martin said that spring rush had grown out of a faculty, administration and student conference held in Southern Pines during the spring of 1962. Spring rush was especially instigated to replace the "80 per cent rule." The 80 per cent rule said that a fraternity was not allowed to rush if 80 per cent of the brothers did not receive a 2.0 average.

In answer to a question concerning spring rush, Martin said that a smaller amount of boys pledged last spring, but this was to be expected were apt to flunk out under the fall rush system.

The residence college system is not expected to hinder this year's rush. "I am glad to see the residence college system in operation," Martin said, "because it provides a social outlet for boys who are not interested in fraternities."

Joyner Seeks 5th Head

If Joyner Dormitory residents seem bewildered this year when asked who the dormitory president is they have a right to be. There have been three different ones and the fourth one is to assume office tomorrow.

The different administrations have come about, not by violent overthrow by dorm residents, but by other less violent methods.

The first resident to hold the office was Rusty Ward who was elected to the position last February and assumed his duties in March.

However, he did not return to the University in the fall and the vice president of the dormitory, Pat Rhodes assumed the president's office. However, a short time later he resigned and the newly elected vice - president Don Kemlein took over the president's duties.

But now Kemlein is moving off the campus and is leaving the president's office vacant. Freshman Rick Draper who was elected vice president of the dormitory about six weeks ago now finds himself being elevated into the president's position.

After thinking about being the fourth president of the dormitory this year, he commented, "I just hope that I can last for the remaining month until the new officers are elected."

Fire Damages House

A small fire broke out late yesterday afternoon in a one-story frame house on Church St. causing extensive damage to one room.

Capt. R. B. Williams of the Chapel Hill Fire Department said no one was injured. The house, at 303 Church St. near the Oh Boy drive in, is owned by Jesse Stouds.

Williams said the cause of the fire was a small two-burner oil stove in a side room. Apparently the stove exploded.

The fire destroyed most of the room including its contents, a television, piano, couch and two chairs.

The fire broke out about 4 p.m. and the fire department arrive minutes later. They contained the blaze in the one room and finished mopping up by 5 p.m.

Prof Wins Award

Dr. Carl W. Gottschalk, professor of medicine at North Carolina, has been named a recipient of a 1966 Award for Distinguished Achievement in medicine.

The awards are made annually by Modern Medicine magazine to 10 physicians and scientists who have made significant contributions to the medical profession.

He received the award for creating techniques leading to proof of the countercurrent mechanism in renal secretaion.

Shetland Resigns

Dr. Margaret L. Shetland, professor and director of Public Health Teacher Preparation Program at North Carolina has resigned her post.

She will become dean of the College of Nursing at Wayne State University in Detroit on Feb. 1.

Suggestions Sought

The Campus Chest Executive Council is seeking suggestions concerning which organizations or charities should receive funds from this year's Campus Chest Drive.

According to Dave Bruenner, co-chairman of the council, students have in the past complained of having no voice in the distribution of the fubds. Bruenner said he feels that for this reason some students have been reluctant to contribute.

He Cut A Mean Cape

Gleeps!

Police Commissioner Gordon doesn't know who he is, but he's always there when they need him.

Released from the confines of the comic book shelves in drug stores, supermarkets and dime stores, Batman lives, fighting his war against crime.

He lives and fights twice a week now—on television. His Wednesday night debut was the most thoroughly enjoyable bit of pure entertainment to hit the tube in many a season.

Our hero's first televised venture pitted him against one of his cunning arch-foes, the Riddler. Robin, demonstrated his remarkable talent by coming up with instantaneous solutions to these riddle clues:

Why is an orange like a bell?

"Both are pe(e)(a)led."

There are three men in a boat. They have four cigarettes, but no matches. How do they smoke?

"Throw one of the cigarettes overboard and make the boat a cigarette lighter."

When is the time of a clock like the whistle of a train?

"At two-to-two."

What has neither flesh, bone nor nail, yet has four fingers and a thumb?

"A glove."

The video version of the Cape Crusader is considerably less muscular than his printed counterpart, but this does not affect this virtue. He entered a crowded discotheque in full costume, strode casually to the bar ("I don't want to attract attention") and ordered—an orange juice.

The drink was drugged, of course, but before he passed out, the masked crime fighter took to the dance floor with a lucious conspirator portrayed by Jill St. John.

"You shake a pretty mean cape, Batman," she cooed.

Indeed he did. We expect to see the Bat-tusi sweep the nation in no time at all.

In future episodes, Batman must face The Riddler . . . The Joker . . . The Penguin . . . Zelda the Great. Our confidence in the protector of Gotham City is unwavering, but there is one match we'd like to see—Batman versus 007.

Would the Bat Belt make James Bond's attache case look like a tea set?

Could Batman compete with Bond in the budoir?

Holy barracuda! What a battle that would be.

States Have Shirked Duty

While the extreme breadth of the Supreme Court's rulings on Congressional and legislative reapportionment is to be regretted, fair-minded critics must admit that the states brought the trouble on themselves.

The cure for the ills of unfair apportionment may turn out to be worse than the disease; but if the states had acted responsibly, the disease could have been prevented.

Before the Supreme Court took action in 1962, many states solved the problem of reapportionment by ignoring it — often in violation of their own state constitutions. Louisiana had not redistricted since its constitution was written in 1921, despite a provision that it redistrict every ten years. Alabama's legislative arrangement had gone unchanged for 60 years.

Because the states were derelict in their duty, a "rotten-borough" system grew up, in which rural counties were heavily overrepresented in state legislatures. As the shift in population from country to city continued, the composition of the state legislatures became more and more out of touch with reality.

Frustrated urban voters were powerless to correct the situation, since the rural districts elected the majority of the legislators. The rural legislators put personal power above the welfare of their states and refused to adjust the apportionment to keep in step with the shift in population — despite their moral and legal obligation to do so.

Into the vacuum left by the legislators' abdication of responsibility stepped the Supreme Court. In the landmark decision of Baker v. Carr, the Court ruled that it had jurisdiction over legislative apportionment Since that ruling the Court has widened its edict to the famous "one man-one vote" decision.

Cheerfully or grudgingly, the state legislatures are moving to comply with the Court's ruling. Since the states must reapportion, they should do the best possible job. Attempts to get around the decision will only cause trouble.

The courts are in no mood to stand for evasive tactics, and the inevitable result of such foolishness will be cour-directed reapportionment. The courts have already done too much in this area. The states should not invited more judicial action.

In attempting to redistrict themselves, many state legislaures are exploring new territory — they've never done it before. Congressional reapportionment, on the other hand, is something most legislatures are familiar with. The Federal Constitution has more force than the state constitutions, and he seats in the House of Representatives are shuffled after every census.

Congressional reapportionment, then, should be no real problem. It is done regularly, and there are relltively few seats to worry about. Unfortunately, this is the job that may cause the most trouble.

The ludicrous plan proposed by the committee of the North Carolina General Assembly makes a mockery of the court requirement that districts looks like illustration from a textbook on gerrymandering.

The committee's plan has virtually no chance of securing court approval. It meets the equal population requirement, but that is all. Sadly, some legislators are apparently willing to let the Federal court Hopefully, such sentiments will be squelched. The Federal government and the Federal courts are assuming enough of the duties and responsibilities of the states without the states' giving them more.

The difficulty, of course, is politics. Congressmen are powerful people, and the legislatures are hesitant to redistrict some of them out of office — especially if they are of the same party as the legislative majority.

It is time for the state legislatures to rise above partisan politics and do an honest job of reapportionment. Some important toes will be stepped on, but that cannot be helped. The worst thing the states can do is to drop the problem into the lap of the Federal courts. The states have ignored their duty long enough. They should not abandon it entirely.

Letter To The Editor

Klan Is no Joke

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel

On Jan. 11 under the heading, "The Student Speaks," Mr. Gilliam presented an article entitled, "Liberals Show their Bigotry." Mr. Gilliam quite obviously showed his bigotry, as well as his stupidity, in this attack. Either Mr. Gilliam has never met a liberal, or else he has totally misinterpreted and misunderstood everything that a liberal stands for.

Mr. Gilliam remarked that the audience found the CBS News Special on the KKK to prove the Klan "is ignorant, hateful and above all a joke." I and other liberals sitting near me felt quite to the contrary — this is no joke.

The members ot the KKK are known to come from the lower boundaries of the class scale in America. They are the most threatened by the recent Civil Rights legislation and it's natural for them to take their hostilities out on the Negro. (Just because the liberal is for Civil Rights does not mean that he is against the KKK.)

The average Klansman does come from the "white ghetto" as Mr. Young suggested, and he sees no way to get out. (I doubt that you could find a liberal to disagree with that.) The Klansman is a sad and pathetic individual who is constantly watching the advantages of America passs him by.

The most Un-American thing about the KKK is the conditions which promulgate its formation. Cross burnings, lynchings and mob violence are not Un-American —they are inhuman. But what makes a human being behave inhumanly if it is not being treated as, or feeling like, something inhuman.

Before the Klan can be alleviated, the ugliness of the life of the KKK member must be alleviated. The Klan is more threatened by American society than it is a threat to it. Investigations or condemnations by the House Committee on Un - American Activities cannot and will not alleviate the ugliness.

As a liberal, I am speaking for myself. I do, however, think that the majority of liberals on this campus would agree with my interpretation of the Klan and of HUAC. I hope that this letter will give a better understanding, to Mr. Gilliam and other anti - liberals, as to what being a liberal means and moreso to what a liberal thinks.

Carolina Fraternity System Needs Improvement

For over a week now, Student Government has been receiving replies from the Interfraternity Councils of the nation's largest state universities in response to a quesionnarie on fraternity activities.

The survey, which was formulated and is being conducted by Presidential Assistant Bob Wilson, will attempt to serve as a guide for the UNC-IFC in improving its status on campus.

Whether Wilson's effort will produce any concrete results or not remains to be seen, but the replies that have already arrived in the mail have stirred some controversy in Graham Memorial.

One report, from the IFC of the University of Washington, would open the eyes of any responsible fraternity man on campus.

Admittedly Washington's IFC is above average nationally.

Hardly a year passes without its being cited by the National Interfraternity Conference but this is all the more reason why it should serve as a model here.

Formal rush for freshmen takes place a week before school starts. The early participation by freshmen in fraternity activities is approved by the Washington administration, which points to the high overall fraternity scholastic average.

Washington administrators have agreed with IFC officials that fraternity association actually improves scholarship, and promotes good habits and an orderly schedule for the freshman's life.

Informal rush continues throughout the year.

Here are some of the Washington IFC's activities:

—A fraternity newspaper which is published frequently and distributed to Greeks and alumni.

—A fraternity scholarship committee which sets up speaking programs and biquarterly "how to study" meetings for Greeks. It also counsels individual houses on academic improvement.

—Full use of an IBM program for conducting fraternity surveys and determining the fraternity interests of rushees.

—A rush system that seeks to place the freshman in a fraternity which is most compatible with his interests. This is the primary prupose of rush and is enforced by fraternity ledders.

—A total of three retreats held each

these words:

"One thing I would especially like to emphasize is the part the University administration has played in our success.

"By giving the IFC a sense of responsibility in all matters pertaining to fraternities, including disciplinary, the conduct of the fraternity men on our campus nas been excellent."

It is difficult for fraternity man to read such a report and keep from asking, "What the hell's the matter with us?"

There is no way of answering this question for sure.

Maybe its because Carolina has produced a "fraternity mind" different and more apathetic than other fraternity systems at big universities.

All too often the Greek system has been represented by the sneering, un-reconstructed individual whose major purpose at the University is to have a good time, smash out windows of other houses on the weekend, and graduate with a 2.0 into daddy's business.

Maybe the University administration here is undully hostile or unsympathetic to fraternities.

All too prejudiced and pessimistic often an administration has fostered mistrust within the fraternity system by forcing rules on and weakening the power of the IFC.

Maybe the fraternity system here has refused to inculcate within its members a sense of mutual civility and responsibility which is necessary for any lasting cooperation or organization.

Maybe its a lot of things.

The one thing that we can be sure of here is that within the past few years the fraternity system has been under increased pressure to produce and justify its existence.

Maybe some of these goals can be achieved if the UNC-IFC emulates the Greek system at the University of Washington.

year on weekends away from campus. University administrators, advisers, house presidents and IFC officers met to discuss important issues.

—An IFC communications committee which works closely with the university press bureau to aid the image of the fraternity system on campus and around the state.

—A university-organized housing association which utilizes the collective bargaining power of fraternities to purchase all goods for the houses' operations. The Washington IFC estimates this association has saved fraternities a total of $15,000 during the past year through discounts.

—An annual interfraternity mothers' conference which raises scholarship funds and aid's the IFC's high school relations.

—A fraternity expansion committee which works closely with the Seattle Zoning Board.

—A Junior IFC composed of pledges which works in charitable efforts.

—AN IFC high school visitation committee which sends representatives of the IFC along with the Dean of Men and ROTC officers to state high schools for talks with incoming freshmen and other interested students.

—A faculty relations Committee which ehlps to improve the Greek system by utilizing the suggestions of faculty members.

—An annual parents weekend and all-campus entertainment programs.

—A fraternity advisers association which aids the IFC and helps in rush.

—Several committees which deal in social services for the campus and the city of Seattle.

—A people to people program which aids foreign students at the University.

There are undoubtedly many other programs the Washington IFC involved itself with since this report came out, but it would take much more space and time to list them.

Chuck Blumenfeld, the IFC president at Washington, closed his letter to Wilson with

Try Dorm Living For A Unique Experience

By TOMMY DAIL
Special To The DTH

Television advertisers tell you that if you want a unique experience, try Colt 45. After living in a dormitory room for three and one-half years, I say try living in a dorm for a unique experience.

For those of you who have not had the pleasure of living in the sheer, quiet, uncrowded comfort of a dormitory then, an account of a typical day's acivities will give you an idea of what you're missing.

At seven o'clock you are awakened by the refreshing voice of WSSB's Country Boy coming to you loud and clear from your early-bird hallmate's room.

Because of past experience, you succeed in blocking some of this distraction with your pillow, but a few minutes later the swishing sounds of he janitor's push - broom clanging against your waste basket is too much so you rise and pine.

After dressing you leave your peaceful abode and catch up on your sleep in your lecture classes.

Classes being over, you decide to return to the dorm and listen to radio or work crosswords. As you enter your room, you find your roommate catching up on his sleep so you spend another afternoon milling around the TV room or the gymnasium.

After supper you decide to study in your room where you have good lighting and solitude. This brilliant idea is shattered when you open the door and find eight of your roommate's best friends having a jam session with cigarette smoke providing the friendly atmosphere.

You charge to the library trying to recall which fellow was on your bunk with the sweaty jeans squirming around on your newly-cleaned sheets.

At eleven o'clock you figure the crowd is gone so you'll go back and get some sleep. The crowd has gone and after you air the room out and settle down for a long winter's snooze, the almost soundproof rooms almost knock out the late movie blaring from your hallmate's tube.

Further down the hall, the pitter-patter of a super ball bouncing back and forth blends smoothly with the six-day drunk stumbling down the stairs singing "Louie, Louie."

But wait! What's that you hear? Why it's the MRC to the rescue. In a matter of hours the halls ring with silence and your long-awaited sleep finally comes. You drift into a nervous sleep with the satisfaction that you've survived another day in the dorm. Friends, take this advice — for a unique experience try Colt 45.

Sorority Rushing Will Begin Feb. 4

By JUDY LOVE
Special to the DTH

Sorority spring rush begins February 4 with a reception at Graham Memorial given by the Panhellenic Council.

Last spring the Council decided to let freshmen girls go through spring informal rush for the first time in four years. Rush was deferred until the sophomore year four years ago because there were so few freshman girls and their curricula demanded most of their time.

The Panhellenic reception will be held to give each rushee the opportunity to meet each sorority president, rush representative.

The first rush party will be held Feb. 6 and parties will continue through Feb. 28. Bids will be issued March 2, after rushees have signed their preference sheet.

Approximately 100 of the 150 girls who signed up for spring informal rush are freshmen. The total figure does not include girls eligible for rush who will transfer here in February.

According to Madeline Gray, president of the Panhellenic Council, freshmen who plan to go through spring rush are not allowed on sorority grounds until after rush has begun. Violation of this rule will cause a girl to be dropped from spring rush.

Silence is not being observed during spring rush as it was during fall rush. Rushees and sorority members may talk to each other, but not about sororities. Any questions that a rushee wishes to know about sororities may be answered by Stray Greeks.

North Carolina played a total of 683 games of basketball from 1939 through last season. Overall record for the Tar Heels during that span was 462 victories against 221 defeats.

RCA
will interview for Graduate Training Programs
on
February 8

Candidates for BS, AB and Advanced Degrees are invited to consider this opportunity to join a world-famous electronics corporation.

Briefly, the three principal RCA programs are:

COMPUTER MARKETING
requires individuals with good academic standing and a degree in engineering, science, mathematics, liberal arts, or business administration, with an interest in computer systems and sales.

The program consists of five integrated phases incorporating both formal and on-the-job training.

ENGINEERING
for the engineer or physicist interested in research, development or design engineering.

There are three possible avenues for the individual chosen:

Design and Development Specialized Training
will help you decide in which directions your career aptitudes lie.

Direct Assignment
for the person who knows his chosen field of interest.

Graduate Study
offers selected candidates an opportunity to continue their studies, fee paid, for two days a week, and work at RCA three days.

FINANCIAL
for the graduate with an interest in financial management and the applications of the computer in the field of finance.

This is a complete indoctrination into RCA's approach to financial management and other management functions. You will be trained in depth to assume an important post in one of the many RCA businesses.

See your placement officer now to arrange an interview with an RCA representative.

PERFORMANCE
THE CHEVROLET WAY

It's our Turbo-Jet 396: the V8 strong enough to run your Chevrolet and its automatic transmission, power steering, air conditioning, power windows, AM/FM Multiplex Stereo radio. And more. Without even breathing hard.

Reason is, a Turbo-Jet V8 breathes deeper. Breathes freer. Delivers more usable power whenever you need it—like for safer passing. Works more efficiently. Where the smaller engine hurries, a Turbo-Jet V8 just loafs along. You try it, at your Chevrolet dealer's. And nowhere else.

We offer two Turbo-Jet 396 V8s for '66. You can order 325 hp in any Chevrolet; 325 or 360 hp in a Chevelle SS 396. There's also a 427-cu.-in. Turbo-Jet (up to 425 hp) available in Chevrolets and Corvettes.

Way to go Tar Heel fans. You really inspired the Heels when they needed it the most.

Near the end of the game (Wednesday night) the crowd gave us that inspiration to push and we came back," Coach Dean Smith said at his usual after game press conference. With the Carolina lead cut to three and 8:20 left in the game, the resurgence began.

Carmichael Auditorium was sparsely populated for the freshman game, but the frosh understood "Bat" fans.

After Batman was over the auditorium filled to capacity and who could blame any Carolina student for not watching that comic book character who preserves law and order beridding Gotham City of all her fiendish and dastardly criminals.

May I say congratulations to the UNC ushers who directed the crowd so well and the cheerleaders who kept the fans so fired up. You both deserve a pat on the back.

Dean Smith was pleased with his win, but he indicated the team must improve its sloppy ball handling of the first half or meet with disastrous results in the near future.

The Carolina coach singled out each of his starting five as follows:

Lewis did a fine job of assisting and is playing just as good as during the first of the season. He's definitely not in a slump hitting eight of 11 from the floor tonight.

Miller looked great under the boards.

We are much stronger when Bennett is in the game." (Bob fouled out with 12 minutes still left to play.)

Gauntlett along with Bennett has improved more than anyone on the team this year.

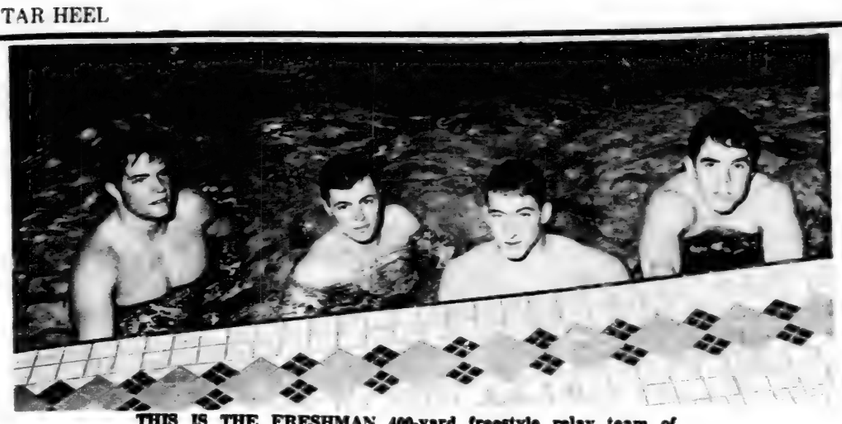
And Yokley did a good job on (Eddie) Biedenbach."

Coach Smith gave praise to State as well, earmarking Press Maravich's boys as the finest shooting team in the conference."

Asked to comment on Duke's tough game with the Tigers Tuesday night, Smith smiled and said, I wouldn't want to go back to Clemson this year."

Not only did the varsity win against State, but the frosh did also. In fact, the freshman victory was the 30th in the last 38 games against Big Four" opposition and one more victory against the Big Four opponents will give the Tar Babies a third straight Big Four Title.

PS—TV watchers, get your fill of Batman before the next home game which is February 3 so you can come out and support the frosh. They would muchly appreciate it.



THIS IS THE FRESHMAN 400-yard freestyle relay team of Jim Edwards, Phil Riker, Dick Jacobs and Greg Meehan which will go after its own NCAA record this afternoon against Appalachian. In a year when Carolina has been blessed with outstanding freshman athletic teams—the undefeated football squad, the young Goliaths of the basketball team—perhaps the best group of all is the swimmers.

The Baby Dolphins have breezed through five meets and should win their sixth of the season this afternoon against Appalachian at 4 p.m. in Bowman Gray pool. In fact, no one should beat them for the rest of the year.

"We're pointing solely for the Freshman Invitational Championships to be held here on February 21," coach Tom Canon said. "There will be freshmen competing from all up and down the east coast. We're going to take the dual meets as they come, without even a break the day before a meet."

The talent on this team is astounding. There are no less than nine high school All-American swimmers: Freestyler Jim Edwards, butterfly man Phil Riker, freestyler Randy Wade, freestyler Dick Jacobs, breaststroker Tom Ferretti, freestyler Joe Sanders, freestyler Pete Smith, diver Rob Carney and medley man David Ball. Freestyler Greg Meehan is another who rates with the others.

Cannon says Phil Riker will try to break his NCAA frosh record of 51.6 for the 100-yard butterfly today. The 400-yard freestyle relay team of Edwards, Riker, Wade and Meehan will also go after their NCAA record set earlier this year.

"This group is capable of breaking every UNC freshman record in the book," said Canon, "except perhaps the 50-yard freestyle and the 200-yard breaststroke."

Over the Christmas holidays Jim Edwards, Doug Behrman, Randy Wade and Rob Carney went to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., where some of the best swimmers in the country and the nation were helping to dedicate a new Hall of Fame pool there. Edwards won the 100-yard freestyle in both the International and East - West meets.

The freshman have impressive physical size. In fact, Edwards, Wade, Meehan, Behrman and Smith would make pretty good bodyguards if the need arose. They weigh from 180 to 220.

Varsity coach Pat Earey recruited this club and he can hardly wait before they move up to his team next year.

"On the strength of this freshman team and the ones returning from the varsity, UNC should have its strongest team ever here next year, and should be among the top ten in the country."

UNC Tied

North Carolina's Tar Heels, with an 83-75 victory over the Wolfpack of N. C. State Wednesday evening, moved into a tie for third place in the ACC standings with a 3-2 record.

Duke's Blue Devils, ranked number one in the nation, continue to pace the conference with a 4-1 record.

In second place are the Gamecocks of South Carolina — the only club to hold a conference win over the Blue Devils.

Next comes UNC and State — both tied for third with 3-2 records.

Russia Pledges More Aid To North Viet War Effort

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has promised additional aid to North Viet Nam, Tass, News agency announced last night. The type was undisclosed but signs indicated military equipment.

A new aid agreement was signed during the visit to Hanoi of a Soviet delegation led by Alexander N. Shelepin, second-ranked member of the Soviet Communist Party.

The delegation spent six days in the North Vietnamese capital and returned to the Soviet Union after a night in Peking.

A communique on the visit, dated Wednesday and made public yesterday, supported North Vietnamese demands for complete withdrawal of American forces and a renegotiation of terms. It added:

A new agreement was signed for additional Soviet assistance to the Democratic Republic of (North) Viet Nam."

The communique distributed by Tass gave no details.

The composition of Shelepin's delegation suggested, however, that an assessment had been made of North Viet Nam's military potential and the agreement was tailored to it. Moscow Radio said Thursday all measures would be taken to ship modern weapons to North Viet Nam.

Delegation members included Dmitry F. Ustinov, top man in Russian weapons production, and Col. Gen. Vladimir F. Tolubko, a rocket expert.

The Soviet Union has said in the past it would provide North Viet Nam with necessary hedp for defense against American air raids. But so far the help has been fairly ineffective.

The new agreement reached by the Shelepin mission suggested to some observers in Moscow the possibility of more effective protection against U. S. warplanes if Washington ends the current lull in bombing North Viet Nam.

The new agreement came after agreements signed in Moscow Dec. 21 for supplementary Soviet technical assistance, free economic aid and trade credits for Hanoi. There was no mention Dec. 21 of weapons, which has been covered under earlier agreements.

The Soviet - North Vietnamese communique said the Soviet Government gives "full support to the Vietnamese people's struggle against the aggression by United States imperialism."

It also announced that the Vietnamese Communist Party will send a delegation to the Soviet Communist Party Congress starting March 29.

Committee Adopts Speaker Policy

RALEIGH (AP) — The executive committee of the UNC Board of Trustees adopted regulations Friday governing visiting speakers on the four campuses of the university.

The regulations will be presented to the full board of trustees for action at a meeting on Feb. 24.

1. All statues of the state relating to speakers and the use of facilities for speaking purposes are to be obeyed.

2. Only recognized student, faculty and university organizations are authorized to invite speakers.

3. Non-University organizations authorized through official channels e.g., extension division to meet on the campus are to be routinely informed that the use of facilities must conform to state laws.

4. Student attendance at campuswide occasions is not compulsory.

5. The appearance of speakers on campus does not imply approval or disapproval of them or what is said by the speaker.

6. As a further precaution and to assure free and open discussion as essential to the safe-guarding of free institutions, each chancellor, when he considers it appropriate, require any or all of the following:

A. That a meeting be chaired by an officer of the university or a ranking member of the faculty;

B. That speakers at the meeting be subject to questions from the audience;

C. That the opportunity be provided at the meeting or later to present speakers of different points view.

Tubless Cobb Fights Back

By NANCY RALEY
Special To The DTH

That "monolith" next to the Monogram Club — otherwise known as Cobb Residence Hall — has experienced a rather unique change of occuparts since its completion in 1953.

In 1962 it found itself welcoming women students after becoming accustomed for so many years to the eccentricities of Carolina Gentlemen.

Instead of sheltering and nurturing the young men through long "dex" nights and mornings after, it was forced to listen to the chattering and screeching of girlish throats and the hypnotic drone of hair dryers.

It was forced to close six of its doors after 7 p.m. to protect the young things from undue harm. Rooms that had never seen curtains were now enduring pink, frilly ones and plants abounded in every available crevice — those not occupied by wet stockings. It was an unnerving experience.

Cobb fought back, though. Girls who wished to recline in a nice hot tub of water were forced to take a nice hot shower like the boys. There are no tubs in Cobb.

One young gentleman, apparently in a burst of exuburant good will, wrote an open letter to future female occupants of his room in Cobb. Occupants of the room found the letter written in large black print over the door inside one of their closets.

The content of the letter was rather personal, but the substance of the letter seemed to be concerned with the fact that the author of the letter would "haunt" all future female dwellers of his room.

Nurses Working For BS Degrees

By WILSON JARVIS
Special to the DTH

Everyone has heard about the stray dogs and Stray Greeks on campus, but few have heard of UNC's stray R.N.s.

That's right. UNC has 28 registered nurses attending classes who have completed their training and passed their state boards.

But these R.N.s are not satisfied with just a nursing education. They've come back to school to receive their bachelor of science degrees in nursing.

"As you get older, you become more aware of the need for a general education," explained Linda Ward, of Richmond, Virginia, Miss Ward plans to go into public health work after getting her degree.

Another young R.N., Georgia Marshall, of Winston-Salem, added, "All you know after a three year program of nursing is nursing." Miss Marshall needs a more general education because she wants to teach nursing after she receives her bachelor and master degrees.

Another nurse, a French-Canadian Nun, is attending classes just to increase her knowledge to enable her to make better contacts with the people she meets in her work.

Since they have already taken many of the required courses for a B.S. degree, they have only five semesters of work to complete before they receive their degrees.

But those five semesters can seem mighty long, because they have a problem.

They are misfits.

Academically they are classified as juniors; socially they are classified as graduate students, and live in graduate dormitories. But the biggest problem of the un-married R.N. is meeting males, who don't know just how to classify them.

"You tell them that you're a nurse and right away you see a 'mother image' come over their faces," said one young nurse.

Long Investigates UNC Chain Letter

By GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

An investigation into a ring of chain letters that have been received by University students here is being conducted by the Office of the Dean of Men.

Fred Schroeder assistant to the Dean of Men, said the chain letter ring was discovered recently when a student turned in one of the letters he had received.

He pointed out that it is against Federal law for a chain letter to be sent in the mail. And he added that it is against University regulations as set by the trustees for any solicitations as in this letter to be conducted in the University residence halls.

Schroeder said also, that chain letters have been classified as a lottery by law and therefore, are a violaion of North Carolina law.

Schoeder said there are at least 64 letters circulating in Chapel Hill if the six persons listed at the bottom of the letter have "sold" the letters as the letter explains.

Thus far only one copy has been turned in to Schroeder but he said he has heard about three or four others. He said there could be more of the letters in the area than is indicated by the number of names on the letter.

Schroeder said that one stipulation in the letter, which explains a money - making scheme by selling two of the letters, is that the letter not be mailed.

He said it is explained in the letter that it began at another southern university and is circulating on the campuses of several other colleges and universities.

The investigation is being made in order to stop the letters before they go any farther, Schroeder said.

"We want to warn students not to get involved in anything like this," he said.

Baptist Preacher Quits Klan

Rev. B. H. Ingle questions Rep. Charles Weltner (D-Ga.) at a Carolina Forum panel discussion, Dec. 13.

Rev. B. H. Ingle, the Ku Klux Klansman who questioned Rep. Charles Weltner at a Carolina Forum panel discussion last month, has quit the Klan.

The elderly lay Baptist preacher told reporters his ideas were "no longer compatable" with those of the Klan.

Weltner, a liberal Democratic congressman from Atlanta, Ga., is a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The committee conducted hearings into the Klan's activities this summer, and cited seven Klan officials for contempt of Congress two days ago.

Ingle told students after the Forum meeting that God punished the Negro race "by making their skin black.

"But when they enter the Kingdom, they'll be white," he added.

Ingle could not be reached for further comment yesterday.

Licenseless Driver

A 30 - year - old Durham woman who has failed her driver's license examination three times was charged Sunday night by Chapel Hill police with driving without an operator's license. She's been driving without one for 15 years.

The woman was driving a 1957 Ford on the by-pass near the University Lake on Route 1, Carrboro, when Constable T. J. Ragan and Deputy Sheriff Paul Minor stopped her.

"She came off Jones Ferry road onto the by - pass and we noticed her driving from lane to lane on the highway before we stopped her," Ragan said.

When asked to show her driver's license she told the officers, "I don't have one. I've been driving for 15 years without one."

Morrison To Sell Books

The college will act as middleman for students wishing to sell or buy testbooks and study materials.

The program is being established mainly to benefit the residents of Morrison, according to Governor Byron McCoy. However, students from other residence halls may also bring books to be sold.

The student himself will place a price on the book. If the book is not sold it will be stored until claimed.

McCoy feels that this will result in a saving to both the purchaser and seller.

Anyone wanting to participate in the program should contact Dick Levy, 158 Morrison, or Byron McCoy, 412 Morrison.

King For A Day

Carolina Gentlemen, have you ever dreamed of owning your own plane and being "King For A Day"? Coeds, have you ever dreamed of giving your guy such a present? The Kappa Delta pledges will give you the chance, or rather, sell you the chance.

The KD pledges from the Chapel Hill campus are busy selling wooden toy planes at Duke, State and North Carolina. Along with the purchase of a plane goes the chance to be "King For A Day."

All names of purchasers, or names of the people they would like to give the chance, are placed in a huge box. A drawing the first week in February will determine who the fortunate fellow is.

The "king" will have "servants" to wash and iron clothes, polish shoes and wash his car. Along with the work will go a Gant shirt and a steak dinner for two.

This is the second year in a row the pledges have had such a project.

It was a success last year, and the Kappa Deltas say sales are going extremely well this year (planes sell for 25c). Money earned from the project will go for improvement of the house.

Grade Competition

Freshmen in Craige Residence College are competing against freshmen in Morrison to see which group improves their grades the most.

Craige President Otto Reich says the idea, which was originated by Craige housemaster Frank Hall, is to compare freshmen grades at mid-semester with those at the end of the semester.

Hall and Chuck Longino, housemaster at Morrison, are compiling the quality point averages of each freshman in the two colleges. The college with the greatest improvement will receive a plaque. Reich hopes to see the plaque presentation become a tradition each semester.

At Craige, in addition to the residence college plaque, an award will be given to the student in each class with the highest average.

Friday Taps Taylor

North Carolina Consolidated University President William C. Friday, state Heart Fund chairman, announced the appointment of Dr. Isaac M. Taylor, dean of the North Carolina School of Medicine, as a co-chairman of Physicians-for-Heart.

Merrill To Speak

Dr. Halcolm H. Merrill, an official for the Agency for International Development, will address a student - faculty seminar at the North Carolina School of Public Health on Monday. The seminar will be held at 3 p.m. in the auditorium of the School of Public Health.

CAROLINA STYLE with Ed Freakley

Almost, We Almost Do

Almost exam time. Almost sweat time. Almost worry time. Almost hurry time. Almost finesse time.

But it's only almost. We can put all that almost out of our minds for this weekend and have one final good time before the grind begins, can't we?

Sure we can. And we can almost come back next semester 'cause we almost passed. We almost do a lot of things.

But we almost never do.

No Birthday Party For Benny

It must have been too cold yesterday or maybe it's too close to exams. On second thought they might have had a change of heart about the war in Viet Nam.

At any rate we didn't see one SPU'er out celebrating Benedict Arnold's birthday yesterday.

Bats In Our Belfry?

The Batman craze is quickly spreading all over the campus. It took me 10 minutes last night to find a television set I could get close enough to in order to see the picture.

Also noticed that some enterprizing fan of this new hero has erected the Bat symbol in his window Vance Residence Hall.

It also gives me an idea. No one objected to getting rid of the ram, but on the other hand no one seemed to really like the idea of the Tar Baby.

So why don't we join the modern times and become the University of North Carolina Bats. I'm serious.

Can't you just picture it. The basketball team, instead of wearing warm-up jackets and those long pants, would come out on the court in long Carolina blue capes with a white bat on the back.

The cheerleaders could throw bat boomerangs to the fans during intermission. We could paint the bat symbol in the center of the floor in Carmichael.

Then when we beat Dook next game the headlines could say: Carolina Bats Dook, or Cape Caper Batfolds Dookies.

ERNIE McCRARY, EDITOR

Idealists Are Fine, But Realists Are Necessary

Viet Nam war protestors can breathe a little easier. Chances are they won't have to swap their picket signs for rifles after all.

The question arose when some University of Michigan students took part in a sitdown demonstration at the Ann Arbor, Mich., selective service office last fall. They promptly lost their student deferrments and were reclassified 1-A. National draft director Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey supported the action, saying the protestors had hindered the operation of the draft office and thus violated the Universal Military Training and Service Act.

The Justice Department has just ruled, however, that the act cannot be used "to stifle constitutionally protected expressions of views" on Viet Nam or any other issue.

Asst. Attorney General Fred M. Vinson Jr. made the ruling at the request of Michigan's Senator Philip A. Hart.

Protestors ought to be subject to the draft just as every other American male. To single out a demonstrator merely because he is a demonstrator is a ludicrous violation of individual rights.

Some insist that the protestors are acting irresponsibly and are therefore not entitled to normal rights, but such a generalization is unfair. The war in Viet Nam is neither all wrong nor all right, despite claims to the contrary by idealistic extremists at both ends.

Ideals are commendable, but the world has continued to exist for a good many years because that vast majority of "in-betweeners" has tolerated those on the outer edges while they themselves went about finding workable solutions to problems.

The realists ought to concentrate on finding those workable solutions to the Vietnamese war and quit spending so much time fretting about a few rankling expressions of opinion.

Drinking, Properly Taught

A Harvard psychiatrist has come up with an idea that could revolutionize the curriculum of every college and university.

He has suggested that schools teach a course in "practice drinking."

"Alcohol is here to stay," said Dr. Morris Chafetz, "and people must learn to develop a healthy attitude toward it."

Not only should college students have drinking classes, but very young kids ought to begin sipping when they start to school, Chafetz said.

The idea is to teach the people how to drink socially without getting drunk by learning the hazards of improper use of alcohol.

Congratulations to Chafetz, who is also director of the Alcoholic Clinic of Massachusetts General Hospital, for his insight into the cause of America's drinking problem. It's not that people drink too much — they just don't know how to drink.

Ask any student as he wavers out of a local pub. He will surely agree that if only he had learned from a pro, instead of watching his parents, his present condition would be on more solid footing.

We agree that drinking courses ought to be set up, but they will probably have to be conducted on a bring-your-own-bottle-to-class basis since it is unlikely the General Assembly will appropriate funds for booze unless legislators could take part in the class. Our most serious concern is that the final exam would be like.

It is doubtful that the present school administration would approve such a plan, however, so a special student committee is being organized to contact UNC President Friday.

The group's name?

Letters To The Editor

A Quarterly Supporter

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It is truly amazing that any so-called "enlightened" individual could take the narrow view expressed in Mr. Jennings' editorial concerning the recent Carolina Quarterly.

It is also very sad that this individual misses the point entirely. He makes quite a few references to "beatniks," who supposedly sit around and scribble. He refers to Russel Banks' story as "unintelligible."

Yet the remark is made that good writers, such as Faulkner, are "gone." This makes one wonder just how much reading Mr. Jennings has done. Mr. Banks' story is just as intelligible as anything, for instance, that Faulkner ever wrote.

Mr. Brown's story brings home a point. Unfortunately Mr. Jennings managed to stick a very small portion, out of context, of Mr. Brown's story into the editorial—for what reason? Evidently to confuse the reader, confuse the issue and confuse himself.

Fortunately there are quite a few people around who possess active, inquisitive minds and who can still appreciate good literature as is found in the Quarterly.

"Shame on the wasters."

Poetical Pointers

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The following is a response to Mr. C. Edgerton's letter. . .in which he replies poetically to a letter written about the poor conduct at one of the basketball games. Within the past few weeks, I believe Mr. Edgerton has contributed two poetical commentaries. I enjoy poetry to sharpen invective: it stimulates the mind and sums up the opinion in fewer words; however, Mr. Edgerton does not seem to have command of the poetical tools.

His meter is rough and the line doesn't flow
So it seems there are precepts that he doesn't know.
Four beats in the line can be varied to rhyme
With anapests, iambs, but all keeping time.
The verse should, as water o'er rocks in a stream
With bubbles and ripples, flow on, but supreme,
And thought should be carried in triumph sublime
Through the movements of verse, those of meter and rhyme.
Or perhaps, as a Pope, he should choose then to write,
The line has more beats, but the verse is as tight.
Apollo, resting, tired from his flight
Looks down to earth, with hopes that for a night
He can in man's participation join
Yell with the crowd, hovering by the line.
But then, alas, he sees not all is fun;
Not all the people watch the athletes run.
Some of the fans have come there just to drink.
What does the god of all these viewers think?
He sees non-drinkers watch with righteous care
Obnoxious drunks who scream into the air.
The fans around him drink, cheer, have a blast,
Their spirits rise, endure, always last.
The god thinks those who from the drink abstains
Must know the score, keep up with all the gains.
So with this thought, he to a goody turns,
He asks the score, but from the viewer learns
The number who are toting flasks of booze,
Without a care which team might win or lose.
The night passed on, the god was lost in thought,
He knew the crowd had not acted as it ought.
"The drinker surely would his headache get,
The righteous one could but his moral set.
The fun lies not in either bad extreme,
But close to center, near the 'Golden Man.'"

Good Neighbors

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

If I may, I would like to express how I feel about the articles concerning Alexander and Winston dorms. To begin with, the events have been grossly mistaken, misrepresented, and misinterpreted in the DTH. The only way to rectify your mistakes would be with a formal rejection and apology. This, however, I doubt that you will do.

The second best policy would be for you to merely report the facts as they are. This does take talent, but I have a relative amount of confidence that you can master the knack. A third solution would be for you to quite simply get off our backs.

Alexander and Winston dorms are located close together, and will quite possibly be in the same resident college system. Such being the case, Alexander has no lecherous or malicious intentions against Winston. We are far too restraining, intelligent, and gentlemanly to do anything to offend them—including a panty raid.

My intention is not to criticize the Tar Heel, but rather to express a feeling that exists in Alexander. The facts are hard to get, and a feeling is even harder. Until you can understand our situation, you can do nothing but fail grievously in reporting (or making up) news.

Four-Year House Term Would Benefit Country

The item in President Johnson's State of the Union message most likely to influence this country's future political life is not his oft-repeated recommendation concerning the Vietnamese conflict. Nor is it his plea for additional anti-poverty funds.

It is his proposal that the terms of House members be extended from two to four years.

The Founding Fathers wanted to create a legislative body that would be exceptionally responsive to the needs of the people, and with this in mind started two-year terms for its members; but modern conditions have brought about a need for the term's extention.

Johnson is quite correct when he says the House members should be given more time to "learn and master the technical tasks of legislation" because of the government's increasing complexity.

The proliferation of Congressional committees in such specialized fields as atomic energy and international relations dramatizes the reasons why Congressmen must approach the nation's problems as experts rather than laymen.

Less campaigning would mean additional hours for the Congressmen to spend on their official duties.

And it would also mean more interest in the entire nation's welfare rather than in the voter's of the Congressman's district. The problem of who comes first—the local voters or the nation—was well illustrated by the resistance Defense Secretary MacNamara encountered when he sought military spending cutbacks. Legislators who personally supported the economy measures found it necessary to cater to their constituents' private whims.

The proposed extention of terms could lead to a stabler foreign policy. True—the Constitution endows most of the powers in this area to the President and the Senate, but he House's approval is required to appropriate funds for such programs as foreign aid and military assistance overseas—as well as regular military needs.

Presidents would not have to worry so much about Congressmen's being swayed by the voter's emotions as they pondered difficulties like Viet Nam and Korea. The result: a tougher, more effective foreign policy.

Less frequent elections would bring about cheaper campaign budgets; no longer would some Congressmen every two years consider selling their homes or their businesses to get re-elected. And since fat bank accounts would not matter as much, the solons could devote fewer hours to chores like rounding up cooperative campaign contributors.

Appropriately enough, the changes would start in 1972—the last year Johnson can serve if re-elected in 1968. Thus, the cynics should hesitate before condemning the enlarged House term as a tool with which to bribe the Congressmen into passing the President's legislation.

Of course, there remains the danger of arousing the Congressmen's "big brothers" in the Senate, who fear that a House member could safely run against a senator in an off-year election because he could keep his House seat even if he lost. But Rep. Frank Chelf, D-Ky., has an appropriate answer.

Chelf proposes that House members be required to resign before seeking another office.

The Constitutional amendment that would create the 4-year term should be passed as quickly as possible. It's time to make serving in the House a profession rather than a hobby.

The Collegiate World

Problems Require Solutions

Editor's Note: Many universities face many of the same problems. In the following editorial, the Crimson-White, student newspaper of the University of Alabama, gives its opinion of what should be done to solve some of the problems there.

We feel that several problem areas exist where needed reform could do much to enhance student morale.

To enumerate:

(1) Improvement of registration procedures. From reading of what great things are being done with computers and machines at other large southern universities as well as our own we can not help but believe that there is a better way of conducting registration than the present one. A larger field house won't solve the problem. Our problem is not one of space but of procedure. Many southern universities now employ a method of pre-registration by mail during the summer months.

(2) Students must be given some consideration in evaluation of courses and faculty at the University. We believe this to be necessary for a professor to discover himself and what he has to offer his students and to build on it for a more meaningful relationship between student and teacher.

(3) Something must be done to insure that more students have a greater opportunity to be represented on policy making committees of the University.

Philsophy professor Francis Kerins in a report in the Journal of Higher Education warns against pseudo - participation by students in decision - making, that is, their participation in discussion and voting when actually the decision has been made long before students discussion began. When this occurs says Kerins, students are being manipulated.

It becomes increasingly bewildering to be "tolerated" by faculty and administrators. It would be far more encouraging to see some quick action taken on legitimate grievances.

(4) Some assistance and influence must come from the University administration in providing a uniform housing code for students and faculty. Far too many students are living in sub-standard off-campus housing and paying outrageous rent prices. In the last four years several students have been asphyxiated or fatally burned as a result of improper heating in their apartments.

Some attention must also be given to the matter of low cost housing for faculty.

(5) Assistance and consideration must also be given to the matter of establishing some type of discount buying plan for students and faculty in the Tuscaloosa area. Far too little consideration is given to the economic benefits of the University and its students by Tuscaloosa merchants.

Many other southern universities have discount buying systems whereby students and faculty receive up to 25% discount on cash purchased items in their local trading areas. Atlanta and Miami are two of the more successful areas where businessmen show their appreciation for student grade and in turn do an increased volume of business.

We make these comments and suggestions in the conviction that a "Great University" consists of more than million dollar field houses with doric columns and vast sums for educational research. While we appreciate and see the necessity of a large and modern physical plant we also recognize the need of a strong intellectual atmosphere in which there can be a free exchange of ideas between faculty and students.

Winston: It's Almost Normal Now

By FRANCES WALL
Special to the DTH

A few males are still innocently wandering down the halls of Winston Dormitory, life there is gradually approaching normal.

However, only four short months ago the scene around Winston wasn't go serene. The day before the women of Winston arrived for fall semester, things were in a panic—no furniture, no painters, and worst of all, no phones!

"There were so many things that were frustrating," Mrs. Louise Mixon, Winston's hostess said as she recalled the problems of converting the former men's dormitory to its present state.

Perhaps the funniest experience of all, she chuckled, happened the week end of Carolina's first football game. Normally, she said, all of the doors of the building are locked except the two main entrances into the lobby. But that day no one remembered.

She heard a scream, she said, and a man and his young son came flying into the center hall. "He was really embarrassed and upset," she smiled.

The man, a Carolina graduate, had brought his son to Winston to show the small boy the room he had lived in when he was in college. That first weekend, Mrs. Mixon said, Winston had as many as seven or eight males wandering down its halls. They still have a few males who wander in unsuspectingly.

Mrs. Mixon, an Arkansas native, was hostess for the freshmen girls in Nurses Dormitory last year. "There is a lot more responsibility in having your own dorm," she stated.

"I didn't really know what I was getting into," laughed the soft-eyed woman with greying hair. "It may get tiresome and wearisome, but it never gets dull," she said.

Frustrations for Mrs. Mixon began when Winston was opened as a women's graduate dormitory during the first session of summer school in 1965. She moved over to Winston to get familiar with it, to see what needed to be done and what changes could be made.

During the second session of summer school she moved back to Nurses Dorm, then back again to Winston in the fall. "I'm not ever going to get settled in this place," she declared.

No phones in the dormitory "was really the worst headache we had," said Mrs. Mixon. For a while there was only one phone in the center lobby downstairs. It was a month after school began in the fall that the house phones were installed. "I'm still screaming for more phones," she said.

Furniture ordered for the dorm in June didn't arrive on time. It came the day Mrs. Mixon returned for fall semester. She fought for new beds. "You-all don't know what you've missed," she said when talking about the condition of the beds that had been in the dormitory.

New beds created a problem too. Planning for a possible reconversion of Winston into a boys dorm in the future, the administration ordered large beds. The new furniture then didn't fit because of the extra size of the beds.

Some beds were black, some were beige, and in their hurry to put the beds up before the girls arrived, the workers got beds of both colors in the same room. They had to be called back, Mrs. Mixon explained, to change the arrangement of the beds.

Painters didn't show up until the day before the girls arrived, Mrs. Mixon said. All the walls of the rooms were washed. "I thought it was hopeless," she signed. Gouged out holes in the walls and torn off transoms were mended or replaced. When the job was finished, she was "agreeably surprised."

"You think it looks bad now — you should have seen it before," Mrs. Mixon said of Winston's parlor, which was completely repainted and equipped with all new furniture. Of the unsightly condition of the parlor when she arried, Mrs. Mixon said, "It was amazing to me. It looked pretty rough the first time I came in."

The basement was not fixed when the girls moved into Winston, Mrs. Mixon reported. Neither study nor storage rooms were completed, so the girls had no place to store their luggage. The washing machines and dryer for the dorm did not arrive until October.

Pulls for the window shades, too, were a little difficult in securing, according to Mrs. Mixon. But upon their return from Christmas vacation, the girls discovered all the window shades had acquired a long cord.

Contrary to the belief of many that Winston's location for a girl's dorm is a problem, Mrs. Mixon does not think so. "The boys have been real good about it," she said. "I think on the whole they're sort of glad to have some girls around." Christmas time, too, Mrs. Mixon said, "Really got us on good relations." The boys in Alexander Dormitory joined the Winston girls in Christmas caroling and decorating.

So, Winston is slowly finding relief from the first pains of change. Mrs. Mixon, chief coordinator for the operation, said she had "no regrets" for undertaking such a tremendous task.

WINSTON'S MAIN ENTRANCE faces Woollen Gym and its other side faces two men's residence halls. There is some feeling that Winston also faces a problem because of it, but according to Housemother Mixon, life has finally settled down after a semester of confusion.

GM Will House Transferred Offices

Graham Memorial will play a new role in the campus affairs and activities after the completion of UNC's new student union in 1967.

The main lounge on the first floor will be left as it is. It may serve as a reception room for visitors to the University offices which will be moved into the building according to Howard D. Henry, GM Director.

One of these offices will be the Admissions Office, now located on the second floor of South Building. It will take over the second floor of GM.

The Alumni Affairs Office, now located in the Carolina Inn, may make its new home in the basement of GM. The amount of space in the basement of GM will meet the storage needs of the large number of records kept by the Alumni Office.

ROMAN IN THE GLOAMIN'

Now as the end of the first semester draws near, one fact emerges clearly: you are all going to flunk out of school.

There are two things you can do about it. First, you can marry money. (I don't mean you marry the money itself; I mean you marry a person who has money. Weddings between people and currency have not been legal anywhere in the United States since the Smoot-Hawley Act. Personna® Stainless Steel Blades, on the other hand, are legal everywhere and are, indeed, used with great pleasure and satisfaction in all fifty states of the Union and Duluth. I bring up Personna Stainless Steel Blades because this column is sponsored by the makers of Personna Stainless Steel Blades, and they are inclined to get edgy if I omit to mention their product. Some of them get edgy and some get double-edgy because Personna Blades come both in Injector style and Double Edge style.)

But I digress. I was saying you can marry money but, of course, you will not because you are a high-minded, clean-living, pure-hearted, freckle-faced American kid. Therefore, to keep from flunking, you must try the second method: you must learn how to take lecture notes.

According to a recent survey, eleven out of ten American undergraduates do not know the proper way to take lecture notes. To illustrate this appalling statistic, let us suppose you are taking a course in history. Let us further suppose the lecturer is lecturing on the ruling houses of England. You listen intently. You write diligently in your notebook, making a topic outline as you have been taught. Like this:

I. House of Plantagenet.
II. House of Lancaster.
III. House of York.

Then you stop. You put aside your pen. You blink back a tear, for you cannot go on. Oh, yes, you know very well that the next ruling house is the House of Tudor. The trouble is you don't know the Roman numeral that comes after III.

It may, incidentally, be of some comfort to learn that you are not the only people who don't know Roman numerals. The fact is, the Romans never knew them either. Oh, I suppose they could tell you how much V or X were or like that, but when it came to real zingers like LXI or MMC, they just flang away their styluses and went downtown to have a bath or take in a circus or maybe stab Caesar a few times.

You may wonder why Rome stuck with these ridiculous numerals when the Arabs had such a nice, simple system. Well, sir, the fact is that Emperor Vespasian tried like crazy to buy the Arabic numerals from Suleiman The Magnificent, but Suleiman wouldn't do business—not even when Vespasian raised his bid to 100,000 gold piastres, plus he offered to throw in the Colosseum, the Appian Way, and Technicolor.

So Rome stuck with Roman numerals—to its sorrow, as it turned out. One day in the Forum, Cicero and Pliny got to arguing about how much is CDL times MVIX. Well, sir, pretty soon everyone in town came around to join the hassle. In all the excitement, nobody remembered to lock the north gate and—wham! before you could say ars longa—in rushed the Goths, the Visigoths, and the Green Bay Packers!

Well, sir, that's the way the empire crumbles, and I digress. Let's get back to lecture notes. Let's also say a word about Burma Shave*. Why? Because Burma Shave is made by the makers of Personna Blades who, it will be recalled, are the sponsors of this column. They are also the sponsors of the ultimate in shaving luxury. First coat your kisser with Burma Shave, regular or menthol—or, if you are the devil-may-care sort, some of each. Then whisk off your stubble with an incredibly sharp, unbelievably durable Personna Blade, Injector or Double Edge—remembering first to put the blade in a razor. The result: facial felicity, cutaneous cheer, epidermal elysium. Whether you shave every day, every III days, or every VII, you'll always find Personna and Burma Shave a winning combination.

Tar Heels On Road Against UVA Tonight

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolin's Tar Heels, with ten victories in their first 14 games, head for number 11 tonight at 8 o'clock in University Hall, Charlottesville, Va.

The Cavaliers of Virginia form the opposition and the cagers of Coach Bill Gibson will be seeking their fifth victory of the season against eight defeats.

The Tar Heels will also be trying to improve their Atlantic Coast Conference standing. UNC finds themselves in a third-place tie with the Wolfpack of N. C. State—each sporting 3-2 conference records.

Virginia on the oher hand has found the going rough in early-season ACC warfare. The Cavaliers are in sixth place with a 2-4 conference mark. Those two conference victories are the only wins the Cavaliers can muster go far this season in a 2-7 overall record.

Junior Bobby Lewis and sophomore Larry Miller will of course pace the Tar Heel offensive. Lewis, the ACC's leading scorer, places third in the nation in scoring with a 29.4 average.

Miller, the Tar Heel's top rebounder, is averaging 23.5 points per game—good enough for fourth position in the ACC.

Sharing the offensive burden for the Tar Heels will also be junior guard Tom Gauntlett. Gauntlett took over the offensive controls this past Wednesday evening against N. C. State and tied Miller for on honors with 21 points. Gauntlett is averaging 9.4 points per game.

Bob Bennett, the Tar Heel's 6-8 center, and guard John Yokley round out the UNC starting five.

The Cavalier's main claim to fame this season has been the inspired play of 6-3 junior guard Jim Connelly. Connelly has hit for an average of 23.4 points per game—good for fifth place in the Conference behind Miller of North Carolin

Jerry Sanders, a 6-3 forward, joins Connelly as the only lettermen returning from last season's Virginia club that posted a 7-18 overall record.

Four able replacements should fill the vacancies. Big 6-10 John Naponick, a tackle on the football team, has more than filled the center post. Dale Hilsmier, 6-3, Mike Katos, 6-5, and John Schroeder, 6-8, round out the top six for the Cavaliers.

Grubar Out As Frosh Hit Tough Cavaliers

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

UNC's unbeaten Tar Babies, rolling along on a seven-game win skein, move outside the Big Four tonight when they visit the Cavayearlings of Virginia at Charlottesville.

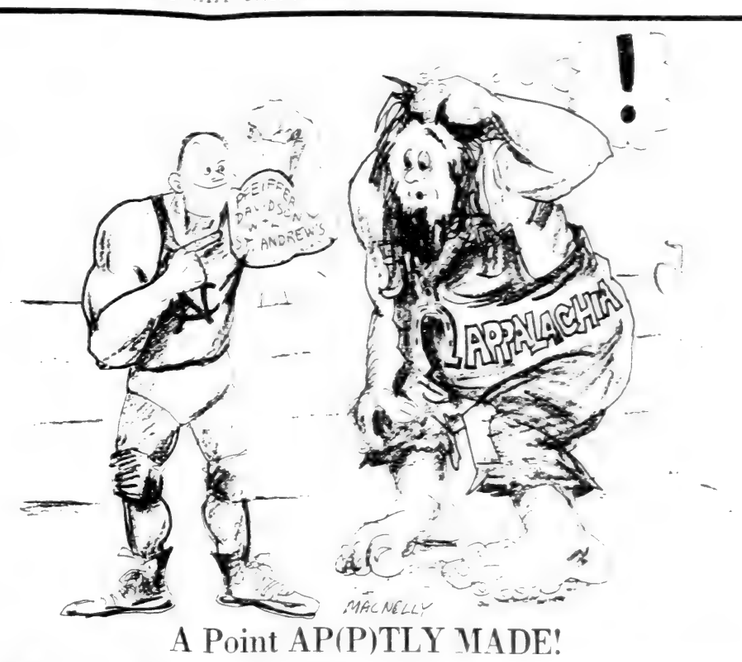
They will meet the Virginia frosh—reputed to be better than last year when they romped to a 16-1 record—without the services of Dick Grubar. The 6-3 guard collided with the basket support in last Wednesday's win over State, injuring his knee.

X-rays taken yesterday at Memorial Hospital proved negative, and the official word from trainer John Lacey is that Grubar suffered a sprain. Lacey says that Dick should be able to play after exams.

Coach Larry Brown did not say who will replace Grubar, but it is strongly suspected that it will be Jim Bostick, the 6-2 all-purpose scrapper who has played about equal time with the starters.

Grubar is the third leading scorer on the team with a 15.3 mark, and Bostick, who hit 14 last Wednesday and has been as high as 18, is averaging 9.1 per game.

Rusty Clark is top man, his 24 points against NCS pulling his team-leading average to a flat even 20 per game.



A Point AP(P)TLY MADE!

Mat Crew Wrestles Apps For 'State Best' Title

By JIM COGHILL
Asst. DTH Sports Editor

Coach Sam Barnes and the UNC wrestling team have their work cut out tonight at eight o'clock when they take on one of the best teams in the state — Appalachian College.

"Other coaches in the area figure this will be the showdown to determine the best team in the state, despite our record," Coach Barnes commented.

The Appalachian team is sporting a new coach this year who while coaching at Boone High School never lost a match. Coach Steve Gabriel still keeps that record clean.

UNC's grapplers will carry a 4-2 record into tonight's match hoping to break the Boone men's winning streak. The Heels have beat Pfeiffer, St. Andrews, Washington and Lee and Davidson losing to N. C. State and Virginia.

Not hurt any by graduation, Appalachian's whole team of last year plus three freshman will unleash a powerhouse of muscle and stiff competition.

Two men will be making their debut, wrestling with the team for the first time this year. They are 123 pounder Al Frausiszin and heavyweight Charlie Davis.

Rounding out what Coach Barnes calls his "first string line up for the ACC Tournament" are Jim Goodwin, 130; Bill Cook, 137; Lane Verlendan, 152; Roy Hagerty, 145; Jay Jacobson, 160; Hal Rainey, 167; and Fred Priester, 177. Priester is undefeated.

"Verlendan and Cook might be in trouble," Barnes said. Barnes said, "since the boys they are wrestling won championships in Miami, Fla., not long ago."

In a preliminary bout, the freshman squad will "grunt 'n' grown" at seven p.m. with the varsity of Wilmington College. Wilmington is one of two varsity opponents for the freshman this year deliberately scheduled to see what the coaching staff can expect.

Fauntleroy

Last week you received my syndicated column and the basketball picks. When I picked up a local paper and surveyed my golden words my heart very nearly stopped. The Mountaineers were given the nod over Davidson and Georgia Tech was chosen to "roll" over Wake Forest.

"I didn't make these ridiculous predictions," and the words pounded at my skull. My perfect record has been destroyed, I thought.

After a slow recovery from the initial shock, I began imagining fans all over the world gleefully discovering that the great one is a mortal after all. My reputation is at stake. Something must be done.

I took my Fearless Fabulous Fauntleroy Computer apart and found a sniped wire. AHA. Someone has been tampering with my machine.

After examining the wire for prints I made a shocking discovery. I pulled down on the rope of my curtain and summoned Jeeves.

The balding and immaculately dressed butler swept into my bedroom.

"You rang, sir."

"Why you," I gasped. "You are the epitomy of the loyal English servant. This dastardly deed of yours reveals the character of a rustic revolution."

"It's really quite simple sir," Jeeves said victoriously. "I'm tired of all this talk about the great and infallible one. It has made you, begging your pardon sir, into a bit of a pompous ass. We used to treat one another as equals. Now your attitude towards me has been pure condecension.

"At first I thought your new attitude could be explained by irregularity," Jeeves continued. So I slipped a Geritol tablet into the evening caviar. It made no outward change in you, so I decided to give you a rewarding lesson."

"And quite right too, Jeeves. You are forgiven. I have been a bit swell headed. From now on I'm a changed man."

The machine has been fixed, and the humble one gratefully issues this weeks picks.

Thinclads Take On Duke, Deacs Today

The Carolina trackmen have their second triangular meet of the season today in the Tin Can against Duke and Wake Forest.

As was the case last week, the meet shapes up to be a contest between Duke and UNC. Wake Forest does not seem to have the necessary talent to overcome the Blue Devils or the Tar Heels.

Coach Hilton will have basically the same line-up with the exception of a few minor changes in the relays which were costly in the tie with Duke last Saturday.

In the field events, the thinclads have their work cut out since Duke placed in each one last week. Lester Hyder and Bill Busby are Carolina's enteries in the Pole Vault. Duke's Homer outvaulted both of these men in their first encounter. In the shotput Duke has the Conference champion Rod Stewart, who earlier outdistanced Short and Alley of UNC, with a put of 55'8 1-2."

However, Carolina's Iverson, who won in his first effort of the season, gives the thinclads an excellent chance in the broad jump, and Hutchins of UNC should give Dunaway of Duke a good contest in the high jump.

Carolina proved last week that running is their main strength as they won four of the six races excluding the relays. In the 60 yard dash, Jon Levin showed that he had regained his past form with a 6.4 for the sprint. The hurdles should improve this week after a dismal first performance Adger Stokes, Richie Ambrose, and Gary Mead will be counted on heavily to give the thinclads some extra points in this event.

The distances are sound Mike Williams will be going after win number two in the mile as will Bill Bassett in the 880. Co-Captain Bill Janowitz had his troubles earlier this season, but is ready to improve upon his earlier performance in the half.

The two mile will be one of the most critical races for both Duke and Carolina. Wake Forest also has a strong contender in Al Viehman. Co-Captain Jim Meade lost last week to Paul Rogers of Duke, but Mead has been known to come back when the team needs him.

Dolphins Romp

UNC's freshmen swim team broke the NCAA 400-yard freestyle relay in romping Appalachian State Teachers College 71-16.

The record relay performance was a time of 3:13.6.

Daily Tar Heel WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

From The Associated Press

Nigerian Government Out

LONDON — An Army coup in Nigeria overturned the federal government and resulted in the killing of two of the country's regional premiers, according to reports reaching London yesterday.

The unconfirmed reports said the Sardauna of Sokoto, Premier of the Northern region, had been assassinated with his wife, as well as Chief Samuel I. Akintola, Premier of the Western Region.

Sir Abubakar Tafewa Balewa, the federal prime minister, was said to be under house arrest.

The reports indicated, however, that the coup might have been only partly successful. It was not clear just how much of the army supported it.

Police were reported maintaining law and order in Lagos, the capital.

It was emphasized that the situation was extremely confused and might change from hour to hour.

A broadcast from Lagos heard in Cotonou, capital of neighboring Dahomey, said the army had seized power "to bring an end to gangsterism and disorder."

Airliner Crash Kills 51

BOGOTA, Colombia — A Colombian airliner with 61 persons on board plunged into shark - infested waters off the coast Friday night. Officials reported 51 persons were killed and 10 survived.

The four - engine, propeller-driven DC4, broke in two and its rear section sank in heavy seas. The plane crashed about five minutes after taking off from the Caribbean port of Cartagena for a 20-minute flight to Barranquilla.

Peace Plan Reached

TEHRAN, Iran — The Iranian government announced yesterday it has agreed to a three-point plan by neighboring Iraq to end a border dispute.

Such an agreement was broadcast by Iraq's Radio Baghdad earlier in the week but Iranian officials professed then to be unaware of it. A communique Saturday, however, acknowledged the agreement.

The Iranian government said it accepted the proposal provided Iraq in turn withdrew its troops "a reasonable distance from the Iranian border." It added that the acceptance does not mean Iran will change its decision to "silence" any agression in the border.

Saigon Security Increased

SAIGON, Viet Nam (AP)— A contingent of South Vietnamese marines moved into Saigon Friday night to "increase security," a reliable informant reported.

The troop movement, involving the 4th Marine battalion, came in the midst of a flurry of rumors throughout Saigon of a possible power play against Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's government by generals fearing a sellout to the Viet Cong in the current diplomatic campaign to end the war.

Reapportionment Finished

RALEIGH — Tar Heel legislators needed only five days last week to come up with plans for legislative reapportionment and congressional redistricting 17 days ahead of a federal court deadline.

Whether a special three-judge federal panel which ordered the changes to conform with population shifts will approve the plans is not yet known.

North Carolina's reapportionment plans are part of the revolution in American politics that began in March, 1962, when the U. S. Supreme Court reversed its traditional stand not to interfere in reapportionment cases because they involved political matters.

Rio Residents Dig Out

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil— Thousands of evacuees returned to the hillside slums of Rio de Janeiro today after being washed out by four days of floods and landslides which took a toll of more than 400 lives.

The floods and landslides washed thousands of shacks from the hillsides and left at least 40,000 persons homeless in Rio and another 10,000 homeless elsewhere.

Government officials declined to estimate damage, but the newspaper Correio da Manha said it figured losses at about $22.5 million.

Reds Protest 'Murders'

TOKYO — Communist China has lodged another strong protest with the Indonesian government, charging "murder" of Chinese Nationals in Indonesia by anti-Chinese demonstrators, the New China News Agency reported yesterday.

"It is learned only recently that Chinese Nationals living in various parts of Lombok Island have been continuously subjected to horrifying maltreatment and murder," the Chinese note said.

The note, delivered by the Chinese Embassy in Jakarta last Wednesday, charged that more than 30 persons were killed. It also charged that some women were kidnaped and "forcibly made concubines."

Bond Market Declines

NEW YORK —Bond markets turned in a mixed performance last week in the wake of President Johnson's State of the Union address.

The key treasury bond market started the week on a strong note, but following the President's address prices weakened. The main reason, said some market analysts, was the prospect of further heavy financing by the government to pay for the Viet Nam war.

At the end of the week 20 Treasury bond issues marked a net decline from the previous week. Eight of the total 40 issues marked no price change and 12 advanced in price.

Nicaragua Hit By Quakes

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Four strong earth tremors were felt here between 2 a.m. and 11 a.m. today. Three occurred before 7 a.m.

Frightened residents ran into the streets, but there were no reports of casualties or damage.

Suicide Following Drugs Causes Legal Problems

Drugs which produce appealing and appalling illusions can also produce some perplexing and puzzling medical and legal problems when death is involved.

Suppose a man, believed to be under the influence of peyote or LSD, feels he can fly like a bird from his sixth floor apartment window.

Is it an accident or suicide when he crashes to his death on the sidewalk below?

The question was posed to an attorney, a county medical examiner and physicians representing pathology, pharmacology and psychiatry during a medical staff conference at the UNC School of Medicine.

Some physicians argued for a ruling of accidental death.

They maintained the man was not consciously aware that he was destroying himself. The law, they pointed out, defines suicide as the intentional taking of one's own life.

Other physicians favored a ruling of suicide.

An investigation of the victim provided the evidence for their ruling: the man had been depressed (depressions are the common denominator of all suicides); he was known to have had strong suicidal tendencies; and no one had proved positively that he was using a hallucinatory drug at the time of his death (peyote, for example, is difficult to detect in the body).

Attorney James C. Harper of Chapel Hill explained that a good deal of disparity exists between the legal definitions of accidental death and suicide.

"The law defines accident as an unusual, fortuitous unexpected, unforeseen, unlooked for event happening without any human agency, or, if happening through human agency, it occurs under unexpected and unintentional circumstances.

"The law defines suicide as one's intentional destruction of himself.

"The former requires exhaustive qualification in the light of particular circumstances while the latter is comparatively simple."

As for consumers of hallucinatory drugs or other narcotics and stimulants — Harper said these people are held by law to know the probable consequences of their acts.

"If peyote causes hallucinations and makes a man feel that he can fly like a bird, then the user of peyote is presumed by law to know that he will hallucinate.

"He might also be presumed to know that he might, under the influence of the drug, attempt to fly like a bird.

"From this rationale, we could easily conclude that a man who consumes a quantity of peyote and then ascends to a lofty perch and attempts to fly — thereby reaching his death on the ground below — committed suicide.

"We might also logically conclude that any persons who aided and abetted another in the consumption of the drug with full knowledge of the probable consequences would be — in the event of death — guilty of crime.

Fauntleroy Goofs; UNC Too, 70-69

BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA — Virginia's Buddy Reams hit a much disputed lay-up as time ran out here last night to hand North Carolina a 70-69 defeat in a hard-fought, error-filled ACC basketball game.

North Carolina held a scant 69-68 lead with 2:34 left to play when it went into its celebrated "four-corners" offense which has protected and added to leads at crucial points in three of the Tar Heel wins.

Bobby Lewis, who was the game's top scorer with 21 points, broke the stall at the specified time—with 1:46 left and drove down the lane. He layed the ball on the rim where it hung for a second and then Bob leaped and tried to tap it in for the basket which would have eventually proved the difference.

But the ball rolled off the rim and Virginia's Jerry Sanders grabbed the rebound. Cavalier Coach Bill Gibson promptly called time out with 1:42 left.

Virginia then wentt into a stall of its own, which Carolina chose to permit without fouling.

With four seconds to go, the ball was fired toward the goal. The attempt missed, and three taps also failed to go in. Then when Cavalier Mike Katos rebounded and missed a shot, Reams grabbed the ball and layed it in.

All in the space of four seconds.

A seemingly well-founded argument was hard pressed at officials and time keepers by Carolina coach Dean Smith—but to no avail. Smith claimed the buzzer never sounded.

The Cavaliers had taken the game on a bucket after six shots which had all been fired in what has to be a record time of four seconds.

The Tar Heels led at halftime 37-31. Sophomore Larry Miller led the charge with 12 points. Bobby Lewis registered 11 by intermission time. Guard Tom Gauntlett had hit three important baskets to add to the Tar Heel offensive.

In the opening moments of the second half, the Tar Heels managed to open a ten-point lead at 46-36 with 15:23 remaining. Guard John Yokley's two straight jump shots were the principal shots.

But the Cavaliers began a surge of their own and with 12:35, the score stood tied at 48-all.

Again the Tar Heels rallied. A three point play by Bobby Lewis and a basket and two free throws by Miller gave the Tar Heels a 55 to 48 lead with 11:31 remaining.

The lead was increased to nine points with 9:32 to go when a Larry Miller jumper put the Tar Heels out front 61-52.

But the Cavaliers of Coach Gibson were not to be contained. With 7:45 remaining, Jerry Sanders hit on a lay up to tie the count at 61 all.

After two Lewis free throws —making the score 69-61—the Cavaliers roared back. The Tar Heel lead was three points at 69-66 with 3:09 remaining. A Virginia tap-in with 3:01 remaining made the score 69-68 in favor of the Tar Heels and set the stage for the frantic last three minutes.

Ol' Timer Recalls The Good Ol' Days

By SAM COVINGTON
Special To The DTH

A self - avowed campus conservative and foremer DTH columnist sees a growth of conservatism at Carolina and "more editorial responsibility" in the students now.

Wilson, 23, is a History grad student. During his sophomore year he wrote a conservative column for the Tar Heel that often got him in trouble.

"I was majoring in Political Science then and professors would jump me in class about whatever I had written. One spent a whole hour on me one day," Wilson said.

Wilson explained that during 1961-62 he combined an interest in journalism and a feeling that the conservative viewpoint was not being expressed here by working for the paper.

"I took Prof. Kenneth Byerly's class in news writing and got real gung-ho for journalism, but decided to get out after hitting public affairs reporting," Wilson said. "I guess it's a good thing."

Wilson feels that the DTH editors he knew then were more interested in stirring people up than in reporting the news. They caused "unnecessary ferment."

Wilson said the DTH editorial policy has matured since he wrote for the paper. "The present editor is more editorally responsible — at least he isn't wasting student fees just to be stirring people up."

"The Daily Tar Heel has always been filled with eager young moralists who have all the answers to the world's problems," he said. "That's why they are on the staff — that's why I was on it."

Martin L. Wilson recalls that the big issues then were Walker and "muzzling the the Congo crises, General Walker and "muzzling the military" and Robert Kennedy and the race issue.

"At one time seven DTH staff members went to Oxford to cover the race riots at Ole Miss. They managed to get one editorial out of it."

Wilson helped form the Young Americans for Freedom, a political action group, but dropped his connection with them. He was one of original members of the Carolina Conservative Club in 1964.

"The Conservative Club is an educational group," he said. "I was also in Carolina Forum for three years and tried to help bring a more conservative viewpoint to the group."

He told of joining with others to persuade the Forum to bring a conservative speaker to Carolina. "We had to talk them into a corner before they would agree to ask William F. Buckley to speak here, and then they tried to get out of paying him."

Weaver Will Remain Here In New Consolidated Post

Fred H. Weaver has accepted the position of Vice President for University Relations in the Consolidated University.

The appointment was announced by President William C. Friday, following approval by the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

He was formerly Vice President for Administration in the Consolidated University and before that was Dean of Student Affairs at North Carolina.

Vice President Weaver's duties include: (1) Representing the Consolidated University in relation to external agencies, (2) liaison between the Consolidated University and the members of the Board of Trustees, (3) direction of the expansion and operation of the educational television structure, (4) attention to matters pertaining to the image of the University, (5) preview of all University publications.

President Friday said yesterday, "After consultation with the officers of the American Council on Education and with the Trustees, I invited Mr. Weaver to serve as vice president for University relations, and I am pleased that he has accepted."

Donald B. Anderson was also named by the trustee executive committee as vice president for academic affairs. He will serve during the spring semester in that position.

Anderson was a member of the faculty at N. C. State before coming to the Consolidated offices five years ago. A scientist, he was winner of the O. Max Gardner Award. He has recently held a professorship in Botany on the several campuses of the University.

Prof. Anderson, who formerly was a vice president of the University and retired last year, resumes his position with President Friday's office on a temporary basis.

Quiet Hours

Quiet hours for Residence Halls begins today at 2 p.m. and continues, 24 hours a day, until the final day of exams.

The main difference in this year's rules will be in the enforcement. No warning cards will be given to an offender on his first offense. Instead, his name will be turned in to a member of the Men's Residence Council. The offender will have to appear before a court in a formal trial.

Anyone found guilty during this period will be subject to an official reprimand, a small monetary fine, or a period of probation.

APO To Sell Books

Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, will sponsor a used book sale on Feb. 1-4 in Gerrard Hall from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Each student will set a price on his books and leave them with the book exchange. The student receives all but 10 per cent of the price.

The 10 per cent deducted goes to cover operating expense. Any profit is given to charity.

GM Sets New Hours

Graham Memorial will stay open until 3 a.m. every night before an exam, according to Archie Copeland, assistant director of GM.

The building opens every day at 9 a.m. At present it closes at 11 p.m. except on Fridays and Saturdays when it remains open until midnight.

Rooms not in use are available for group study, Copeland said. Anyone interested in reserving one should inquire at the GM desk.

Journalists To Meet

The 41st annual North Carolina Press Institute will begin at North Carolina next Thursday.

Annual press awards will be given out by Gov. Dan K. Moore at Carroll Hall at 8:30 p.m. Thursday.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp will address the annual dinner to be held at Duke on Friday.

UNC Receives Grant

North Carolina has received a $20,000 grant from the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation.

Three fourths of the money is to be used to aid graduate students who have completed a year of graduate study.

The other fourth is to be used however the school likes.

Students Released

Langley Tolbert, a North Carolina student, and John Williams have been released from Memorial Hospital after undergoing treatment for injuries received in an auto accident Jan. 8.

Marian Johnson, also from North Carolina, was injured and taken to Duke Hospital.

The Jay-Walking Era

The News and Observer

Today, everybody knows what jay-walking is, and some have paid small fines for the offense, but yesterday it was a ludicrous catch-all, with cruel implications at times.

Jay-walking ordinances were unknown in small towns where pedestrians talked in the middle of the street and dogs napped on cool payment. Kids played ball in residential streets, and many chickens crossed the road and lived to lay eggs, but places with streetcars had jay-walking laws. You couldn't take a rippet across the street as you did at home.

Such metropolises as Richmond and Norfolk were notorious for picking on country people. (You and the policeman in Raleigh or Winston-Salem always had a mutual friend or cousin.) A boy in the outer spaces of Richmond or Norfolk would wire his father that he needed money for jay-walking. The father sent the money, but worried and wondered what foreign clack his boy had succumbed to, and since it sounded like "jay-hawking" the father feared the worst.

But if an innocent girl said she was arrested for "jay-walking," her parents knew she had been doped and turned into a soiled dove. The more the tragic tale was told, the worse it got, and she was lucky to live it down. But after a while, all boys who needed extra money in the city wired or phoned that they were caught "jay-walking." This was akin to the boys at military schools who had to have money because they "broke the pivot." And ultimately "jay-walking" here at home became an excuse for everything from being late to school to forgetting to milk the cow. Even today when some oldtimer is late to a business conference he smiles and says: "Sorry, gentlemen, but I guess I was jay-walking."

DTH Awards Of The Week

Triumph of Justice Award: The federal court ruling Wednesday which struck down Tennessee's anti-nudism law. The court opposed the law as unconstitutional because of its "indefiniteness" and the possibility that it could be interpreted to mean that even undressing in the home is illegal.

Civil Right, Anti-War Link Growing

The action taken by the Georgia House of Representatives in refusing to seat a Negro legislator has again spotlighted the increasing connection of the civil rights and anti-war movements in this country.

The representative, Julian Bond of Atlanta, was denied his seat for endorsing a statement by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee which denounced American intervention in Viet Nam as aggression and urged Americans to seek ways to avoid military service. Bond is a member of SNCC.

Should Bond have been allowed to take his seat? Perhaps. The legislature's action seems to be an indication of their disgust with the draft-card burning, sign-carrying protesters of our policy in Viet Nam. However, in barring Bond, the Georgia House may have violated his rights under the First Amendment.

What the House certainly did was to provide another incident for civil rights demonstrators to demonstrate about. Whether the refusal to seat Bond was right or wrong, it can hardly be considered a racist move. On the same day that Bond was denied his seat, seven other Negroes were seated in the House; and a second Negro took his place in the Senate.

Transcending the importance of this one incident is the question of the link between the two. Cries from SNCC to get out of Viet Nam are about as relevant as an attack on the pro football war by the Transport Workers Union.

Undoubtedly there are individuals in groups such as SNCC who feel we are wrong in fighting in Viet Nam. There are probably also those who feel we are right.

The point is that there is no reason to make any position on the Vietnamese War an article of faith with a group whose reason for existence was nothing to do with foreign affairs.

Several reasons suggest themselves as possible explanations for the civil rights-anti-war connection. They range from pure, high-minded beliefs to power-seeking demagaguery. First, the civil rights workers may be honestly motivated in both directions.

That is, there may be some factor—perhaps a desire for universal "liberty and justice"—which leads people like Bond to see the American Negroes' struggle for equality as related to the National Liberation Front's drive for "freedom," and Southern oppression of the Negro as akin to American "aggression" in Viet Nam.

Even if this is the dominant reason for anti-war pronouncements by civil rights leaders, it is no justification for the connection. Many of those who are working hardest on behalf of the Negro, from President Johnson on down, also support our efforts in Viet Nam.

The average civil rights leader is simply incompetent to make foreign policy judgments and should not use the forum gained in one field to pontificate in another.

This explanation of the civil rights leader's behavior credits him with having his heart in the right place. Although misguided, his actions are motivated by a sincere belief that he is doing what is right. Other possible reasons for the dual conduct are not so praiseworthy.

Perhaps the militant pacifism of civil rights leaders is an extension of their anti-Southern feelings. Southern politicians have often been among the most military-minded in the country, and the South gave Barry Goldwater his biggest vote in 1964. Goldwater, of course, was labeled a warmonger by many people during the campaign.

In other words, the civil rights leaders may feel that they are fighting the same people on two fronts.

Money may also be a force behind the anti-war campaign. Several civil rights organizations, including SNCC and the NAACP, are suffering from a shortage of funds. The successes on the civil rights battlefield have apparently convinced many potential contributors that the fight has been won. In order to get the funds necessary to keep alive, some of the organizations may be turning to the war as a dramatic situation that will keep them in the public eye.

Finally, the most serious charge that can be made against the civil rights leaders is that they have been corrupted by power. Having largely won their fight for Negro rights, they are seeking new fields in which to exert their strength. The acclaim that they have received for their role in the Negro struggle has given them an exaggerated sense of importance, leading them to assert themselves as experts in strange fields.

There are some indications that this charge is at least partly true. Martin Luther King is a case in point. A few eyebrows were raised when King was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize last year, apparently because of his role in the civil rights struggle. King obviously took the award to heart because he announced a plan to conduct personal negotiations with the North Vietnamese. The storm of protest that the Negro leader received upon publicizing these plans must have shocked him, and so far nothing has come of these plans.

(This abortive negotiation scheme is not the only evidence that King has overestimated his power and importance. The economic boycott which he proclaimed in Alabama was a crashing failure).

Admittedly these suggested reasons for the dual activities of civil rights leaders are only guesses. All probably are true to a certain degree. However, the first and the last explanations seem more important than the others.

One thing seems certain. King and his associates are only hurting themselves and their primary cause by linking it to the attacks on our efforts in Viet Nam. They are bound to alienate some supporters of the civil rights movement who support American policy in the war.

If civil rights leaders expect the country to listen to them, no matter what subject they sound off about, they are sadly mistaken.

A View from The Hill

GROSSEM CITY, U.S.A.

PANIC has broken out in the PLUSH OFFICES of the Consolidated University Building. Commissioner Thursday has received word of a DREADED DEVELOPMENT!

Commissioner: That dastardly villain! He's struck again right under our very noses!

Assistant: Who, Commissioner?

C: The Grosser! The fiendish arch - fiend dedicated to GROSSING OUT the entire University! We thought we had captured him three years ago at the Beat Dook parade, but he turned up this fall disguised as a home movie producer. Now he's on the loose again!

A. GREAT GUNS! Where is he this time?

C. Big Mom Residence Hall! Somehow or other, the devilish monster has persuaded those upstanding, clean - living American boys to publish a pornographic rush booklet! The scoundrel!

A: This sounds like a job for . . .

C: Yes! BATDEAN! I don't know who he is behind that desk, but we need him. And we need him NOW!

In a matter of seconds, the deathly urgent phone call has reached the Bat Cave of 02 South Building. To the outside world, this seemingly innocent enclosure is the office of wealthy socialite preacher Bruce Long and his bright young ward, Dick Kepner. But we know better!

Within these walls dwells BATDEAN, the caped crusader, and the incredible BOBIN. Together they form a DYNAMIC DUO that strikes fear in the hearts of BROOKS BROTHERS BIGOTS everywhere.

A quick change of clothes and (BAM! WHOOSH!) they are off in the powerful BATMOBILE —the only car in Grossem City that bears a B sticker!

Within seconds, the trusty twosome is standing in the awesome lobby of Big Mom. Bobin surveys the incriminating rush booklet.

BOBIN: HOLY REPRIMAND! This is serious stuff, Batdean!

BATDEAN: Yes, Bobin, but one day Truth, Justice, and the Campus Code shall prevail over all. Confiscate several hundred copies of that VILE BOOKLET so that we may have sufficient evidence. Wonder Woman will be interested in this!

In a flash, the GROSSER appears from a nearby elevator. A fiendish grin spreads across his distorted face.

GROSSER: Well, &!%(!?$$!) it's Batdean!

BATDEAN: Don't talk like that, you VULGAR VILLAIN. Your time has come!

GROSSER: My time will never come, Batdean! Even as we stand here, my work is going on. Just wait till you see what the boys of Alexander have planned for the girls of Winston! Hee Hee! Wait till you see the water tower next Tuesday! Wait till the Grill has Happy Hour! (Chuckle) Wait till Jubilee!

BATDEAN: You FIEND!

The Caped Crusader lunges towards the Grosser in a powerful effort to bring the villain to his feet. But the Grosser moves like a REPTILE and springs towards a nearby stairwell. Bobin helps Batdean to his feet.

BATDEAN: Don't let him . . . I think I'm going to black out . . . after him, Bobin . . . (he drops to the floor)

WILL BOBIN CAPTURE THE DASTARDLY CRIMINAL?

WILL BATDEAN GET TO THE WATER TOWER IN TIME?

WILL THE GROSSER FULFILL HIS THREAT TO INSTALL 300 COPIES OF FANNY HILL IN THE RESERVE READING ROOM?

DON'T MISS THE NEXT THRILLING EPISODE!

Television Correction

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I would like to correct your statement in the Jan. 11 Tar Heel in which you said the University maintains four broadcasting stations in Raleigh, Greensboro, Chapel Hill, and Columbia. The university operates WUNC-TV, which is composed of three studios in Raleigh, Greensboro, and Chapel Hill, as well as WUNB-TV, channel 2, which is programmed from video tapes of channel 4's daily schedule and played back a day later.

This delayed schedule will soon be eliminated when micro-wave links are finally established between the channel transmitter and the channel 2 transmitter in Columbia.

When the enture network is established, it will cover all of North Carolina and will all be connected by micro-wave with the channel 4 transmitter in Chatham county.

Address Was Johnson At His Best

President Johnson made an eloquent address to Congress Wednesday night. He spoke in a slow Texas drawl, but that couldn't stifle his eloquence.

The President gave a State of the Union Address that must have fascinated all who heard it. It was masterfully worded. A principle task of any Presidential Address is to link he highest ideals with the most mundane political requests. But Wednesday's address did more than link the two: it fused them together — made ideals out of practical measures. And, in the process, it remained believable.

There was eloquence in the proposal to maintain the high level of civil spending on Great Society programs while stepping up defense spending:

"There are men who cry out: We must sacrifice. Let us rather ask them: Whom will they sacrifice? Will they sacrifice the children who seek learning — the sick who need care . . . ?

"I believe we can continue the Great Society while we fight in Viet Nam. But it some do not believe this, then, in the name of justice, let them call for the contribution of those who live in the fullness of our blessing, rather than strip it from the hands of those in need."

Mr. Johnson could not have been more masterful in letting the Congress know that he preferred more taxes to a cutback in domestic spending.

Mr. Johnson could not have been more masterful in letting the Congress know that he preferred more taxes to a cutback in domestic spending.

Many observers might admit that the President's address was masterful and eloquent, all right, but masterful and eloquent, only as a carefully prepared scheme to improve the President's public image. They might point to the claim, made by many political authorities, that the President's image is not longer the image of the man himself. It is a phantom, there authorities say, conjured from the swirling winds of political expediency by a team of public relations experts.

But this writer believes that the State of the Union Address was, for the most part, an honest, personal testimony. The President's mastery of words was the least part of his eloquence. The greater part stemmed from his sincerity.

In his conclusion, Mr. Johnson set aside political requests to speak of his desire to end the war in Viet Nam:

"The war in Viet Nam is not like . . . other wars. Yet, finally, war is always the same. It is young men dying in the fullness of their promise. It is trying to kill a man you do not even know well enough to hate.

"Therefore, to know war is to know there is still madness in the world.

"Many of you share the burden with me. But there is a difference. or finally I must order our guns to fire, against all the most inward pulls of my desire "Many of you share the burden . with me. But there is a difference. For finally I must order our guns to fire, against all the most inward pulls of my desire . . .

"I am hopeful, and I will try, to end this battle and return our sons to their desires."

There was a considerable amount of sugared politics in the address. But these are outweighed by eloquent statements of conviction, like the one above.

Despite the traditional political maneuverings and budgetary doctorings, the State of the Union Address told the Congress and the country what its President wants and believes. At the core of the address was a frank relevation by a man who feels, whether rightly or wrongly, that he has been singled out by destiny. Delivered by anyone else, the address would have been oratorical fakery.

But delivered by President Johnson, it was clear eloquence.

GM Showing Exam Flicks

Graham Memorial will begin a new policy this exam period by showing free flicks next weekend. The movies are strictly "escapist-types."

Showings will be at 7 and 9:30 p.m. On Friday the Carroll Hall offering will be the Marx Brothers famous "Day At the Races."

Groucho, a horse doctor accidentally in charge of a sanitarium for wealthy hypochrondriacs, gets involved with a demented duo from the race track (Harpo and Chico).

Saturday night W. C. Fields and Mae West will appear in "My Little Chickadee," a burlesque western. A big-city siren, trying to "take" the wild and wooly west, just about meets her match.

According to Robin Dial, GMAB films chairman, the new policy of exam period flicks was begun because of popular request.

"Besides," he added, "We knew everyone wants to let loose because the downtown theatres are always packed."

SASC Will Accept Rules

The visiting speaker regulations adopted Friday by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees conforms to the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges' accreditation board, Consolidated University President William C. Friday said yesterday.

The regulations provide:

—That the opportunity be provided at the meeting, or later, to present speakers of different points of view.

—That only recognized student, faculty and university organizations are authorized to invite speakers.

—That all statutes of the state relating to speakers and the use of facilities for speaking be obeyed.

The regulations will be presented to the full board of trustees for action on Feb. 24.

'Holiday Mountain' Closes Today

HOLIDAY MOUNTAINEERS

Playmaker Comedy Ends After 7 Performances

Carolina Playmakers' production of "Holiday Mountain," the comedy by Italy's Ugo Betti, ends the seven - performance run today at the Playmakers Theatre with a 2:30 matinee and an 8 p.m. program.

Tickets for both performances go on sale at the theatre box - office 30 minutes before curtain time.

The play's author is considered by most critics as the most important Italian playwright of the modern era with the exception of Luigi Pirandello.

Set in the Alpine regions of northern Italy in the 1920's, the play concerns a young girl, Francesca, who is in love with Alberto, the boy next door. As it so often happens, though, Alberto is completely ignorant of the fact, and he treats Francesca as he would a pal.

The plot revolves around Francesca's hilarious attempts to make Alberto notice her and Alberto's "happy - go - lucky" attitude toward the whole affair.

Sherry Elledge (Francesca) and James Boothby (Alberto) are joined in major roles by Anne Mallard Davis, Tom Wilson, Melody Dickinson, Wendy Farer and Arthur Cain.

The production has received praise from many observers. It is the first Playmakers production in 1966. Harry Davis is the director.

Tardy Parking Gripes Hit

By ANDY MYERS
DTH News Editor

The Dean of Men, William Long, will start a new parking ticket policy next semester by requiring all appeals for tickets to be made within 48 hours after they are received.

Students with three or more parking tickets face a loss of motor vehicle privileges, and the new policy is aimed at students who believe they have legitimate "gripes" about one or more of their tickets.

Bob Kepner, assistant to the Dean of Men, said the reason for the new rule is that "some students get tickets and come in months after they get them. It makes it hard for us to do anything about it, because the police have forgotten the tickets by this time."

Kepner said yesterday that 29 students have had their motor vehicle privileges revoked because of parking violations.

About 50 other students have received three or more tickets "and we have yet to talk to these people," he said.

In a statement which will be incorporated into next year's parking regulations, Kepner said:

"Any student who feels either that he has received a parking ticket or a parking notice unjustly, or in error, must appeal his case within 48 hours after receipt of the ticket or notice.

"In case of receipt of a parking ticket, a student must appeal his case to Arthur Beaumont, campus security chief, whose office is on the second floor of Y-Building.

"Those students who have received parking notices, however, must talk to Alonzo Squires, traffic counselor, in 02 South Building.

"This policy will be put into effect at the beginning of the spring semester."

No Silence Seen In Sorority Rush

No strict silence rules will be observed during spring sorority rush, according to the office of the Dean of Women.

In fall rush there was a limited silence rule, but this spring women are free to talk to sorority women.

UNC has been near the top throughout the nation in field goal accuracy this season. Small wonder when the percentages of the top three Tar Heel scorers are compiled.

Bobby Lewis, averaging 29.4 points per game, has hit on 56.9 per cent of his shots. Larry Miller, averaging 23.4 points per game, has an even loftier figure — 57.1 per cent. Tom Gauntlett has hit 55.3 per cent of his shots while averaging 10 points per game.

Bunting-Led Frosh Rout UVA 114-77

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.— Tall and willowy Bill Bunting played near perfect basketball here last night and sifted through the Virginia Cavayearlings for 27 points in leading UNC's Tar Babies to a 114-77 rout.

It was UNC's eighth straight win without a loss.

Bunting was as perfect in his shooting from the floor as you could be, hitting everyone of his 12 shots. He was almost as good from the foul line, netting five of six tries. When informed of his feat after the game, Bill said, "I know — but I didn't shoot anything but layups."

Actually, he hit two from more than ten feet away, but the rest of his buckets came from the continued sharp passing of his teammates and some drives.

Gerald Tuttle supported Bunting in the scoring, burning the nets for his highest total of the year. His 26 points topped his previous high total of 12.

As a team, the Tar Babies fired away for a tremendous 66 per cent from the floor canning 46 of 70 tries. They out rebounded Virginia 61 to 39.

Rusty Clark played a strong game around the basket and hit 17 points, while Jim Bostick — who started in the place of the injured Dick Grubar — connected for 15.

Billy Dodson, in a strong reserve role, faked through and outran the Cavs for 14 points while Joe Brown got 11, Don Rindfleisch and Ken Royall got two each.

The rout began early, as Carolina ran up a 9-0 lead in the first two minutes of play.

Joe Brown hit one of two free throws to get it started. Then Clark, Tuttle, and Bunting (twice) followed with baskets before Sam Harvey made a steal and scored for Virginia.

Another basket by Bunting made the score 16-3 with 15:39 left in the half. And Brown's free throw ran it to 21-5 after six minutes had elapsed.

Dodson entered the game at 10:24 and promptly converted a fast break for the Tar Babies first 20 - point lead at 33-13.

Practice Brings Results For 'Shunned' Donnie Moe

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

"Wilt," the TV interviewer continued, "what advice would you give to all the young boys looking in who dream of some day becoming great basketball stars?"

He ran a huge hand along his black goatee and looked into the camera. "Practice. If you have dedication and desire you can get anywhere in sports."

Hah! Everyone knows that to be a college hoopster, much less a pro, you must begin dribbling a ball around your play pen. The first recognizable word you utter cannot be a gurgling "ma-ma." It must be an excited and prophetic "baskeebaule."

If you don't tower above your kindergarden playmates forget a future in the sport. If your hands aren't lightning quick, fate has limited them to making pot holders instead of baskets.

To play the game in college you must make a high school team by your sophomore year, become a star by the time you're a junior, and then survey the scholarship offers as a senior.

Everyone knows these things. Everyone, that is, except a young revolutionary named Donnie Moe.

Moe puts all the cynics back under their rocks and brings cheers from diehard supporters of athletic amaturism. And besides all of that, he makes a Horatio Alger hero turn green with envy.

You see, Donnie Moe never wore a high school uniform. He was too big and too good and they wouldn't let him play, you're thinking. Wrong.

"I was only 5'6" my junior year," Donnie explained, "and that was too small for the team. I grew to 5'9" my senior year, and I guess I might have made it. I'm not sure.

"I live in Brooklyn, and I practiced every night at the YMCA. club. In the summer I worked as a counselor at a boys camp in Pennsylvania. Rusty Clark was there two years ago. We played a lot of 3 on 3. Rusty has really improved since then."

Moe hasn't done so badly himself. Before every varsity game he goes through the warm up drills wearing a blue warm up jacket with his name printed in white letters across the shoulders. And he's played in every game except two — Vanderbilt and Duke. Moe dreamed about doing these things for a long time. He still can't believe it's all come true.

"I took a year off between high school and college. I never came down here with any expectations of playing ball. But I decided to go out for the freshman team.

"Last year I was redshirted. I practiced with the varsity and that helped me a lot."

Student Legislature

Student Legislature will meet as usual tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in New East, according to Speaker Brit Gordon.

FCA To Meet

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes will meet tonight at 7:30 in Woollen Gym. The usual Thursday meeting was changed because of the Wake Forest game.

CAROLINA STYLE

Guess Who

We ran across this picture of our lovely cheerleaders in the files yesterday.

We thought we should have a good action shot of these girls who work so hard, and we want to give them credit for their fine . . . efforts.

One problem. We can't tell you who they are since their heads are cut off.

So guess who . . .

And Away We Go

You had a terrible time getting back to the Hill . . . your schedule is a mess . . . you flunked DA 30!? . . . yes, the snow is beginning to wear you down . . . all your beer froze . . . your girl, she found another, oh, she didn't find another . . .

Don't fret friends it's only 58 more days 'til the spring break, 109 more 'til exams and then . . . summer school?

Blood Drive Approaching

Get your circulation going and put in some antifreeze.

Carolina's blood drive gets under way in two short weeks with 600 pints set as the goal.

The drive, which is being organized by the DTH, will last two days, Feb. 16-17, in Woollen Gym.

Cathy Cauble, Hickory senior, has joined Sonny Pepper as co-chairman of the drive.

It is estimated that 900 donors will be needed because some people will be rejected for various medical reasons.

The goal of 600 pints is the maximum that can be collected over the two-day drive. It will all go for military use.

Jubilee Plans Indefinite

Signing of groups for Jubilee Weekend is "up in the air," according to Bill Campbell, president of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

"We had hoped to have definite information by now, but nothing has turned up.

Jubilee will run April 29, 30, and May 1. Concerts will probably be in Polk Place as they were last year.

South Building Can Stop SG's Lawyer Plans

The State Attorney General's office has told UNC Chancellor Paul Sharp that the University Administration may prohibit Student Government from retaining a lawyer if it wishes.

In a letter dated Jan. 11, a member of the Attorney General's staff told Sharp "the University Administration has the power to prohibit (hiring a lawyer) if, in their opinion, it might prove detremental to the University as a whole."

Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey wrote a letter to Student Body President Paul Dickson five days ago telling Dickson that Student Government could utilize the legal council of the University attorney or employ a lawyer for short terms to work on specific projects.

Cathey said any relationship between Student Government and a private attorney would terminate after the attorney's specific research had been completed.

Dickson is now using funds from the SG President's Discretionary Fund to pay for investigation of the legality of the Administration's policy on the lawyer issue.

The Student Government lawyer issue broke open last December after Student Legislature passed a Dickson-supported measure providing for the full-time retention of a Student Government Attorney.

The move was immediately criticized by Cathey and other University administrators, who warned of a possible breakdown of relations between Student Government and the Administration if a lawyer were used in mutual negotation.

Sharp sent a letter to N. C. Attorney General T. W. Bruton December 27 requesting an investigation of the legality of the Legislature's action.

The issue has prompted sharp debate between Graham Memorial and South Building.

Whiskey

Mark Twain, or at least a performer closely resembling him, will be on the Carolina campus Wednesday, Feb. 9. Hal Holbrook, who last appeared at UNC in November 1962, is returning to present "Mark Twain Tonight."

Holbrook portrays Twain from the cynical and humorous stories to the white mane and gray mustache.

Holbrook's opening remarks during his first visit were: "It was not the missionary, or the railroad or the pioneer who tamed the frontier. It was instead America's most valuable asset — whiskey!"

Reserved tickets for students are on sale now at Graham Memorial Information Desk. The prices are 50 cents for students and $1 for date or spouse for the 8 p.m. show.

Communist Will Talk Here If Approved By Trustees

SDS Sponsors Herbert Aptheker

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey yesterday outlined the format of communist Herbert Aptheker's March 9 speech here — "if the trustees allow him to appear."

Cathey said a panel discussion, similar to the one which featured Congressman Charles Weltner here last December, will be held.

"It's in the hands of the trustees right now, but if they decide to allow him to appear, a senior member of the faculty will be present at the speech," he said.

HERBERT APTHEKER

BULLETIN

Gov. Dan Moore has called a meeting of the executive committee of the UNC board of trustees Monday to decide if Herbert Aptheker will be allowed to speak on the UNC campus.

Moore, who is out of the state vacationing, issued a statement through his office in which he said:

"It should be obvious to everyone that the invitation under consideration was made in an effort to create controversy for the sake of controversy and not for any legitimate educational purpose. For this reason I do not think the trustees should permit this request to be granted."

"Several scholars from the faculty who are experts in the field of the topic will be on the panel, chaired by a senior faculty member. Aptheker will make the main speech, the others will give brief comments and then the floor will be opened to questions from the audience," Cathey said.

The Students for a Democratic Society invited Aptheker to speak in Memorial Hall March 9. The group notified the University administration Jan. 21 of the invitation and Aptheker's acceptance.

Under the amended speaker ban law it is the responsibility of the administration and trustees to control speaker policy, with final decision left to the trustees. Chancellor Paul F. Sharp made a recommendation on the question of Aptheker's appearance to President William C. Friday, who presented it to the executive committee of the board of trustees last Friday.

The committee adjourned after more than four hours of discussion without reaching a decision. Gov. Dan Moore, chairman of the executive committee, left during the meeting for a vacation trip. Jerry Elliot, Moore's press secretary, said Moore is expected back in Raleigh by next Sunday. A spokesman for the committee said it would not meet again until after Moore returns.

Jim McCorkle, president of SDS, said Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson, executive director of the National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee, were invited to speak "because these men articulate important stands on basic issues facing our society." He said earlier statements by other SDS members that the invitations are intended as a "test" of the administration and its interpretations of the visiting speaker policy are only personal opinions — not the official position of SDS.

"It's silly to say this is an attack on the administration," he said.

Aptheker is director of the American Institute of Marxist Studies in New York. His speech topic here will be, "The Negro Movement — Reform or Revolution?" He spoke here in Gerrard Hall Jan. 11, 1950, on "The Roots of Negro Oppression." He was sponsored by the Karl Marx Study Club.

Wilkinson has served a year in prison for refusing to testify before HUAC about communist activities. He invoked the First Amendment, not the Fifth, and would not have been subject to the old speaker ban law.

Shop And Save Money

By RON SHINN
DTH Staff Writer

North Carolina students can save a large part of the money they normally spend each semester on books if they take enough time to do some wise shopping.

In addition to the campus book exchange students may buy used books for many courses from the Intimate Book Store or from the Alpha Phi Omega used book exchange.

For new books the campus book exchange is the students only choice. Prices are usually the same as suggested by the publisher. The book exchange also has a large selection of used books at a reduced rate.

If you don't like the subterranean atmosphere of the campus store there's also the Intimate in downtown Chapel Hill.

Manager Wally Kurualt said Tuesday that he carries all textbooks that he knows will be used. "We deal mostly in used books whenever possible," he explained, "but we carry new textbooks for courses being given for the first time here."

The Intimate buys books from students at approximately half what they paid for them and then sells them for the second time at three-fourths of the original price.

"We're sometimes a little cheaper than the University book store because we don't raise the price on our used books when the price of the new book goes up," Kurault said.

The Intimate is also offering several of the textbooks that are in great demand at special prices this week. "We try to run specials anytime that we're overstocked with a certain book and fortunately we have a large supply of several of these books on hand."

Included in the low priced group are Sociology 51, 52 and 62 texts, Journalism 60, History 49, Chemistry 11, Math 31 and Education 71 books.

Alpha Phi Omega fraternity is again operating its used book exchange in Gerrard Hall. Chairman Randy Powell says that the service will remain in operation until Feb. 4.

"We don't buy the books from the students," Powell said. "We only act as a middle-man for students selling books to other students.

Memory Blackouts Mean Alcoholism Close Behind

The heavy drinker who has to hunt for his car in the morning because he can't remember how he got home the night before can blame his predicament on "alcoholic blackout."

The term is fairly familiar to alcoholics. They often hide things they don't want to remember in the blank spaces of their memories caused by blackouts.

Physicians are familiar with tales of memory lapses among heavy imbibers. They view the blackout medically as probably the single most important warning sign of impending alcoholism.

Unfortunately, the average man who drinks his memories away ignores this danger sign.

Dr. John A. Ewing, chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, says that alcoholic blackout isn't the same thing as "passing out," nor should it be confused with blackouts from fainting or from a blow on the head.

"An alcoholic blackout," he explains, "consists of a person acting fairly normal but with no memory of his acts.

"This person can talk, dance, drive, make love and even work without the people around him being aware of his lack of memory."

Dr. Ewing recalls a patient who, during an alcoholic blackout, drove a car "from the Piedmont to the mountains and woke up in a motel."

Other patients can remember talking and feeling normal "but suddenly five or six hours are missing."

The drinking man's temporary amnesia might be compared to a tape recorder.

"The recorder is working all right, but the playback isn't operating," Dr. Ewing says. "It's almost as if a part of the tape won't play back."

The point at which blackout occurs might be labeled the point at which alcohol becomes a drug rather than a beverage.

The loss of memory from alcohol seems to be psychological because lost events can be found if the patient is given drugs or more alcohol.

"This," says Dr. Ewing, "indicates a failure to recall, not a failure to record."

Experimental injections of barbiturates (truth serum) may help retrieve memories thought to be completely lost.

And it is common knowledge that alcoholics have recalled events during a blackout by consuming more alcohol — such as the drinker who can't remember where he hid his bottle last night until he has several drinks the next morning.

All alcoholics do not experience blackouts and it may not be true that all who do are able to recall events during the experience.

Enough blackouts have been investigated, however, to suggest that some memories are blanked out because "it just isn't comfortable to remember."

Dr. Ewing doesn't rule out the possibility that drinking may produce chemical interference with memory. It could be that memory isn't thoroughly inscribed on the brain during a state of intoxication — "as if the tape recorder is turned too low."

Surprisingly, a drinker's memory gap can be retroactive.

For example, consider the drinker "on the wagon" who plans conscieniously to avoid temptation by avoiding all the bars on the way home from work.

But he wakes up next morning from a drunken stupor and can't remember anything after leaving the office.

Dr. Ewing is not aware of any major research study of alcoholic blackouts. In his own practice, only a few patients have been tested. However, in each case tested, drugs or alcohol have produced recallable memories.

Committee Studies Job

Dr. William S. Wells, chairman of the advisory committee to find a replacement for Chancellor Paul F. Sharp, said yesterday his committee has received a "good number" of names in the search, for a chancellor but has made no recommendations.

"We are now studying the nature of the chancellorship," he said. "It is necessary to understand the job before we try to find a man to fill it. We won't start considering individual names until all the names are in.

"We hope to recommend a candidate before the end of this school year, Wells added. "Our committee is meeting an average of four times a week, but it will still take us weeks and probably months to find a nominee."

UNC-C Gets Head

Dean Wallace Colvard, president of Mississippi State University, was elected chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte by the board of trustees of the Consolidated University on Friday.

He will take over his new position in several weeks. Bonnie Cone is the Acting Chancellor.

Colvard was the dean of the school of agriculture at N. C. State until 1960 when he became president of Mississippi State.

Fire Threatens Frat

An over - heated oil furnace which threatened to burn down the DKE fraternity house Wednesday burst and left the house chilled by 20 degree weather.

The overheated furnace almost set the low hanging ceiling on fire, but was cut off in time to avoid serious damage.

Later in the afternoon someone cut the furnace completely off, allowing cold water to flow into the hot furnace and crack the boiler.

No explosion occured, but members of the house who had not yet left for semester break were forced to endure a cold night before repairs could be made late Thursday.

Spring Rush Meeting

All freshmen who wish to go through spring fraternity rush will meet this evening at 7:30 in Memorial Hall.

Neil Thomas, chairman of the Interfraternity Council Publicity Committee, termed the event a "mechanical meeting" since the freshmen will be told what they can and cannot do during spring rush. It will be necessary for freshmen to have a 2.0 average before pledging in any fraternity.

Job Interviews

Five companies will hold interviews for jobs today.

They are the Barnett First National Bank, the Food and Drug Administration, Rebuen H. Donnelly Crop., American Viscose Division of FMC Corp., and Glen Falls Insurance Co.

The Bureau of the Census, Cannon Mills, Citizens & Southern National Bank, and Sonoco Products will have representatives on campus tomorrow.

Students wanting an interview should make an appointment in 211 Gardner.

Di-Phi To Meet

The Di-Phi Senate will meet in emergency executive session tonight at 6:30 on the top floor of New West.

Placement Service Urges Filing Soon

The University Placement Service today urged students to apply for job placement assistance as soon as possible.

J. M. Galloway, director of the placement service, said registration for permanent placement involves developing a personnel file containing biographical information, transcript and faculty evaluations.

The director said that students who are going into military service or to graduate school should register while they are still on campus so their records can be used in the future.

"Students seeking employment after graduation should complete the registration process as soon as possible so that they may take job interviews through the office during this semester," Galloway said.

He said the peak period for employer visits is during February and March. "Meeting a prospective employer here on campus can be quite a saving in time and money, and students are encouraged to take advantage of this opportunity," Galloway said.

The director said undergraduates can apply for summer jobs through the placement service.

More Trouble On The Hill

Trouble.

It comes and goes at most places. It seems to stay at Chapel Hill.

A communist has been invited to speak on the campus, and "communist speaker" always spells "trouble" in North Carolina. The speaker ban ruckus is not so far behind us that anyone could have forgotten that.

Members of Students for a Democratic Society were among those who felt the amendment to the speaker ban, placing visiting speaker policy in the hands of the trustees, was inadequate. The only speaker policy needed is the First Amendment to the Constitution, they said, in a press release Nov. 8, 1965.

That dissatisfaction has now been expressed through an invitation to Herbert Aptheker, a top communist spokesman and theoretician. SDS President Jim McCorkle said the communist was invited because he is a scholar with important views on "basic issues facing our society." That is acceptable enough, but intentionally or not, his organization has put the University on the spot and has reopened the just-closing wounds of the speaker ban fight.

Under the amended speaker ban, the trustees adopted this policy: "We the trustees together with the administration of this institution shall be held responsible and accountable for visiting speakers on our campuses. And to that end the administration will adopt rules and precautionary measures consistent with the policy herein set forth regarding the invitations to and appearance of visiting speakers. These rules and precautionary measures shall be subject to the approval of the trustees."

The Chapel Hill administration has several alternatives under these regulations. It could try to force SDS to withdraw the invitation, it could ban Aptheker from the campus, it could allow him to speak with some restrictions or it could allow him to speak freely.

The administration is keeping its recommendations private while the executive committee of the board of trustees is still considering the matter, but there can be no doubt that the administration's attitude toward letting Aptheker appear is favorable. To do otherwise is to admit that every argument used in the arduous fight against the speaker ban was a lie—that we really cannot be "trusted" to hear a communist speak.

SDS will certainly not withdraw the invitation. Aptheker would rightfully refuse to speak if restrictions were placed on what he may say. To deny him the privilege of speaking is to deny the sincerity of opposition to the speaker ban law and invite an internal rupturing of the University. Most students, in their past displays of disgust for the speaker ban law, have indicated that they would favor allowing Aptheker's appearance. They would unite against any administrative decision to prohibit his speech. The grounds for a Free Speech Movement which would out-Berkeley the University of California would be laid.

The only decision is to allow him to speak.

Indications are that the trustees are now inclined to keep Aptheker off the campus. A spokesman who attended the executive committee meeting last Friday said trustees feel they are being "dared" and they do not like it. Gov. Dan Moore, who left the meeting after 30 minutes, set an atmosphere of caution and restraint.

The trustees have shown themselves to be fair and decent in the past, with the interest of the University foremost. Now is no time to change that attitude in a spasm of political fears and doubts.

SDS President McCorkle has said that his organization is concerned about the existence of a free university in a political state. Whatever questionable goals and ideas the organization might have, this question concerns us all.

How free is this university?

We should find out through the resolution of this incident.

The trustees have said, "We recognize that the total program of a college or university is committed to an orderly process of inquiry and discussion . . . An essential part of the education of each student at this institution is the opportunity to hear diverse viewpoints expressed by speakers properly invited to the campus."

If they meant it, why are they hesitating? If they did not mean it, why does this University exist?

Supreme Court Should Void Voting Rights Act

The United States Supreme Court is currently considering South Carolina's suit challenging the constitutionality of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. The decision, of course, will be of critical importance, both to the six states now directly affected and to the rest of the 50 states in the long run.

Several other states were denied the right to challenge the Voting Rights Act and have appeared as amicus curiae (friends of the court) on behalf of South Carolina. Several other states have appeared in the same capacity on behalf of the United States.

If the Supreme Court follows its recent practice of deciding cases on the basis of what is "right," rather than what is constitutional, the disputed law will be upheld; and the Constitution will have been dealth another blow.

Rarely has the Court had to rule on a law so blatantly unconstitutional as the 1965 Voting Rights Act. The Constitution explicitly states that the qualifications for voters in federal elections shall be the same as for elections for the most numerous house of a state's legislature. Since there was no thought of setting uniform national voting qualifications for state legislatures, the right to set voting qualifications has been clearly left to the states.

Many people would no doubt argue that voting qualifications should be uniform throughout the nation. Perhaps they should, although I doubt that an agreement could be reached on what these qualifications should be. If uniform qualifications are to be set, however, they must be set by constitutional amendment, not by act of Congress. Moreover, this act does not even make restrictions on the power of all the states to set qualifications. It only affects those states determined to be discriminating against Negroes by a curious formula set forth in the act.

States which had less than 50 per cent of their voting-age population registered or voting in the presidential election of 1964 come under the restrictions made by this act. These states may not use literacy tests —no matter how fair—to judge the qualifications of a prospective voter. Thus New York can and does administer a literacy test. Louisiana cannot. What's more, New York will never be affected by this act, no matter what discriminatory steps it may take in the future. The 50 per cent rule was obviously devised so that the act would affect only those states which the federal government wanted it to affect.

Again, many people would say that literacy should not be a prerequisite for voting, that all citizens should have a voice in their government, even if they are unable to assimilate the information necessary to cast an intelligent ballot. But if literacy tests are to be barred, they must be barred by constitutional amendment; and they must be barred in all 50 states.

The absurdity of denying to a few states the rights conferred by the Constitution upon all the states should be apparent. Granted, the Southern states have been guilty of discrimination against the Negroes in the field of voting rights. I don't believe, however, that the federal government has the right to "punish" an errant state by taking away one of its constitutional rights.

The federal government has based its case for the constitutionality of the Voting Rights Act upon the Fifteenth Amendment. This amendment prohibits the states from denying anyone the right to vote because of race. But, as a Supreme Court Justice once said, the Fifteenth Amendment doesn't give anyone the right to vote. That is, the prospective voter still must satisfy other requirements before being placed on the rolls. One of the most common requirements is literacy, and the High Court upheld the constitutionality of literacy tests as recently as 1959.

The Fifteenth Amendment does not repeal the section of Article I which gives the states the right to set voter qualifications. Both parts of the Constitution have equal force.

Is there a way for the federal government to protect the Negro's right to vote? Yes, there is. Ironically, it involves the step which the federal government is most reluctant to take, namely, sending federal registrars into Southern states.

This is the type of voting rights law I would like to see passed: Some more universal rule to determine when discrimination exists should be established. When discrimination is found to exist, federal registrars should be sent in. However, these registrars should register voters according to the qualifications established by the states, assuming such qualifications are not discriminatory on their face. There is no need—and no constitutional sanction—for the federal government to set the voter qualifications itself.

Letters To The Editor

Think For Yourself

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel:

In recent weeks we have had demonstrated for us once again the importance of one of the fundamental democratic ideas: that individuals must form independent judgments of governmental policies and not defer to supposed experts — even in areas like foreign affairs. On Nov. 27, 1965, less than two months ago, some Americans protested in Washington their opposition to their government's Viet Nam policies. At that time, the marchers were attacked as immature and misinformed; they were alleged to be aiding the enemy and creating a wrong impression about American determination to continue the war.

The marchers called upon their government to take peace initiatives which were:

1. Stop bombing North Viet Nam
2. Officially recognize the 1954 Geneva Agreements as a basis for a settlement
3. Agree to free elections to decide the fate of the whole of Viet Nam
4. Call for a cease - fire
5. Officially recognize the National Liberation Front as a negotiating party

At present, the Johnson Administration has publicly adopted points 1, 2, and 3; has shown a certain willingness to think about point 4, and has given vague indications of endorsing point 5 — though on this perhaps crucial issue the Administration has not made itself clear.

What altered between No. 27 and late December that made peace initiatives foolish for Thanksgiving, but sensible for Christmas? Nothing altered, except the judgments of American policy - makers. What can those people think now who were sure in November that the government knew what was best? It must be disturbing indeed to place one's faith in a Leader who changes his mind.

Yours,
John Heintz

Wider Doors Needed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The recent exam period, with the accompanying need for auspicious surroundings for study led me to the obvious edifice on campus: the library. My limited acquaintance with this imposing structure has been a favorable one with the exception of one minor point. Simply stated, the doors at the main entrance to this multi-million dollar structure are not wide enough to permit ease of entry and exit, especially if either door is swinging. Quite conceivably, serious injury could result if one were to be struck by one door while reaching for the other.

Rather than urge the correction of this hazard, I would urge that serious consideration be given to the relative ease of access to buildings constructed in the future: witness Dey Hall. Such a measure would require a small amount of foresight.

The Young Story

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Friends have called to my attention a news article you recently published, which implied that my sudden departure from WRAL was less than voluntary.

Reading between the lines, many Chapel Hill folks apparently got the impression that Jesse Helms and I had simultaneously reached for our pistols, with Jesse emerging as the fastest gun in Variety Vacationland.

Alas, the truth is so much more prosaic.

As many of you know, I have been privileged to run after the Kluxers these past months — an experience which is both educational and exhausting. Shorly after my "white ghetto" speech to the Carolina Forum, I landed in hospital with pneumonia, a bladder infection and other ailments too intimate to mention. My doctor advised a long rest.

When I communicated these sad tidings to WRAL, Jesse cried and Bill Armstrong fainted. The parting was entirely friendly, and if the DTH doesn't shut up I just may come back.

For the record: it is my opinion that WRAL is the indispensable pepper in an otherwise bland stew. With the possible exception of The Daily Tar Heel and the Duke Chronicle, WRAL remains as the only place in central Carolina where reporters push aside the mimeographed press release in favor of that marveiously ugly question: "Okay, what's the real story?

Sincerely,

Source Of Manpower

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

With the present war jitters about Viet Nam, both the "rip-'um up, tear'um uppers" and the "pull outers" have taken to the streets with their respective protests. Each side hopes that with all of the protesting some workable solution might be put forward. So far none has. It is probable that with the prevailing climate as it is, any constructive proposal presented might go completely unnoticed or be ignored.

Therefore, I would like to solve a related problem before it reaches the stage where any workable solution may be dismissed as another fool protest. That is, what about all of the college students that might be drafted to fill the ranks and perhaps get sent into combat zones. I have a vested interest in this matter, so I propose the following solution:

There are well - equipped, well - trained, eager, ready, willing, and able groups like the Minutemen, Counterinsurgency Council, California Rangers, Paul Revere Associated Yeomen, Inc., and the National States Rights Party. We can turn them loose on the dirty, atheistic Commies in Viet Nam, while we college students assume the responsibility of protecting the home front from the red termites gnawing from within How about it? Do we unite in this project? We have nothing to lose but out 2-S.

Bad Grammar In DTH

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The most shameful fact of collegiate education in the United States is that the product of the process, the glorious college graduate, and his progenitor, the student, cannot properly speak or write the English language. 'Tis sad, but true, and the University of North Carolina student is no exception.

As partial evidence for this assertion, permit me to reveal the results of a survey that I have made. The material surveyed was a group of writing samples of UNC students who should be among the better writers on campus. I refer, of course, to the staff of The Daily Tar Heel.

The study showed that in the editions of 4, 5, 7, and 8 January, there were 17 misspellings (exclusive of obvious typographical errors), 37 glaring punctuation mistakes, 13 incorrect word usages, and (alas!) 59 errors in sentence structure. This is a scandalous record.

Gentlemen, because of your youth and inexperience, you may be excused for banality, poor taste, and general silliness in your writing, but you may not be excused for ignorance of the rudiments of your own language. I implore you to improve, for to massacre the English language is to repudiate your heritage and to weaken your future. Besides, who likes to be outdone by any fourth grader at Carrboro Elementary School? So, please, for your own sake and for that of the nation, try to do better.

To aid you in this task, I refer you to several most helpful books: "Webster's New International Dictionary," Abbott's "How To Parse," and "First Lessons in Composition," by George Quackenbos. They are available in the library.

Sincerely,
Patrick Guiteras

Black Umbrellas Add To Rainy Gloom

By MARY JO HESTER
Special To The DTH

When the rains fall upon Carolina, nine times out of ten a black umbrella will go up!

In plaids, prints, stripes, and checks—in lavenders, fuchsias, and oranges—in tones to match any rain costume, umbrellas can be found . . . in the stores But on the Carolina campus the gloomy rain-filled day is not made any brighter by the endless procession of rain mourners, sheltered by their traditional black.

While more women than men have gaily decorated "rainsticks," women still prefer either black or navy blue, according to Mrs. Bobby Yeargan of Belks.

"The darker colors are standards," suggested Mrs. Yeargan, "because they go with more things."

Mrs. Johnnie Jones of Robbins related that most people buy umbreHas to match their rain garments. Men's umbrellas are made in London Fog blue and a subdued green, but Mrs. Jones stated that they do not sell well. Men insist on the established order and carry modest black umbrellas.

Why do men continue with black?

"Black is a more manly color," was the explanation offered by Mike Henry of The Hub.

Students offered these reasons why they selected black: "It's conservative." "It's the most common." "It was a gift." "It didn't make any difference to me what color I bought. One is just as good and will keep me just as dry as the next!"

An exception to the black trend has been initiated by the golf umbrellas and the "pseudo" golf umbrellas. The imitation is a copy of the regular golf rainstick with a crooked handle instead of the straight grip.

Henry of the Hub said he felt that fellows who carry the imitation umbrellas on the street are doing so as a status symbol.

In bright stripes of yellow and black, red and black, and Carolina blue and white, the golf umbrellas do not sell well in any of the Chapel Hill shops.

One student, when asked to describe the fellow who would carry a brightly-colored umbrellas, replied, "I expect that he would be somehwat liberal."

Leslie Farfour from Morganton is one of the nonconformists on campus. Farfour carries a Carolina blue and white pseudo-golf umbrella. He bought it because it is unique.

"You can tell it apart," Farfour said.

When asked if they would consider purchasing a vividly-colored umbrella if made available, each male student questioned answered negatively.

On the other hand, women are more likely to select gayer hues than men.

Mrs. Yeargan of Belks reported that many young girls buy colored umbrellas according to their moods. Generally, the younger girls perfer the brighter colors. Brown, beige, olive green, and red are all-time favorities.

Becky Black of Charlotte remarked that she had purchased a red umbrella, "because I wanted something bright and cheerful. It's gloomy enough on a rainy day."

However, another student related that she selected a black umbrella because the day is glum and she wishes to be glum also. "I go around saying, 'Bah, humbug,' " she said. "I think the world is ugly and I want to have an ugly umbrella to go with it!"

The black umbrella is preferred by many, both men and women, because it is so practical.

"A black umbrella will fit in just as nicely at a football game and at a funeral," one student pointed out.

Black was not always the preferred umbrella color. It is a recent color fad compared to the over 3000 year history of the umbrella.

An ancient Chinese legend attributes the invention of the umbrella to a Chinese woman who lived some 3000 years ago. The device was named the san kai and was used as a protection against the oriental sun.

Only those of royalty or high authority were permitted to use them. In China at this time a red umbrella was a sign of executive authority.

In all of the Eastern countries where umbrella use began, the umbrella was an emblem or rank. In Burma the white umbrella was reserved for kings and various shades were distributed according to rank

The ancient Romans developed the first usable umbrella for protection against rain. The rain shades were darker than the sun shades.

In the sixteenth century a Frenchman developed an umbrella for rain which could be folded and carried in the pocket. His invention, however, never came into general use.

Men in England, who dared to venture upon the streets, protected from the rain by a rainstick before the eighteenth century were jeered. Jonas Hanway is credited with being the first Englishman to regularly appear on London streets with his umbrella. Today no smart dresser would forget his umbrella!

Umbrellas were introduced in America in 1772 by a Baltimore shop owner. The umbrellas were distributed from Philadelphia, the early fashion capital, and later from New York.

By the late 1900's the umbrella had developed a lighter frame, finer textured fabric, and slowly in to the use of color.

It would be delightful if modern umbrellas had lost entirely their aspect of drabness and gloom

The grayness of a rainy day is only darkened by the funeral cortege of black umbrellas which fill the Carolina campus.

Thumping the colorless umbrellas, the rain keeps beat with the endless dirge.

RAIN IN CHAPEL HILL means an increase in umbrella sales for local merchants, but why are they always black? Rain is usually considered a depressing subject anyway; but when it follows two snow blizzards, as it did last night, it's almost a relief.

UNC To Add New Degree

Beginning this fall, the University of North Carolina will initiate a two-year professional graduate program leading to the Master of Public Administration degree.

The new program will be the first of its type to be offered in North Carolina.

It will be offered jointly by the department of political science and the Institute of Government.

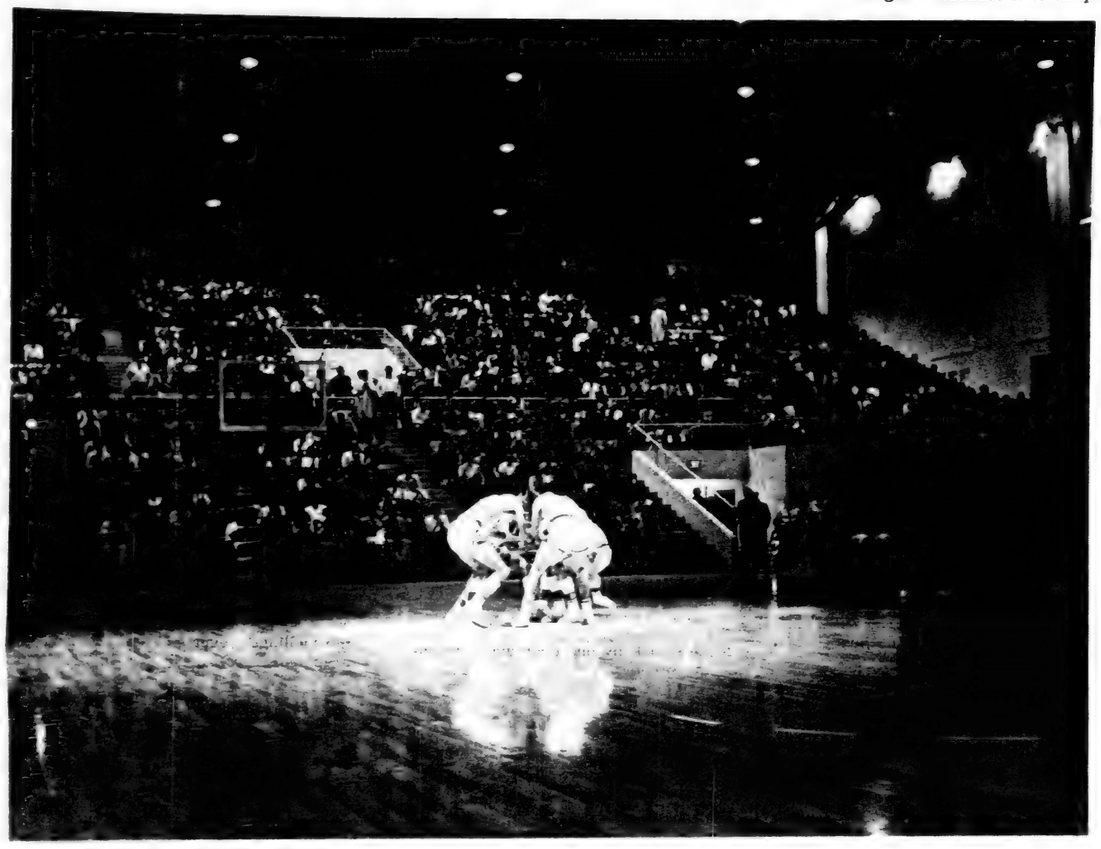
Dr. Robert T. Daland, professor of political science, will direct the Public Administration Program.

Students may apply at any time prior to July 1, but are urged to apply by Feb. 15. Application blanks and information may be obtained from the political science department or the UNC Graduate School.

The program will cover two academic years and the intervening summer. It will include 40 credit hours of academic work, plus an internship.

The internship, constituting a major part of the program, will last from eight to 12 months. Each student will be assigned to an agency appropriate to his interests and will receive a salary.

Required courses focus on the administrator in contemporary society, administrative theory, law and public policy, personnel administration, financial administration, administrative research and statistical analysis.



THE SPOTLIGHT is on the five Tar Heel starters as they gather together before the start of one of UNC's home basketball games. As the picture indicates, Carmichael Auditorium has usually been full for the contests. The Tar Heels face Wake Forest in their next home game on Thursday.

Highway Patrolmen 'Meet All Kinds' On The Job

Editor's Note—You're cruising along the highway, just a few miles per hour over the speed limit, when you suddenly notice a car approaching rapidly in the left lane; you start to slow down, but already you know it's too late as you hear the whine of the siren. Here a DTH staff writer examines the same scene from the other point of view — the highway patrolman's.

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Staff Writer

DURHAM — "Oh, God, oh God," the boy cried as a stream of tears ran down his face. "My father will kill me," he sobbed. "He'll just kill me." And then he buried his face in his hands.

The boy was sitting in the back seat of an unmarked Highway Patrol radar car; in the front seat Trooper D. P. Darden wrote out the citation: 62 miles per hour in a 45 zone.

Darden had followed the car for over a mile from where it had whizzed by his radar position. The boy had pulled over quickly at the sound of Darden's siren and the sight of flashing blue lights in his mirror; he hadn't even waited for the patrolman to get out of his car but had come back quickly toward the patrol car.

Even in the beam of the patrol car's headlights, it was possible to see that the boy was scared.

"Do you have your driver's license with you?" Darden asked. Then, as the boy handed the license to Darden, he added, "Come around to the other side and get in out of the weather."

It was quite cold at 11 o'clock that night.

"Do you know what the speed limit is on this road?" the patrolman asked the boy after both had gotten into the car.

"Forty-five or 50," the boy answered hesitantly.

"And do you know how fast you were going?" The boy only shook his head. Darden showed him the indicator of the radar unit which he had locked as the car passed him: 62 miles per hour.

Darden began to write out the court citation. "Have you had any trouble with your speed lately?" The boy started to answer then apparently changed his mind.

"Please sir, my father will kill me. Can't you give me another chance?" the boy pleaded.

The officer repeated his question.

"Accident . . . July . . . my sister was killed."

"What did they charge you with then?"

"Reckless driving," the boy said then blurted out, "Please give me another chance, please!"

"I'm sorry," the patrolman said, as he noted the speed on the citation, "that's just too fast."

And that was when the boy began to sob out loud.

"They're going to take my license . . . They'll take my license away." His face was hidden by his hands. His words sounded half-way between a statement and a question; they were interspersed by loud sobs.

"That's up to the court to decide," Darden explained and then asked the boy how old he was now.

"Seventeen."

After that the boy didn't say anything more. He remained quiet even after the patrolman handed him the citation and explained to him that he would have to appear in Recorder's Court in Durham the next week.

He folded the citation and slipped it into his wallet together with his license, then got out and walked back to his own car, his face still tear-stained.

The trooper watched the boy drive off, then turned around and headed back to where he had been waiting when the boy had sped by. "He's had a right rough life," Darden said after a thoughtful pause. "Only 17; already he's been involved in an accident that killed his sister, and now this.

"That's the thing about this job; you meet all kinds," he said and reached up to pull a package of cigarettes from behind the visor. He tapped one out, lit it, and then continued, "One cries, one cusses, and once in a while one doesn't say anything."

The 17-year-old boy wasn't the first speeder that night. And there had been the other kinds too: one who cursed, and a few that didn't say anything.

Darden's day had started at slightly before 4 p.m. when he had come into the patrol station to make out reports about an accident the previous night.

The corporal in charge of the Troop C District 2 Patrol Station introduced me to Darden at that time and arranged for me to meet Darden at the station at 7 p.m. Inquiries at Patrol headquarters in Raleigh had told me that on some occasions the Highway Patrol permitted reporters to accompany troopers at work, and I had already made the necessary arrangements with headquarters.

So, a few minutes before 7 o'clock, I waited for the patrolman at the station.

"Ready to ride?" the trooper asked and smiled. When I told him I was, he picked up his hat and led the way outside — not to the patrol cruiser I had expected but to what appeared to be an ordinary beige car.

But when I got into the car I noticed the radar unit, shaped much like an oversized coffee can with two pencil-like protrusions, mounted atop a column which was bolted to both the dashboard and floor of the car.

"I guess you use seatbelts in your car," Darden hinted. I admitted we didn't, but took the hint and buckled the seatbelt.

"They really become useful if you have to travel at high speeds," the patrolman commented offhandedly as he buckled his own seatbelt. A short time later I was to see what he meant by the remark.

As we headed out of Durham on Highway 70, I asked a few questions about Darden's work. As Darden explained that the Patrol had a number of different shifts to which troopers were assigned on a weekly basis. That week he was working from 4 p.m. to midnight with an hour off between 6 and 7 o'clock.

Before I had a chance to ask another question, the trooper slowed down for a turn-off, turned across the highway, and parked on a dirt road close to the highway facing the direction of the traffic.

The trooper called my attention to a dial calibrated in miles per hour mounted on the base of the radar unit. As each car would come by, the indicator moved to the speed of the car, remained there until the car had passed and then dropped back to zero.

Darden had turned the lights off and shifted the automatic transmission to park, but the motor continued to idle away smoothly. The entire night, the patrolman never switched the motor off.

As car after car whizzed by, Darden settled back and lit a cigarette. Occasionally a brief conversation on the Patrol radio interrupted the quiet of the evening. But most of the time the radio was quiet.

Traffic was sparse, and often it would be a few minutes between cars. Occasionally as a car would come by, the indicator would move slightly above the 60 mile per hour speed limit of the highway. "He's fudging a little," the trooper would comment in each case and chuckle slightly.

When the first speeder came by, I wasn't even watching the radar unit.

One moment Darden was asking me something about the Carolina campus, the next second, almost in one swift motion, he had turned on his headlights, put the car into gear, and was already pulling out onto the highway

I glanced down at the radar unit: Darden had locked the indicator on 79 miles per hour as the car had come past. Then I looked over at the speedometer. Here the needle was moving steadily upward: 60 . . . 70 . . . 80 . . . 90 . . . 100 . . . 110 . . .

The needle briefly touched 115 before Darden started to slow down. As Darden pulled up even with the rear bumper of the car, he flicked on the flashing blue lights mounted behind the front grill and briefly sounded his siren.

Though the driver of that car was the fastest speeder that night the driver of that car was probably the politest. After Darden handed him the citation, he replied very courteously "Thank you very much: it's good to know you fellows are on the job."

The college student who had been driving the car had at first claimed that his speedometer wasn't working but when Darden had shown him the indicator of the radar unit, he had readily admitted that he had been aware of the fact that he was speeding.

Afterwards the patrolman headed back to where he had been waiting, and the whole process began all over again.

There was another student, then the boy who drove a truck 68 in a 50 zone. He was the one who cursed. But the patrolman didn't seem to mind.

"He's not really mad at me," Darden said in a good natured tone; "He was just angry with him. If for losing his temper."

With his citation, each speeder received a few words of caution from Darden to "slack up a little," before he sent them on their way again

Then there was the cow that Darden and some farmers had to get off the highway.

And later . . . a small accident — with less than $20 in damage — that neither of the parties involved could agree on

After 10 p.m. Darden decided to move to one of the rural roads off Highway 70 and to check traffic there.

Occasionally Darden would take off his glasses and twirl them back and forth, as he waited, parked at the side of the road.

He said that he didn't really need them — the he could see almost as well without them — but that if he did not wear them, his eyes sometimes burned after a night's work.

"It's from looking into the glare of headlights all evening long," he explained as he lit another cigarette.

Next came the student who had broken down and wept . . . then a few minutes later the mill worker who complained the ticket would cost him more than he would earn that night.

A few minutes before midnight, and half a package of cigarettes after starting out from the station the officer decided to head back

For the highway patrolman it had been just another day's duty.

Opposition May Halt U.N. Action On Viet Nam War

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., (AP) — Mounting opposition led by the Soviet Union and France threatened today to doom efforts by the United States to give the U. N. Security Council a try at ending the war in Viet Nam.

The United States claimed it had enough support to win approval by a narrow margin for full - scale debate, but the opposition appeared to rule out any chance of pushing through a U. S. peace plan.

U. S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg pleaded with members of the 15 - nation council to help the world open a new avenue to peace.

He defended the resumption of U. S. bombing of North Viet Nam as the only course open to President Johnson because of refusal by Ho Chi Minh. the North Viet Nam leader, to respond to U. S. peace moves. He proposed that representatives of both Saigon and Hanoi be invited to take part in the council deliberations.

But Soviet Ambassador Nikolai T. Fedorenko accused the United States of staging a propaganda show in the council, and objected to any council consideration to the U. S. move.

In Hanoi the North Vietnamese government said it would regard as null and void any resolutions approved by the council. It declared that only the 1954 Geneva Conference provided a competent framework for the Viet Nam issue.

Fedorenko's opposition to putting the Viet Nam question on the council agenda got quick support from French Ambassador Roger Seydoux, who said that no progress could be made because neither Communist China, North Viet Nam nor South Viet Nam were U. N. members.

Symington Attacks Air Efforts In Viet Nam War

Stuart Symington, D-Mo., called today for "a real air effort to knock out important military targets" in North Viet Nam.

Symington, a member of the Armed Services committee who visited Viet Nam in December, said in a Senate speech:

"It would seem that we are attacking the least important targets most, the more important targets less and the most important military targets not at all."

The Missouri Senator spoke out after it became known that President Johnson has told administration officials he intends to keep a tight rein on any expansion of the war. Johnson is understood to have ruled out any bombing of Hanoi or Haiphong in the immediate future.

"I agree with some leading military authorities that a real air effort to knock out important military targets, instead of periodic attacks on targets of far less importance such as bridges, barracks and buses, would eliminate the necessity of sending hundreds of thousands of additional ground troops to South Viet Nam," Symington said.

Previously Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., had said the Foreign Relations Committee will not press inquiries into Johnson's Southeast Asia policies until the United Nations has debated the administration's new peace effort there.

Thunderchiefs Hit Viet Cong

SAIGON, VIET NAM (AP)— U. S. Air Force Thunderchiefs struck today at the port of Ben Thuy and other American planes hunted targets of opportunity on railroads and highways in the revived campaign to curb North Viet Nam's military movements.

In coastal plains south of the border, American and allied troops tightened the squeeze of Operation Masher. A spokesman said four days of heavy fighting yielded 488 communists killed and 420 men seized as prisoners or suspects.

Red survivors were reported ripping off their green uniforms and donning peasants' garb in an effort to escape.

David To Address Statistics Meet

Professor H. A. David of the Biostatistics Department will address the University Statistics Colloquium on "Tournaments and Paried Comparisons" Monday afternoon. His talk will be given in room 265, Phillips Hall, beginning at 4:30.

In paired - comparison experiments objects are presented in pairs for a judgment of preference. Mr. David will briefly review the analogy between paired comparisons and the familiar Round Robin tournaments, touch on points of contact with graph theory, and develop designs for the case when not all pairings can be made.

Buster Keaton Dies Of Lung Cancer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Buster Keaton, the poker - faced comic whose studies in exquisite frustration amused two generations of movie audiences, died of lung cancer today at the age of 70.

Keaton was a giant of the golden age of silent-screen comedy whose stars included Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Ben Turpin, Harry Langdon, Laurel and Hardy. All are dead or inactive as preformers. Keaton continued pursuing his comic trade until he fell ill three months ago.

The end came this morning at the suburban woodland hills home he had bought with returns from his film biography, which starred Donald O'Connor in 1956.

Hedda Hopper Dies Of Pneumonia

HOLLYWOOD, (AP) — Movie Columnist Hedda Hopper, who acted, tattled and madhatted her way to journalistic fame, died today. She was 75.

She succumbed at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, where she was taken after contracting a virus infection last Friday. She developed double pneumonia with heart complications.

Her son, Actor William Hopper, who plays Detective Paul Drake on the Perry Mason television show, announced the death.

She was born Elda Furry on a farm near Hollidaysburg, Pa., one of nine children of Quaker parents, and ran away at 18 to become an actress. She began as a columnist in 1936 and was still active until taken ill, despite poor health the past three years.

Miss Hopper was long one of the movie's long-reigning gossip queens. The other, Louella Parsons, is ailing in a Hollywood rest home.

The largest student enrollment in the state is at Chapel Hill. A total of 12,409 students are at UNC in Chapel Hill, in 1965-66.

'Live Inners' Are On The Outside

GREENVILLE, MISS., (AP) —A band of 60 Negroes and civil rights workers, fighting, cursing and biting, were dragged by Air Police from an abandoned building on the deactivated Greenville air force base today.

The squatters, who had invaded the base yesterday, were assembled in a parking lot and shortly afterward marched off the base between long lines of grim-appearing Air Police holding billy clubs.

A chill wind whipped the area as the squatters, who had demanded food, jobs and clothing, were paraded off the base.

The Air Police wearing fatigues, forcibly removed the squatters from the base's old Air Police Building after Maj. Gen. R. W. Puryear and James Turner, a Justice Department lawyer, pleaded with the Negroes to leave.

Neat Clockwork, Man

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The very first thing that must be understood is that it was, in the eyes of this onlooker, Carolina's worst game of the year. Dean Smith says that the 102 - 97 loss to West Virginia wins that dubious distinction, and you will say that it could not possibly have been any worse than the Maryland comedy. But I disagree.

Talking about the January 15 farce up in Charlottesville which began as a tight struggle, progressed through a series of Tar Heel spurts and lapses, and ended in the biggest steal since they bought Manhatten Island from the Indians for something less than 50 dollars.

Friends, we was rooked.

Besides the fact that this Virginia team had no business being within 20 points of UNC, reality always prevails, and in reality, it was a steal.

If you've ever seen a team throw a fake, commit a traveling violation, take four shots and connect after a blocked shot and a second shot and a pick-up and a lay-in—all the latter in one second—then maybe you can understand how Virginia "defeated" the Tar Heels by 70-69 in the first semester's last game.

But have you ever, really, seen all that happen in so little time?

They tell me that I have, but I don't believe them.

But then, they also told me when the "game" was over that our 11 p.m. flight back to the southern side of heaven had been cancelled and that we'd have to spend the night and make the trip via bus route. I didn't believe that, either.

But after trading a 50-minute Piedmont flight for a three-and-a-half hour Trailways bounce, and waking up in front of Winston with my right arm almost frozen numb from slumping against the window, I believed them. There was too much evidence in their favor to leave room for any doubt.

But I know for a fact that they lied to me on that first count. There is too much evidence to the contrary to keep me from scoffing at their inaccurate and hastily - drawn conclusion.

Their final judgment was inaccurate in that the "winning" basket was "scored" at least two seconds after the pre - determined regulation time limit of 40 minutes had expired.

That is, unless Virginia could have possibly taken the ball from the foul line to the basket by way of a blocked shot and a second shot and a pick-up and a lay-in all in one second.

And since, through physiological and sociological reasoning, I must classify UVA people as humans, I can only conclude that they did not do it — simply because it is humanly impossible.

I know that they didn't do it because I looked at the clock and saw one second left and then looked at the court and saw that blocked shot and that second shot and that pick-up and that lay-in and I know that it could not have been accomplished in less that three seconds.

And I'm not the only one who knows it. In fact, everybody who saw the "game," whether they will admit it or not, knows it.

Some admitted it, as this was heard in the hallway while I was fighting through the crowd to a phone: "Hell, I don't care if we didn't git it until a whole minute after after time ran out, as long as we got it."

Then a man burst into the office where I sat putting the call through to Chapel Hill. Grinning like a Cheshire cat, he addressed another man who seemed to be some sort of official: "Boy, that was a good one for Bill (Gibson, UVA coach) to win, wasn't it?"

"Yes sir," came the reply, "no matter how it happened!"

The ten ballplayers on the court did not know it, and it must be said that UVA's players cannot be held at fault because they were battling for their lives just as were the Tar Heels.

The two referees did not know it either, but timekeeping is not their job, and even though they missed a pretty obvious traveling violation, and a jump-ball call on the crucial shot which Bob Bennett blocked, they cannot be faulted.

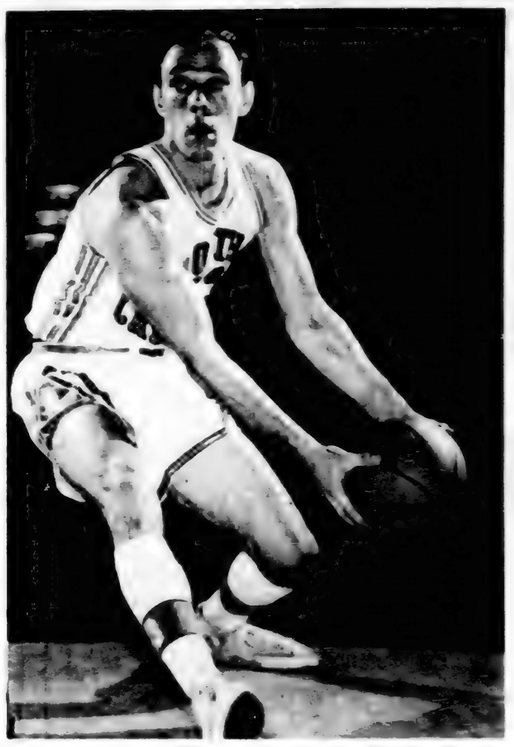
The burden of proof falls, then, on the timekeeper, and his neglect was probably accidental. But the fact is that he was responsible for flipping the switch which activates the automatic horn. This is supposed to be done very soon after the clock begins running in the second half.

But the timekeeper failed, the automatic horn failed, and although the Cavaliers actually failed, they triumphed as far as the record is concerned.

I will also remember the haggard and worn sigh of Larry Miller which depicted the effort he and his mates had put into this struggle in which finesse never came.

But when actuality comes down to finality and all the spurts and lapses and flashes of greatness and inepitude are thrown into the boiling pot, I'll remember that . . .

Friends, we were rooked.



Mike Smith will be the new face on the Tar Heel basketball scene when the Tar Heels play host to the Deamon Deacons in Carmichael Auditorium Thursday night. Mike (pictured above) is a six foot, 174-pound guard from North Salem, Ind. He served a hitch in the Marines before entering UNC last winter.

Backcourt Duo Spark Frosh Team

If you dislike dealing with superlatives, don't hang around when they art talking about Carolina's Tar Baby backcourt combo of Dick Grubar and Gerald Tuttle.

Because accolades of the highest order are just about all you will hear if you stay and listen to eye-witness comments on the flashy pair who have concentrated on passing off for assist after assist to make their

If you insist on monickers like unbeaten (8-0) team go. "Kangaroo Kid" and "L & M Twins", then you might call these two guys the "Assistance Kids." Because set-up passes to their teammates have gushed from both of them like water from a ruptured hydrant.

They exhibit as fine a defensive show as you'd want to see from first-year guards, stealing the ball almost at will it sometimes seems. And all the baskets for which they share responsibility don't reach the net by the indirect route of other people's hands.

They both shoot with accuracy—Grubar 56.6 per cent and Tuttle 48.6—and score consistently. Dick's high game was 24 at Clemson in the opener, but he had 15 (his per-game average is 15.3) at halftime against State when a knee injury forced him out.

Gerald's best night was at Virginia in the first semester's last game when he outran and outgunned every Cavalier who tried to guard him. He hit 10-of-14 floor shots and rifled in 26 points (11.1 average) to show that, just like his then-ailing counterpart, he can do it all on a given night.

Richard Arthur Grubar and Elvin Gerald Tuttle are thought of almost synonymously as their reputation grows at UNC, but you'll never mistake these two for twins.

"Dix" is six-three and weighs around 190 pounds, and has a light complexion which doesn't color even in the heat of battle. Gerald, on the other hand, is a ruddy lad who barely reaches six feet on his tiptoes. In the past four months he's boosted in "tonnage" to an all-time high of 171.

The majority of the population of the rural Kentucky town of London calls "Tut" its hero after having watched him lead Hazel Green High (28-3) to a third-place finish in last year's open state tourney. Gerald averaged 18 points last year, and Dick tallied 22 per game in each of his final two seasons while leading Bishop Gibbons High of his hometown Schenectady, N. Y. to two conference titles (17-6, 16-5) and a tournament crown.

Grubar was named to two prep all-America teams and rejected some 80 schools in making known his Carolina preference. Gerald, after making the statewide tournament first team and earning the official title of "Kentucky's Best Floor Leader," cast aside about 20 offers.

Grubar spoke in an on-the-level tone, "I don't think anyone can truthfully say that he'd rather have assists than points, but Gerald and I both take a lot of pride in passing off (for scores). But the rest of the guys play it that way, too."

"That's right," Tut followed up. "We know that if we're open (for a shot), the others will give it to us, too."

Dick then explained that the overall adeptness of the team has helped him and his backcourt partner in their sometimes amazing ball-hawking displays: "We aren't afraid to take the risk of maybe missing the steal and having our man get by for an easy shot. Rusty (Clark), Joe (Brown), Jim (Bostick) and Bill (Bunting) all play great defense behind us."

Tuttle pointed out, "I have all the confidence in the world in the rest of the fellas. So when I see an opening (for a steal), I just go for it."

Grubar "just goes for it" too, and much more often than not, they force their opponent into an abrupt and embarassing switch to defense.

Assistant Coach Charlie Shaffer spoke from experience in illustrating his guards' worth to their team.

"Any frontcourt would be glad to have these two guys at guard because they set up so many easy baskets. I played with Coach Brown (Larry, frosh head man) and he was that type player. He added several points to my avrage, so I know what it means."

Brown concedes that both boys have a bright future ahead of them in Carolina basketball, saying: "It's really great to have two guards like Gerald and Dickie coming up in our program. They are good all-round players and could be two of the best before they graduate. And there's something else, too. Dickie and Gerald are both just as fine young men as you'll ever meet. It's a real pleasure to know and be associated with them and their teammates."

The playmaking duo commenting on their style of play:

"Points are great, but scoring isn't everything. In high school, you could win with maybe one or two guys carrying the load. But up here it takes the whole team—every man. All the guys up here have been team men like I try to be myself. There's no one superstar on our team, but I think we're all pretty good ballplayers. It's just great to play with the guys we have here."

The solid bets for a possible superstar status are on the varsity now. But you'd best be believing that Gerald Tuttle and Dick Grubar will be a couple of the brightest twinklers in Carolina's star-studded galaxy of rising stars.

RCA
will interview for Graduate Training Programs
on
February 8

Candidates for BS, AB and Advanced Degrees are invited to consider this opportunity to join a world-famous electronics corporation.

Briefly, the three principal RCA programs are:

COMPUTER MARKETING
requires individuals with good academic standing and a degree in engineering, science, mathematics, liberal arts, or business administration, with an interest in computer systems and sales.

The program consists of five integrated phases incorporating both formal and on-the-job training.

ENGINEERING
for the engineer or physicist interested in research, development or design engineering.

There are three possible avenues for the individual chosen:

Design and Development Specialized Training
will help you decide in which directions your career aptitudes lie.

Direct Assignment
for the person who knows his chosen field of interest.

Graduate Study
offers selected candidates an opportunity to continue their studies, fee paid, for two days a week, and work at RCA three days.

FINANCIAL
for the graduate with an interest in financial management and the applications of the computer in the field of finance.

This is a complete indoctrination into RCA's approach to financial management and other management functions. You will be trained in depth to assume an important post in one of the many RCA businesses.

Students Get Scholarships

WINSTON-SALEM — Four Carolina students have been selected to receive Reynolds Scholarships for study at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

They are J. William Eakins of Ivanhoe, Wilson O. Elkins of Greensboro, John C. Morrison Jr. of Raleigh and P. Samuel Pegram Jr. of Greensboro. Eakins and Elkins are both juniors, and Morrison and Pegram are seniors.

They are among eight North Carolina college students who will be awarded medical scholarships by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation.

Each scholar will receive $14,000 during his four years of medical school. In addition, the foundation will supplement the intership salary of each recipient, during his fifth year of medical education, guaranteeing him an income of $5,000 for that year.

Selection of the scholars is made by the medical school's committee on admissions on the basis of character, scholarship, potential as a physician and financial need.

The formal presentation of the scholarships will be made May 13 at the annual awards banquet here.

During the nine years the scholarship program has been in effect, the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation has awarded more than $1,350,000 in scholarships to support medical education.

In order to be eligible for a Reynolds Scholarship, a student must be a native and-or a legal resident of North Carolina. The recipient is expected to follow his profession in North Carolina after the completion of his formal medical education.

Eakins, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Eakins of Ivanhoe, is a Dean's List student at UNC. He is a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta, honorary premedical fraternity, and is a participant in the UNC honors program.

Elkins is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Elkins of Greensboro. A Dean's List student and a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta, he is a recipient of the Aubrey Lee Brooks Scholarship, awarded by the Carolina Christian Fellowship.

Morrison, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Morrison of Raleigh. He was presented an award by the UNC Department of Germanic Languages for his

HUAC Contempt Citation Affects Local Klansman

Editor's note — Yesterday in Washington the House of Representatives cited seven men for contempt of Congress. One of them, Robert Hudgins of Raleigh, is the Imperial Kladd of the United Klans.

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

Robert Hudgins, a slightly corpulent man with dark hair and strangely fluid eyes, is seen regularly in Chapel Hill as he makes his way in a dark business suit and white sox through the Cameron St. fraternity district and down Franklin St.

He works as a salesman for Southern Foods of Greensboro, which supplies local institutions with frozen meats and vegetables.

If you were a brother in two predominately Jewish local fraternity houses, or if you worked in the kitchen of Harry's Restaurant, you might have seen him amble through the back door each week and start to jaw with the colored help before getting his order.

"He always seemed like a nice guy to me," the Jewish kitchen steward of the houses said.

He had told Hudgins he would no longer order from Southern Foods a few weeks ago.

"Look, here's how I figure it," the boy said. "This guy's part of a group that's out to get me personally, so why should I give him my business?"

Hudgin's boss in Greensboro is Harry Deyvault. The company is owned by Victor Nussbaum.

"Bob Hudgins is very well thought of my his business relations," Deyvault said.

"Mr. Nussbaum and I talked to him after the hearings last summer and we felt he had turned over a new leaf."

Deyvault stated he knew Hudgins had lost "two or three" customers because of the Klan investigation.

"I guess it will effect his salary," Deyvault said. "He works on commission."

In his Raleigh home, Hudgins relaxed by the telephone and spoke at length despite a sore throat.

"I am bitterly opposed to HUAC having anything to do with this investigation," Hudgins said. "I feel a man has a right to associate with people as he sees fit.

"Its a funny thing about those liberals in Chapel Hill," he said. "Most of them back my side of this issue."

When asked about his association with the Klan, Hudgins said, "I guess you are assuming everything you read in the paper to be true.

"The radio and the papers tried to condemn me because I own several guns and I have a short wave radio in my car," he said.

Hudgins said he had not had much trouble from his Negro and Jewish customers before the recent hearings.

"I have all the official literature put out by the United Klans," he said. "There is no strong anti-Semetic literature there." He accused George Lincoln Rockwell's American Nazi Party of attending Klan rallies and distributing strongly anti-Semitic literature without authorization.

Hudgins also commented on the anti - Semitic language used by some Klan speakers.

"When I listen to some of the speakers at rallies of the United Klans of America, I feel like I'm being drawn into a shell," he said.

"I feel so strongly for the speaker, but many a time I know he's not getting the point across."

Hudgins said that when Klan speakers attacked Jews, they were not talking about the boys in the fraternity houses in Chapel Hill or the Jewish merchants.

"What we're against is the Zionist movement," he said. "Here is the true anti-Semitic feeling in my mind."

He said he opposed the Jewish Zionist movement which "doesn't recognize my right to practice my religion.

"Some of my Jewish friends disappointed me on this thing," Hudgins said.

"If I ever hold any ill will against Jewish people," he said, "it'll be because of this."

Before he hung up, Hudgins expressed worry over what might be printed in the paper.

"I hate to cause so much trouble," he said after a moment of thought, "but these are bad times."

Sen. Morgan Will Speak On Campus

BY GLENN MAYS
DTH Staff Writer

Senator Robert Morgan of Harnett County has been invited to speak here later this month by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

According to Dr. Joseph Straley, president of the local organization, the date for Morgan's address is expected to be set sometime today.

"We want to explore the meaning of academic freedom to someone not directly associated with the academic process," Straley said in connection with the invitation of Morgan. "Its meaning is loosely discussed and poorly defined by some.

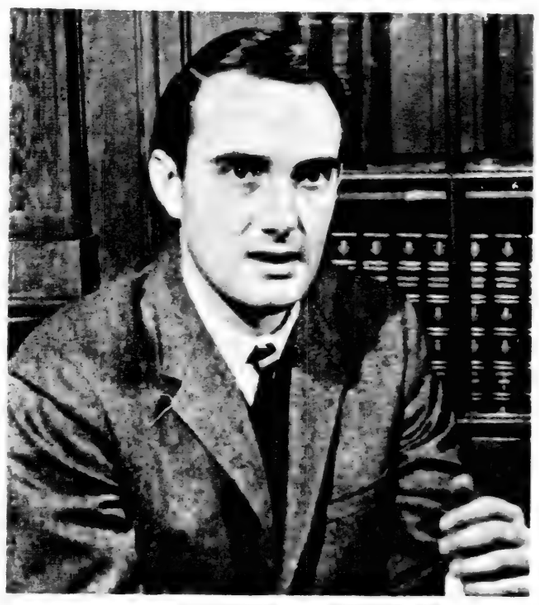
"We feel that Sen. Morgan is a person that we should hear from," Straley said. "We want to find out what 'academic freedom' means to people who have power in the state And we hope that his address will enable us to communicate with these people. "

Morgan is chairman of the board of trustees of East Carolina College. He vigorously oppose the amendment of the North Carolina Speaker Ban Law by the State Legislature.

He is the third speaker that the AAUP has sponsored on the campus this year. William P. Fidler, general secretary of the AAUP, and Victor Bryant, chairman of the visiting committee of the UNC board of trustees, also spoke.

Says Governor Is Ignorant

McCorkel Resigns Office Amidst Speaker Flare-Up



JAMES McCORKLE faces the press and cameras in a news conference in the GM lounge. McCorkle, President of Students for a Democratic Society, called the conference to present a rebuttal to statements made Tuesday by Gov. Dan K. Moore. — DTH Photo by Ernest Robl.

By ERNIE McCRARY
DTH Editor

UNC-SDS President Jim McCorkel resigned Wednesday amidst state-wide controversy created by his group's invitation to Communist Herbert Aptheker to speak hear March 9.

McCorkel, in a 12:30 p.m. press conference in Graham Memorial, said he was "shocked and dismayed" by Gov. Dan K. Moore's statement against allowing Aptheker to appear here.

"I consider it an attack on the University and I think Moore displayed a tremendous amount of ignorance," he said.

"The reason for my resignation is the fact that I am a student and desire to have the time to complete my Ph.D. dissertation," McCorkel said.

"I had no way of knowing what a controversy would be created by our invitation to Herbert Aptheker, and I did not imagine that the question of whether or not he could speak at all would be raised."

McCorkel said he had no intention of "challenging" the administration or board of trustees on the question of Atheker's right to speak.

"We were aware from the beginning that the speaker policy would have to be implemented. If that constitutes a test, it is an accurate statement to say we were testing the policy," he said.

Reed Reynolds, a member of the SDS executive committee, said last week that the speaker policy is "very vague."

"It could be as bad as the Speaker Ban or like no ban at all, depending on the administration the chance to show its colors," he said.

McCorkel denied that this and similar statements by other SDS member accurately represent the organization's intentions.

Gov. Dan K. Moore said, "It would be obvious to everyone that the invitation under consideration was made in an effort to create controversy for the sake of controversy and not for any legitimate educational purpose. For this reason I do not think the trustees should permit this request to be granted."

Aptheker said, "What is obvious to the governor is not obvious to everyone. I think the governor shows himself to be afraid of real education in the sense of challenge and stimulation. My intention in wanting to speak is educational."

He said he would probably speak off - campus here if students ask him to.

Aptheker said he "doubts" that his recent unauthorized trip to North Viet Nam will have any effect on the trustee's decision about allowing him to speak.

"It may be an added excuse, but it will not be the actual reason if they deny my invitation," he said.

—Ernie McCrary

Speaker Will Claim Rights

Herbert Aptheker, a Communist invited to speak on the UNC campus, hinted yesterday he might resort to legal action if the board of trustees refuses to let him appear here.

"I will do everything I can to enforce the Bill of Rights," he said yesterday in a telephone interview. "Whatever I can contribute to that goal in any way, I will."

He refused to say specifically, however, that he plans court action.

"Refusing me permission to speak is a violation of the Bill of Rights in general, but more significantly it violates the rights of the people of North Carolina — that is, the right to hear. They have as much right to hear me as I have to speak and a decision preventing my appearance would repudiate those rights," Aptheker said.

Used Texts Bring More At Book Ex Shetley Says

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

Tom Shetley of the Book Exchange, in reply to a DTH article on book prices, said yesterday that the prices he pays for used books are higher than other bookstores either in Chapel Hill or Durham.

Shetley said that he pays 50 per cent of list price for all textbooks still in use. This means that if a student were to pay $10 for a new textbook, he could then sell it for $5. The next student purchasing the same book would pay $7.50 and would be able to sell it for $5.

A DTH reporter made a random check of students selling second hand books at the book exchange and found that prices were not quite this good.

One student who purchased a used book for $3.51 got only $1.70 on the re-sale, or 7.5 per cent of list price.

The student would have gotten the same price had he sold his book at the Intimate Bookshop.

Shetley had two students working for him during semester break. They took books from the shelves at the Book Exchange and sold them to the Intimate and a store in Durham. He said that the results of their sale of 15 or 20 books yielded cash amounting to 36 per cent and 39 per cent of list price respectively.

Manager Wally Kuralt of the Intimate said that he paid the student one half of what the student paid for any textbook still in use.

Shetley also said that only the Book Exchange would buy textbooks which were not to be used in future semesters. It is their policy to pay only wholesale for these books. The manufacturer will give the same price for these books. He emphasized that these purchases are only a service to the students and are a break even situation for the Book Exchange.

According to Shetley, from time to time a student may not receive the full 50 per cent of list price on resales. He attributed this to the fact that many books are in poor shape when brought in, so the price must be somewhat less to cover costs of getting the book in shape for the next student. Language books are especially affected by this condition.

The controversy over book prices has been waging for some years now. A student government Cooperative Committee is active to get reforms in the present book store policies.

According to their report released January 7, "the student consensus . . . is that in some cases students are not paid enough for used books sold to the Book Exchange. Students feel that at the most, the mark-up on used books should only cover handling costs."

This report was presented to the Visiting Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees on January 7. The recommendation by the Cooperative Committee showed that 89 per cent of the students questioned supported the ideas of a student operated store.

A portion of the cash provided by operations in the Book Exchange goes to the Student Aid Fund. Transfers to this fund between 1963 and 1966 amounted to $430,000, of which $407,000 was appropriated for use.

The financial statements of the Book Exchange also indicate that in the period of 1957-1965 a net profit of $1,796,570.83 was shown on sales of $10,786,592.33.

Young Claims Discrimination

That man of many letters and more words, Pete Young, has written yet another letter.

The former WRAL news man and protector of the "White ghetto" wrote Nicky Nicholson, chairman of the Carolina Forum, complaining of discrimination.

Young claims the Carolina Forum offered $5 expense money to Durham attorney Floyd McKissick for his trip to Chapel Hill to participate in the KKK panel discussion with Young and Georgia Congressman Charles Weltner.

"I am informed that Mac gratefully declined the money, with the stipulation that it be donated by the Carolina 'Y' to the campaign fund of Mrs. Sarah Small," Young writes.

"I, too, gratefully decline the money—with the stipulation that it be donated to Raleigh attorney Lester V. Chalmers, who is being overworked and underpaid while engaged in the great task of defending the Constitutional rights of some very menaced citizens."

The ever inquiring Mr. Young adds a P.S. asking, "How much did Weltner get?"

Would You Believe . . .

Talk about good old American justice. We really do have the ultimate system. It is fair play right down the line. The rights of each man must be protected . . .

. . . A Wake Forest man scheduled to go on trial in Charlotte Tuesday on two counts of receiving stolen goods had his case postponed until later this month.

He is on jury duty in Wake County.

Friends, Critics And Ha, Ha

These brief items are sent to us by friends and critics.

According to Jim Smith, friend, Chinese fish food is Ho Chi Minnows.

Editor Ernie McCrary, critic, says the new acting chancellor got the job because he's such a good Sitterson.

And we say 1965 will be known as the year of incision.

Bears, Badgers And Groundhogs

Yesterday was Feb. 2. It passed by without significance to most people, but it was the groundhog's day of the year.

According to legend, the groundhog on Feb. 2. determines the weather for the coming six weeks.

If the groundhog comes out of his hole and sees his shadow, he goes back into his hole for six more weeks in expectation of more wintry weather.

However, if it is cloudy, and the groundhog does not see his shadow, then he concludes his winter hibernation and feels the onset of Spring is near.

In the United States the groundhog tradition is more popular than anywhere else in the world even though the legend is observed elsewhere.

Formerly, instead of the groundhog, the bear was the animal determining the coming of spring. In germany, the badger is regarded as the prognosticating animal.

Although cloudy skies prevailed over Chapel Hill yesterday the sun did shine through several times.

So if you are one to believe in the groundhog's day legend, beware of six more weeks of wintry weather.

SG To Face IFC On Frat Housing

Members of the Student Government executive will come before the Interfraternity Council within a few weeks to present proposals for University financed construction of fraternity houses.

If representatives of the 23 social fraternities on campus approve the idea, Student Government will begin an investigation of the matter and will initiate negotiations with the University Administration.

University-financed housing for fraternities currently exists at the University of Tennessee and N. C. State University at Raleigh, according to Student Government Presidential Assistant Bob Wilson.

Wilson said the proposals were formulated as a result of a survey he conducted among the IFC's of major universities across the nation.

Chess Buffs To Match Minds

The annual Georgia Open Chess Tournament will be held Feb. 12-13 in Macon, Georgia, according to Robert H. Williams, Georgia State Chess Association Secretary.

Vernon Relinson, a North Carolina student, won first prize in the tournament last year.

Registration for the match will begin Sat., Feb. 12 at 7:30 a.m. at the Dempsey Motor Hotel in Macon.

Chess buffs can obtain further information from Phillip M. Lamb, 779 Orange St., Macon, Georgia.

Aptheker Discussion

Representatives from Students for a Democratic Society will appear in Craige Residence Hall tonight to discuss the reasons Herbert Aptheker was invited to North Carolina.

SDS will defend its views in the downstairs study, according to Maverick President Otto Reich. The discussion will begin at 10:30 p.m. A question and answer period will follow a brief statement by SDS leaders.

Aptheker, a leading Communist theoretician, is scheduled to appear in Memorial Hall March 9.

Delegates To Meet

Delegates to this year's State Student Legislature will meet Thursday at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge II of Graham Memorial.

Attendance is required at the meeting, which will be devoted to working out last minute details for the SSL session in Raleigh later this month.

Firms To Recruit

The following companies will recruit on campus this week:

Today — Bureau of the Census; Cannon Mills; Citizens and Southern National Bank; Sonoco Products Company.

Friday — Carolina Telephone and Telegrpeh Company; Eli Lilly and Company; American Airlines, Inc; Deering Milliken Service Corp.

Students desiring interviews with the company representatives should go by 211 Gardner Hall to make an appointment.

Pollution Seminar

Edward L. Fincher, an aerobiologist and consultant at Memorial Hospital, and David A. Fraser, an industrial hygienist, will be the featured speakers today at a Durham seminar sponsored by the American Association for Contamination Control.

The sessions will start at 8:30 a.m. in the Jack Tar Hotel.

Ethridge Fellowships

The Southern Regional Education Board announced that fellowships to be awarded for the continuing education of southern journalists will be named for Mark F. Ethridge.

Ethridge, who conducts a seminar on newspaper management at the North Carolina School of Journalism, has spent 50 years as a newspaperman, most of them in the South.

The Ethridge Fellowships will be awarded to journalists in 15 southern states. They will finance periods of study at Duke, Emory, North Carolina, Vanderbilt, Virginia or Texas.

Book Award Nominee

Science and Ethical Values, a North Carolina Press book by Dr. Bentley Glass, has been named among the leading nominees for the annual $1,000 literary prizes of the National Book Awards.

Dr. Glass is a leading genetic expert. The essays in the book, presented as the McNair lectures at UNC, explore ethics involved in experimentation with human life in the laboratory.

Dr. Glass challenges the view that science has no ethical basis. He sees science as inescapably involved in social aims and questions of right and wrong.

UNC Defends Aptheker Talk

It was revealed yesterday that the Chapel Hill administration fought strongly last Friday to get the executive committee of the board of trustees to approve Herbert Aptheker's visit to campus.

Chancellor Paul F. Sharp outlined the proposed panel format for Aptheker's appearance. The arrangement was devised to insure that full and fair discussion could be maintained during the program.

Sharp justified his position to the trustees on three points:

1. Freedom of inquiry and expression must be maintained by a great university, even if an objectionable speaker is sometimes allowed to speak.

2. Internal harm would not be done to the university by Aptheker's appearance under the controlled conditions of the panel set-up. This represented the opinions of nearly all faculty members, administrators and students who were consulted.

3. Refusing to let Aptheker appear could place in serious doubt the University's commitment to "the freedom of intellectual inquiry," with a harmful reaction from students and faculty.

HUAC Should Seek Cure

The news came out of Washington yesterday that seven top leaders of the Ku Klux Klan had been cited for contempt of Congress after a series of votes by the full House of Representatives.

It is easy for the members of the public at large to shrug their shoulders at these events in Washington, because they are affecting only a small minority of the country's population.

When the House Un-American Activities Committee began its famous investigation of the Klan last summer, most people read the papers and said to themselves, "Well, thank God someone's doing something about the Klan."

They most likely didn't know any Klansmen and had never attended a Klan rally. Most people didn't question the manner in which the Klan was being "exposed."

If they had watched the cross burning last spring in a fieid near Durham, and if they had spoken to one of the many Klansmen who had gathered from around the state, they might have been surprised at the way they felt afterwards.

They might have been surprised to find themselves coming away from that scene burdened by a horrible depression, the kind of depression that comes from seeing pitiful human beings trying to exist in a world that was rapidly alienating itself from them.

They might have had an image seared into their memory of an entire class of white people whose only status in society was the "desirable" color of their skin.

They might have sensed the presence of men and women who had known years of economic blight, and who were seeking refuge from an increasingly hostile society in the resurrection of the past.

But the past is not being resurrected, nor does it offer solace from the problems of today.

What is even sadder is the fact that the general public does not care about what is happening, and that even the supposedly responsible leaders of this nation have not sought to correct this manifestation of injustice in a responsible manner.

Symbolizing this inexcusable irresponsibility is the manner in which the House Un-American Activities Committee has handled the Klan problem.

With the heavy hand of the butcher rather than the skillful art of the surgeon, HUAC has begun to chop its way through yet another segment of society. The tools of their trade are familiar to the public: the trial without jury or adequate legal defense; the monstrously undemocratic process of determining guilt by association.

What is even more incomprehensible about the entire situation is that the recent hearings and citations were being conducted and handed out with the blessings and support of the Democratic administration.

The time has come for a change in this method of "eliminating social ills."

The Congress of the United States and the administration must realize that they are dealing with a sickness of society. This sickness is definite not so dangerous that it warrants killing or quarantining the patient to keep the disease from spreading.

If they continue in their present program, the members of HUAC will slowly destroy the Klan by completely cutting it off from society.

But this course of action will not change the loyalties of the Klansmen. As their social and economic contacts with society are cut off, they will only become more embittered than before.

Hopefully the government will see the error of its ways and find a different method of alerting the public of social dangers.

In the meantime, federal officials might consider the possibility of channeling economic and educational aid to regional areas where Klan violence occurs periodically.

When such a course of action is taken, the government will finally be able to say that its working out a social cure for one of deprived America's most-publicized minority groups.

Letters To The Editor

Penalty Too Harsh

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

With an honor system such as this University's, where one is encouraged to "turn in" offenders, there are bound to be abuses; the student who choses to report another for an honor - code violation may not always be motivated by the highest of principles.

This same is true of those who mete out the sentences. Witness the Honor Council trial which took place just recently, where the sentence imposed was harsh to the point of causing one to question the integrity of the majority of those who sat on the Council.

In this case, we have a girl, already suffering a semesters campusment and probation which, parenthetically, was for a minor past offense in which the letter, not the spirit of the law, was violated. This means she must be in the dorm every night at 8, and in her room. One night, however, she is late; arriving at 8:15, she signs in for 8.

Some pious girls witness this grave crime and call the Attorney General, after failing to get much response from the Vice-President. There is a trial. The Vice-President sends in a plea for the defendent who she knows has faithfully complied with the campusment restrictions all semester, and whose sincerity and good character she is aware of.

But four girls go down and testify as to the converse. The verdict is reached — 48 hours to get off campus and suspension for the following semester. With only two weeks of classes before exams, this entails a loss of a whole semester's work! This, for carelessly walking in the dorm 15 minutes late one night? A sacrifice of one whole year for a measly 15 minutes? She will also lose her scholarship which enabled her to come here in the first place.

Many of us are greatly disturbed by the easy defeat of one, as a result of the petty righteousness of others. We feel that this case, and others like it, needs to be reviewed by a higher body and to be deplored at all University levels. One final note: As the offender left the courtroom one of her judges reportedly wished her a Merry Christmas.

Down With Smith

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Well, it looks like the Tar Heels are on the way to another mediocre season. Even if the recent Carolina-Virginia game had ended one second earlier, many things would remain the same. We were 10 points ahead with six minutes to play. Against State we were 14 points ahead at one time, a lead which was cut to three. Sooner or later, a team that gives away leads like this is bound to lose at least some games.

As soon as the Heels shoot any less than at a torrid 55 or 60 per cent clip, they're in trouble. Something is missing. It's certainly not the fault of Bob Lewis. His recent series of "sub-average" scoring has more than been offset by the assist column in the "stat" sheets. Larry Miller's powerful boardplay and scoring punch have not hurt the Heels a bit.

Surely no one can criticize the quarterbacking and fine shooting of John Yokely and Tom Gauntlett or the rebounding and hustle of Bob Bennett. Mirken, Moe Smithwick and Hassel have come off the bench like John Havlicek. Then what's missing? Why can't the Heels, year after year playing with among the best talent in the country, come up with a really great year?

Saying we need a coach for this reason is a generalization that's been repeated time and time again. But sound basketball dictates that there is a great deal of weakness in Mr. Smith's coaching. Sound basketball begins with fundamentals, an aspect of the game that is almost de-emphasized here. The number of errors and turnovers are obvious in the games but what's not so obvious is how lightly these mistakes are sloughed off in practice by the coach.

On the freshman team, Bill Bunting will tell you about being balled out for playing defense standing straight up. Or Jim Bostick for not faking before making a pass. Or Rusty Clark for not jumping. All this criticism and balling out comes out in practice. The freshman are undefeated . . .

Our whole starting five could start for the U. of Kentucky. Yet they are 12-0. The same holds true for South Carolina. But the Adolph Rupps, the Frank McGuires, the Vic Bubas, John Woodens, and the Dave Stracks seem to consistently make the best out of whatever material they have.

I think all this leads to the necessity for a new coach. I know that this is like "fighting city hall," but it's my two cents. Best bet? Larry Brown, inexperience and all.

The Capital—Alaska, D.C.?

WASHINGTON — "If this snowstorm keeps up," somebody suggested, "we'll lose the war in Viet Nam.

"Simply because no one in this city can get to work," he said.

And it was true — for 48 hours Washington might as well have been part of the Alaskan frontier.

Federal employees were given a snow holiday, and with good reason; many of them could barely get out their front doors, the snow was so heavy. There were drifts up to 15 feet on main highways.

"I can't see why the government does not spend more money on snowplows," said a foreign student. "It would cost less than letting the federal workers not come to work."

The student probably spoke with the wisdom of experience. He's from Quebec.

Radio stations read long lists of snow cancellations. In between, they sometimes played a little music.

"The cast outnumbered the audience at the Ice Capades," The Washington Evening Star reported Sunday, "but the show, in the classic tradition of the business, went on."

The weather bureau lacked the personnel to answer telephoned questions; too many meteorologists couldn't get to work—which led one Washingtonian to comment: "Maybe those fellows can control the weather after all.

"Maybe they put the whole thing on just to have a holiday."

And if the storm was indeed created by the weathermen, they did a pretty good job. Craig Breedlove, who holds the world's record of 608 miles an hour in a jet powered automobile, was stranded in a snow drift.

Don Maclean, a columnist for The Washington Daily News panicked less easily. Seeing he couldn't reach his job by automobile, he ordered liquor sent to his home from a local store.

He hopped aboard the delivery truck when it reached his house, and rode it to the middle of Washington — to the Daily News.

The problem of getting back was solved with equal cleverness.

Maclean ordered a chicken-box dinner to be delivered to his paper.

And then he merely stayed on the truck until it reached his neighborhood.

A housewife in nearby Virginia also adjusted to the emergency.

After Gov. Godwin declared a state of emergency and urged citizens not to use the phones except "for essential purposes," the woman said to a caller she didn't want to talk to: "We must get off the phones immediately. The Governor says the phones are for emergency use only."

After she hung up, the housewife dialed a friend whose conversation was more intersting. They chatted 45 minutes

Travelers at the Alexandria, Va., railroad station weren't faring so well. "It's taken 36 hours to make a 12-hour trip," said one disgrunted train rider.

University of Virginia students, anxious to return to their classes, piled into freezing, heaterless baggage cars after passenger coaches were entirely filled.

But the railroad people asked the students to get off — "because the baggage cars don't have any lights inside."

She's A Dog At Philosophy

I hunted up Alberta the St. Bernard the first thing aftr I got back from semester break. I found her in GM, her favorite daytime haunt. She was curled up on the carpet with about a half dozen books scattered around her.

"Hi, baby doll," I said. "Enjoy your vacation?"

"That's not the point," she reported. She rolled her eyes up toward me in a way that bespoke a feeling of infinite superiority.

"Huh" was the last thing I should have said. I should have known from her bloodshot eyes and the books lying around her that Alberta had been reading up on some subject that had caught her fancy and was itching to inflict me with her knowledge. I should have known better.

Alberta pushed her books aside and turned to face me. She lay on her stomach and rested her head on a piano bench. "You really don't understand, do you? Well, neither does the majority of mankind, I suppose. You can't comprehend that enjoying life is impossible. And if it were possible, it wouldn't be worth the cost."

I couldn't help being amused. "Cost?", I said.

"Yes," she sighed, "the cost would be infinite."

"Well, will you leave me to ponder that cryptic statement? I whose powers of insight are so meager? Speak on, O sage!"

Her conceit was marvelous. She didn't bat an eyelash. "The cost would be a loss of consciousness. It's so obvious—yet how many, oh how many, never see, never understand." She sighed again and lowered her eyes. She was undoubtedly grieving for the great, unwashed masses who never understand. "I take it this is the new Alberta", I said. "Alberta the Intellectual Ascetic."

"Existential ascetic", she mumbled absently. "There's a difference. Of course, we mustn't always remain ascetics. There is a time for thought and reflection, and there is also a time for action — for going out and building and working with our fellows. But it is the balanace between ascetic reflection and co-operative action that leads to a meaningful life and to an ideal society. We must work together, but we must never forget that 'I think, I will, I am.' Even should we maintain such a balance, however, we may still find life empty unless . . . "

She rattled on for a half hour, lumping together blazing phrases straight out of the books she'd been reading in a typical Albertese philosophical stew.

While Alberta revealed the Word of the New Enlightenment, I looked at the books she'd been reading. Sure enough — Soren Kierkegaard, Ayn Rand, Jean Paul Sartre—even Joseph Conrad. I think she threw some of him in too.

I finally fixed her good, though. She ran out of encapsulated wisdom and was just lying there looking supercilious. I stood up. "Alberta," I said, "you may be a purebred, registered, blue - blood St Bernard. But your ideas are so cross-bred that you cut yourself off every time you start to take a position.

"Alberta," I said, "you're an intellectual mutt."

Alberta's huge, drooping upper lip quivered. I made a beautiful withdrawal, keeping my eyes on her as I turned. I put my hands in my pockets and shuffled away as she groaned with rage.

NOBODY NEEDED ANY information about what was going on during last week's South Pole-type weather. Many students, however, probably needed information as to what they could do to avoid the pitfalls of frozen streets and sidewalks. Chains, anyone?

Flying Club Offers Chance To Forget Your Troubles

By MARILYN SPENCER
Special To The DTH

Worried about flunking exams, or being drafted, or are you just plain tired of studying? Forget your troubles, and get above them all. The sky's the limit — in the Aeronca of the Chapel Hill Flying club.

From the air, UNC, where most of your troubles probably started, resembles a toy village. For a short while your thoughts will focus on the horizon, the lofty clouds and the tiny world below.

The fifteen members of the Chapel Hill Flying Club find this sport enjoyable and relaxing. The club, which was first organized in 1961, has given new spirit by its adviser, Dr. Don Johnson, a member of the faculty of the School of Public Health.

Most of the members are student pilots. A few have already earned a private pilot's license. After eight to 10 hours of flying time, a student may solo if his instructor feels he is capable. A minimum of 40 hours of flying time is required before a student may take the private pilot exam.

The primary purpose of the flying club, according to Vice-President Grover Wrenn is "to provide a plane for the members." Cost of membership is $10 per month, plus a $40 initiation fee. This eliminates the cost of renting a plane for lessons and in the long run saves the student money.

An instructor's fee is $5 for each half hour. The club has one full time instructor, Woody Woodall. Dr. Johnson also instructs on a part time basis. The club hopes to be able to purchase a second plane this Spring.

Officers of the club are President, Carl Travis; Vice-President, Groper Wrenn; Secretary, Mrs. Jo Ann Johnson; and Treasurer, Chuck Rogers. Club meeting are held the second Monday of each month at 8 p.m. in the Woodhouse room of Graham Memorial. Interested students are urged to attend.

UNC Library Collection Gets 50,000th Pamphlet

Pamphlet No. 50,000 has recently been added to the UNC Library's North Carolina Room Pamphlet Collection. This particular booklet attests to the University's concern for the physical fitness of its students in 1900.

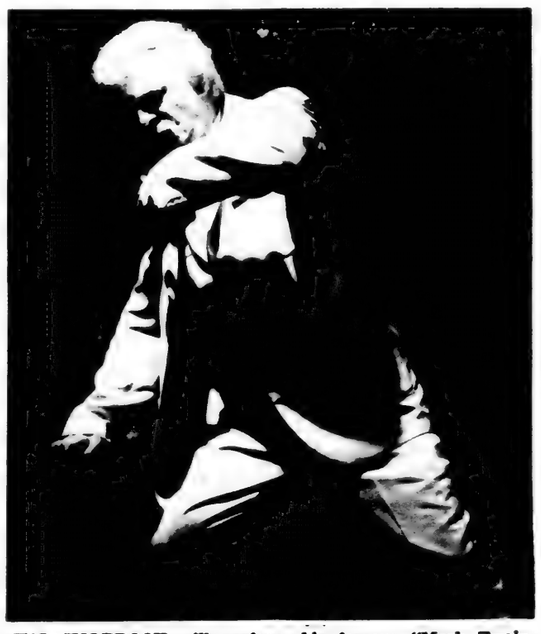
The pamphlet, donated by former Asheboro resident and 1904 alumnus Sidney S. Robins who now lives in Center Conway, N. H., was one evidently given to each freshman and is called "Prescription of Exercise." Not only giving suggested exercises, diets and the blunt "list of measurements," the booklet also provides "Directions for Using the Developing Appliances" and "General Rules for the Gymnasium."

With the donation of this 50,000th pamphlet, the N. C. Room claims one of the largest groupings of state booklets anywhere. Begun in 1909 with the donation of an address about a N. C. governor, the collection now includes items dating from the early 1700's to yesterday.

According to library officials, the pamphlets range in value from $2 to $40 and many are one of a kind.

Surprisingly, many people on and off campus make use of the variety of pamphlets offered, including the old telephone books, railroad reports, historical information, state documents and reports of state offices.

Winning the distinction of being the most popular pamphlet is a small number on capital punishment.



HAL HOLBROOK will perform his famous "Mark Twain Tonight" in Memorial Hall Wednesday night at 8. This will be Holbrook's second appearance on the UNC campus in the role of Mark Twain. He was here before in November, 1962. Tickets for this performance are now on sale at the GM Information Desk. Seats are reserved and cost $.50 for students, $1 for date or spouse.

John Lauritzen wanted further knowledge

He's finding it at Western Electric

When the University of Nevada awarded John Lauritzen his B.S.E.E. in 1961, it was only the first big step in the learning program he envisions for himself. This led him to Western Electric. For WE agrees that ever-increasing knowledge is essential to the development of its engineers—and is helping John in furthering his education.

John attended one of Western Electric's three Graduate Engineering Training Centers and graduated with honors. Now, through the Company paid Tuition Refund Plan, John is working toward his Master's in Industrial Management at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. He is currently a planning engineer developing test equipment for the Bell System's revolutionary electronic telephone switching system.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, both educationally and professionally, we should talk. Western Electric's vast communications job as manufacturing unit of the Bell System provides many opportunities for fast-moving careers for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, as well as for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. Get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

They said it couldn't be done. It couldn't.

We tried. Lord knows we tried. But no amount of pivoting or faking could squeeze the Philadelphia 76ers' Wilt Chamberlain into the front seat of a Volkswagen.

So if you're 7'1" tall like Wilt, our car is not for you.

But maybe you're a mere 6'7". In which case, you're small enough to appreciate what a big thing we've made of the VW.

There's more headroom than you'd expect. (Over 37½" from seat to roof.) And more legroom in front than you'd get in a limousine. Because the engine's tucked over the rear wheels where it's out of the way (and where it can give the most traction).

You can put 2 medium-sized suitcases up front (where the engine isn't), and 3 fair-sized kids in the back seat. And you can sleep an enormous infant in back of the back seat.

The gas tank.

But you can get about 29 miles per gallon out of it.

LBJ Wants $524 Million For Health And Education

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson, putting a wide range of old and new programs into a single package, asked Congress yesterday to set aside $524 million next year to fight ignorance, hunger and disease around the globe.

This price tag represents a 60 per cent increase over current annual spending of $331 million for similar international health and education programs.

Although much of the added money would finance expansion of existing programs, Johnson outlined some brand new ideas in a special message to Congress.

These include a proposed peace corps - in - reverse that would bring 5,000 foreigners to the United States to teach their leanguage and culture in the schools, and to work beside American volunteers in the antipoverty program.

Calling for "a worldwide effort to rid mankind of the slavery of ignorance and the scourge of disease," Johnson said:

"Ours is the great opportunity to challenge all nations, friend and foe alike, to join this battle."

Urging swift Congressional passage of new international education and health laws, Johnson said the national interest warrants it and "the work of peace demands it."

Some other new ideas in the Johnson program include:

—Use of government - owned foreign currencies now standing idle to finance binational educational foundations that would invest in basic educational projects in the developing countries.

—A variety of efforts to send more American health and education experts abroad, and to help train more foreigners in these specialites.

Johnson promised an expanded war on disease aimed at worldwide eradication of smallpox by 1975 and the elimination of malaria throughout the Western Hemisphere and in eight African and Asian nations within ten years.

The President also proposed that the 70 million foreign children now getting food - for - peace aid be increased to 150 million within five years.

And he promised a new birth control aid for countries asking such help in order to meet a population problem that "threatens the dignity of the individual and the sanctity of the family."

In education, Johnson recommended that 1,000 American schools form partnerships with institutions abroad. He said:

"Through such partnerships, already pioneered on a small scale, a U. S. school may assist the brick-and-mortar construction of a sister school in less developed nations. The exchange can grow to include books and equipment, teacher and student visits."

Most of the cost, he said, would be borne by the participating schools.

Officials said the exchange peace corps also would be financed largely by private funds.

Authorities expressed the view that most of the 46 countries where American Peace Corpsmen now serve will want to send their own volunteers to the United States.

Johnson directed the establishment of a center for educational cooperation within the department of health, education and welfare. The aim would be to set up a coordinating body and clearing house for education programs, including those under private sponsorship.

The President said he also wants to create a corps of education officers to serve with diplomatic missions abroad.

And in the field of health, he proposed an international career service corps within the public health service and grants and fellowships to train more experts in that field.

Operation Masher Routs Viet Cong

SAIGON, VIET NAM (AP) —U. S. B52 jets joined allied ground forces Wednesday in harassing Communist companies fleeing to the hills from Operation Masher, a coastal drive that has yielded 605 known Viet Cong dead.

The eight-engine giants from Guam churned up Red entrenchments on a mountain range overlooking the Gong Son battle zone, 300 miles northeast of Saigon while lighter planes carried on the revived air strikes against North Viet Nam.

Radar equipment quieted U. S. Air Force F105 Thunderchief fighter - bombers through foul weather for a strike with 750 - pound bombs at a storage depot five miles south of Vinh, 160 miles south of Hanoi. A spokesman announced port facilities of Ben Thuy, Vinh's outlet to the sea, were raided for the second day in a row.

Bridges, railroad tracks and truck convoys were among other targets of the day. Jets from U. S. 7th fleet carriers flew 20 combat missions. Clouds again delayed assessment of the damage.

Saigon briefing officers said nothing about any losses in the north since three planes were shot down in resumption of the raids Monday after a 37-day moratorium.

North Viet Nam declared its gunners felled two Tuesday.

Battle action below the border cost the U. S. Marines an F8 crusader jet. Apparently hit by Viet Cong fire, it crashed south of Quang Ngai on a bombing run in support of the leatherneck Operation Double Eagle.

A spokesman announced the pilot, Capt. Richard Harris of Detroit, ejected and escaped injury.

Thousands of Marines are involved in Operation Double Eagle, rooting out snipers in an area on the Northern flank of the U. S. Air Cavalrymen, South Korean Marines and Vietnamese troops allied in Operation Masher.

Fighting in the latter tapered off into an occasional firefight. In addition to the 695 counted enemy dead, a spokesman said 102 were captured and intelligence agents believed 75 per cent of 437 suspects also rounded up were Viet Cong.

A dispatch from Bong son said six or eight Viet Cong companies were believed to be seeking safety through a valley in the highlands to the northwest, holing up by day and moving by night.

The fleet of B52s, which can saturate terrain with hundreds of tons of explosives from a service ceiling of more than 60,000 feet, blasted at a mountain range eight miles northwest of Bong Son.

Dirksen Blocks Filibuster End

WASHINGTON (AP) —A move by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to reopen hearings at which members have criticized U. S. policy in Asia was blocked Wednesday by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen.

The Senator from Arkansas, J. W. Fulbright, arose, to say plaintively that his Foreign Relations Committee has a lot of Viet Nam business and wouldn't the Senate let it get about it?

An aisle away the Senator from Illinois, Dirksen, his feet planted solidly apart, shook his head determinedly. He said a firm no.

Everoybody was exceedingly polite to everybody else as Chairman Fulbright made a pitch to renew the hearings in which a member last week scorched Secretary of State Dean Rusk on Asian policies.

Dirksen, the Senate Republican leader from Illinois, objected because he had another fish to fry.

Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana has been calling Senate meetings two hours earlier than usual at 10 a.m., in a gentlemanly attempt to break a filibuster being managed by Dirksen.

Seeking to prevent the Senate from taking up a House-passed bill which would end state authority to ban union shop contracts, Dirksen retaliated by objecting to committee meetings. This forced Senators either to hold early morning or night meetings, a circumstance most of them find inconvenient, or not meet at all.

With Fulbright lounging against a desk nearby, Sen. Joseph S. Clark, D-Pa., jumped up to say that those who were blocking full exploration of foreign policy he and others want "are assuming a serious responsibility for the safety and future of this nation."

Dirksen said he was perfectly willing to clear the way for any action the Senate wants to take on Viet Nam issues. All Mansfield had to do, he said, was to withdraw the motion to take up the union shop bill.

"Is compulsory unionism more important than the lives of the young men who are slugging through the swamps of Viet Nam?" Dirksen asked.

Smiling a little, the Democratic leader replied that no Viet Nam legislation is ready for Senate action.

Fulbright wanted to know how it happened that the Senate Armed Services Committee was listening at the time to closed testimony from Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara.

Mansfield replied that McNamara officially was before a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee with which the Armed Services members were sitting. He recalled that the appropriations Committee had received unanimous consent last year to meet during the 89th Congress while the Senate was in session.

Clark said the appropriations group won't get that kind of consent next year unless the Foreign Relations Committee also is included.

Fulbright then came up with a motion to permit his committee to meet Friday, when he said it wants to hear Foreign Aid Director David E. Bell on the Viet Nam economic assistance request.

Sen. Russell B. Long of Louisiana, assistant Democratic leader, bounded down the aisle to denounce this as a "dilatory motion." He said opponents of the union shop bill could talk endlessly about the proposal.

Bowing to Fulbright, he said he knew the Arkansas Senator didn't mean to be dilatory, but that his motion was. Long asked an agreement for only five minutes of debate on the Fulbright proposal.

Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N. H., boomed an objection.

Shrugging his shoulders, Long moved to kill the Fulbright proposal by a tabling motion.

Aide Seeking Governorship

BOSTON (AP) — Former Presidential Aide Kenneth P. O'Donnell announced his candidacy today for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Massachusetts.

O'Donnell, who served as appointments secretary to President John F. Kennedy, opened his campaigning with a series a news conferences scheduled throughout the state today and Thursday.

Long identified as a political strategist for Kennedy and President Johnson, O'Donnell was making his first try to win elective office for himself.

Kosygin Calls For Nuclear Ban

MOSCOW (AP) — Premier Alexei N. Kosygin said in a message to the Geneva Disarmament Conference yesterday that the Soviet government insists on the need for immediate agreement on a treaty to halt the spread of nuclear weapons.

Kosygin's statement, distributed by Tass, said the Soviet Union "Is prepared to assume a commitment right away not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, provided other nuclear powers do the same."

It also said that "with the object of facilitating an understanding the Soviet government would accept a clause forbidding the use of nuclear weapons against parties to a treaty which do not have such weapons on their own territory."

Tass said Kosygin's message "sets out the proposals which the Soviet government submitted for the disarmament committee's consideration." The Premier declared that they can "furnish a foundation for a further advance along the road of disarmament."

Arguing for a nonproliferation treaty, Kosygin said "If a limit is not set on the spread of nuclear weapons in the world, the danger of an outbreak of nuclear war will increase many times over."

He said: "Plans for such proliferation exist, though they are camouflaged." He cited West Germany, which the Kremlin insists is trying to get nuclear weapons of its own.

Kosygin's long message repeated many Soviet positions on non-proliferation and disarmament, including demands for the abolition of foreign bases and removal of foreign troops from overseas areas, both aimed at the United States.

Kosygin's message contained only a brief reference to Viet Nam, saying "agression against Viet Nam is aggression against all countries and peoples who are upholding their freedom and independence."

The Western powers at Geneva have found the current Soviet attitude cause for guarded optimism. The Soviet delegation has not made a big issue of Viet Nam, which would hinder progress toward an agreement.

Kosygin in his message said the Soviet delegation in Geneva is "prepared to study without any prejudice and to take into consideration all proposals of any other delegation," but he added—"provided these proposals are indeed directed toward progress in the cause of disarmament."

N. Viet Nam General Says U. S. Will Lose

TOKYO (AP) — North Viet Nam's top military figure says Americans are "extremely obdurate" foes who learn from experience but predicted they will be defeated in Viet Nam.

Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, defense minister who defeated the French in 1954, says the U. S. design in Viet Nam is "very ambitous" but "besides their definite strong points in material strength" they have fundamental weaknesses.

Giap made his observations in the theoretical journal Hoc Tap and excerpts were broadcast Wednesday by Hanoi radio.

Giap wrote that among U. S. weaknesses was the fact that American troops had been sent "to invade our country," making it clear who was the enemy. A second factor he described as the growing strength of the Viet Cong.

"Third," he continued, "due to their above-mentioned loss of political and military initiative no matter how modern the equipment, the American expenditionary force cannot bring into full play its combativeness and cannot escape the inevitable defeat which is likely to befall any aggressive army facing a whole nation resolute to resist."

House Cites 7 Klansmen For Contempt Of Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted overwhelmingly today for contempt of Congress citations against the Imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America, Robert M. Shelton, and six of his grand dragons and other state leaders.

Most of what opposition there was came from liberals, who while expressing distaste for the Ku Klux Klan said they questioned the propreity of the process.

This is the same group which consistently votes against funds for the House Committee on Un-American Activities which brought the contempt citations of the Klan leaders before the House.

At today's hearing before the Committee, John E. Thornhill, 57, a farmer and oil man from McComb, Miss., testified he got out of the Klan after several Negro churches thought he was involved. Thornhill, who said he made millions of dollars leasing oil rights from Mississippians, told the committee he did not approve of bombings and burnings.

CONSERVATIVE OPPOSES

The House liberals were joined by a conservative Republican from Missouri, Rep. Thomas B. Curtis, who wanted the contempt citations referred to a special select committee to rule on the sufficiency of the evidence. His motion lost on a voice vote.

The citations now go to the justice department for presentation to a Federal Grand Jury.

Shelton and some of the grand dragons watched the debate from a visitors' gallery.

They were cited for refusing to turn over to the Committee Klan documents subpoenaed from them as Klan officials. They pleaded the first, fourth, fifth and 14th amendments in refusing to do so.

They were not held liable for refusing to answer the Committee's questions, since the committee regards the committee regards the fifth amendment ban on self - incrimination as proper grounds for declining to answer.

SHELTON DENOUNCES

After the House action Shelton said he would fight the citation in court.

He denounced the committee as "un-Christian and un-American itself," and said its staff's investigation of the Klan had been conducted in bars and night clubs.

Committee Chairman Edwin E. Willis, D-La., told the House the vote 'will not be a vote to support or oppose" the Committee, nor would it be a vote "to punish the highest official of an organization accused of acts of violence and intimidation."

The issue, Willis said, is the preservation of the legislative function of Congress, which includes the power to compel testimony and production of documents.

LIBERAL SPOKESMAN

Speaking for the liberals, Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., said the Committee's subpoena was broad enough to be construed as calling on the Klan to produce its membership lists. He said the supreme court has ruled, in a case involving the national association for the advancement of colored people, that this violates the first amendment protecting the right of free assembly.

"That the private organization involved here, the KKK, is unpopular, even hated by the great majority of people, is immaterial," Edwards said. "First amendment protections must be accorded to the ideas and organizations we hate, or sooner or later they will be denied to organizations and ideas we cherish."

Curtis said that since 1950, 129 contempt citations have come from the committee on un-American activities, and he said only 9 of these resulted in convictions.

The citation against Shelton consumed a full hour of debate and was approved by the House by a roll call vote of 344 to 28. The citations against the six other leaders followed by voice vote

U. S. Wins Victory In U.N. Debate

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., (AP) —The United States won its fight Wednesday for a full - scale debate in the U.N. Security Council on Viet Nam. But harsh words from the Soviet Union appeared to rule out chances for agreement on any peace plan carrying a U. N. label.

The vote of Jordan, coming after last minute instructions from Amman, gave U. S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg victory in his drive for the required nine affirmative toes for putting the question formally before the council.

The vote in the 15-member council was 9 to 2 with 4 abstentions. Immediately afterward the council adjourned for consultations on when to launch what is expected to be a lengthy, acrid debate.

No votes were cast by the Soviet Union and Bulgaria while France, Mali, Uganada and Nigeria abstained. The big power veto did not apply because the question was only a procedural one.

Supporting the United States were Argentina, Britain, China, Japan, Jordan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, and Uruguay.

The U. S. Victory was assured when Waleed M. Sadi, the Jordanian delegate, announced his country wanted a full examination of the issue by the council.

Sadi had kept the Council on edge while he awaited instructions from Amman on how to vote. At his request the Council decided late Tuesday to postpone a vote until the afternoon.

He expressed hope that a debate would be a preliminary step to a final course of action that could end the war in Viet Nam.

Job Causes Head Rash

LONDON (AP) — Sidney Thompson is short, bald, and a garbage collector.

This combination of circumstances led him to the high court Tuesday claiming damages from the town council in Dagenhma, an East London suburb.

He explained that being small, his head came only level with the back of the barbage truck. And being bald, he had no protection when garbage fell from the truck on to his head.

Thompson said the falling garbage caused a rash on his pate and he was no longer able to work. He said the council should have given him a cap.

Judge Joscelyn Phillimore dismissed the complaint, commenting: "not to mince words, much of the evidence was rub-

Squatters Protest

GREENVILLE, MISS. (AP) —Leaders of a group that staged a 30-hour occupation of federal property here accused the federal government today of kowtowing to Mississippi politicians over antipoverty programs for Negroes.

In Washington, the Office of Economic Opportunity issued a statement Tuesday night which said a team of specialists would confer with Misisssippi Gov. Paul Johnson to "assure rapid distribution of food under terms of the antipoverty grant." The department said a grant of $1.6 million had been approved with the Mississippi Welfare Department to develop a system of distribution for $24 million of surplus food.

Art Thomas, director of the Delta Ministry, said "the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Department of Agriculture have been kowtowing to Mississippi politicians who don't want poverty or relief programs in the hands of Negroes who can't be controlled by the white power structure."

The Delta Ministry is an arm of the National Council of Churches set up to work among Southern Negroes.

The month of February has been a particularly kind month to UNC basketball coach Dean Smith.

At least it was last season. The Tar Heels, led by Billy Cunningham, struck for seven straight victories to finish in a three-way tie for second place in the conference. The Wake Forest game tonight begins the "big push." Conference games follow with Maryland, South Carolina (2), N. C. State, Clemson, Virginia and Duke.

* * *

The 19-day exam lay-off should help the Tar Heels. "We needed the rest," said Smith. "After playing 15 games in such a short time, we needed a breather.

"We did scrimmage the freshmen team and we hope that will take off any rough edges we might have."

* * *

Coach Smith had high praise for Wake Forest's scoring duo of Bob Leonard and Paul Long.

"Leonard and Long are almost impossible to stop in a one-on-one situation," he said. "All you can do is either make sure they don't shoot or make them rush their shots. We were able to do both in the first game."

The Tar Heels took the first meeting between the two clubs 99-83 in Winston-Salem.

* * *

Former UNC basketball star Billy Cunningham—now with the Philadelphia '76ers of the NBA—was back in town Tuesday visiting Coach Smith.

Cunningham, who is averaging over 16 points per game, is having quite a rookie season.

"Billy's quickness and strength are making the difference," said Smith. "I'm confident he can do the job."

One big Cunningham improvement has been on defense.

"Coaches and players alike are talking about his defensive play," said Smith, "and that makes a former coach happy when they do that.

Cunningham and his Philadelphia teammates played the St. Louis Hawks in Greensboro last night.

The varsity-frosh basketball locker room in Woollen Gymnasium has quite a few additions.

"You've Gotta Have Heart"—in big blue letters is pinned to one wall. Other signs written on smaller cardboard signs read "to play better basketball—meet the pass that's coming to you or maybe it won't."

"When you don't have the ball—do something—don't just stand" is another. "Good players fit the team—glory seekers split it" reads another.

Intramurals Swing Back Into Action This Week

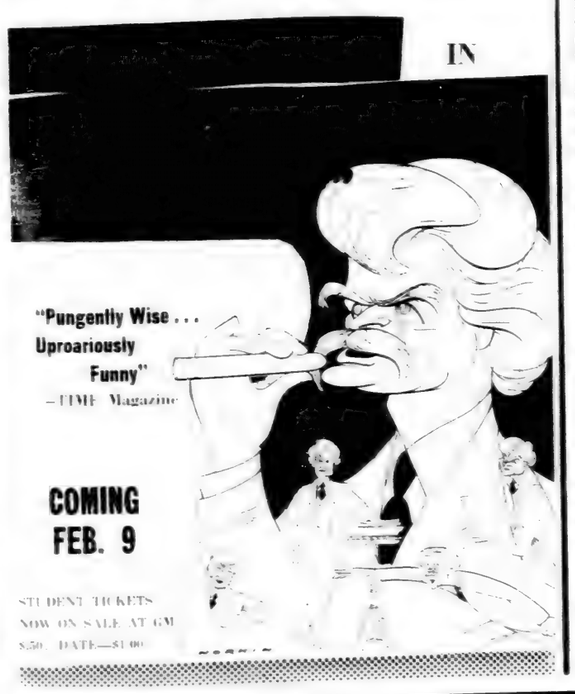
The intramural department swung back into action yesterday as basketball, volleyball and handball picked up where they left off at the end of the first semester.

Basketball is entering its third round of regular season play and handball is about halfway through its schedule. The volleyball season is nearly over and will be completed with the finals next week.

Eight different activities highlight the spring intramural schedule. Table tennis competition starts Monday, Feb. 21, with entries due on Feb. 16. Entries are also due on that day for all - campus soccer, a single - elimination affair with 9 - member teams starting Feb. 29. Badminton and softball begin in the middle of March.

April is marked by play in tennis, horseshoes, water polo and golf. Special events during the spring include the Grail - Mural Sports Jamboree, Big Four Sports Day (with State, Wake and Duke) and Greek Week Pledge Relays.

The intramural department has announced that a managers' meeting will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 8 at 7:30 in 304 Woollen.



ACC Standing Rumbles Now

Duke's Blue Devils stand tall and all alone at the top of the Atlantic Coast Conference standings, but there is sounding beneath them a rumble that will grow in intensity and importance as February wanes into the early-March ACC championship tourney.

Clemson began the rumble rumble by pounding three conference foes for wins in five nights, and North Carolina is in shape to do the same thing as the second semester of play gathers a full head of steam this weekend.

The Tigers vaulted into second place by lacing Maryland and Virginia at home lats weekend, and squeezing past Wake Forest Tuesday in Winston-Salem.

Carolina, currently tied for fourth with South Carolina, tacklestail - ender Wake tonight and USC Monday in Carmichael Auditorium affairs, and sandwiches in a trip to Maryland on Saturday. A sweep of this family series would assure the Tar Heels of at least a second place tie, depending upon the outcome of Saturday's Clemson - State scrap.

Frank McGuire's Gamecocks will play Jack Murdock's Deacons in the twin cities Saturday, magnifying the importance of its meeting with Carolina in Chapel Hill on Monday.

Clemson entertains Furman tonight in the only other action involving an ACC team, but three league games are scheduled for Saturday. Carolina goes to Maryland, Clemson plays at State, and South Carolina is at Wake Forest.

Duke is idle in conference competition until its February 10 encounter with State at Raleigh, but the Devils have an important intersectional fray with Southern Conference power West Virginia in Charleston on Monday.

STANDINGS

Top Scorers Meet In Tonight's Game

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The top four scorers in the Atlantic Coast Conference hit the Carmichael Auditorium court tonight as North Carolina's Tar Heels end their 19-day exam break against the Deacons of Wake Forst.

Tonight's encounter is the second meeting between the two clubs. The Tar Heels led all the way in defeating the Deacons 99-83 in Winston-Salem January 5.

UNC's Bobby Lewis leads the conference in scoring with a 28.8 average after 15 games. Wake Forest's Paul Long and Bob Leonard are second and third respectively. Long is averaging 24.3 points per game, second in conference while Leonard has hit for 22.7.

In the first meeting between these two clubs, Leonard led both squads in scoring with 36 points. Lewis scored 33 while Miller and Long had 25 and 23.

"The amazing role those four men play is their consistency," said Tar Heel coach Dan Smith. "Everyone knows they are the scorers, but seldom do they become harnessed. Long and Leonard (both guards) are a great backcourt combination. Of course, I still rate Miller and Lewis as good as any in the country."

But despite the offensive punch from Leonard and Long, the Deacons can claim only five victories in their 15 games. Part of their difficulty has been their inability to win away from home. The Deacons have won only one of nine games on the road — taking an 87-86 victory from er Davidson in the season opener.

The Deacon's ACC record is just as dismal with only a 99-87 victory over Virginia in six games — good for last place in the conference.

Wake Forest coach Jack Murdock has indicated that he may have something new for the second half of the season.

"Our primary aim," he said, "is to vacate the eighth position in the conference standings. No Wake Forest team has finished last since 1958 and we don't want to be in the cellar this time."

One reason for Murdock's optimism is the continued improvement of 6-5 forward Jim Boshart. He has tossed in 82 points in his last four games for a 20.5 average. Boschart has a 15.2 average for the season.

"If Boshart continues to improve we'll have a good one-two - three scoring punch," said Murdock. "We'll have to tighten our defenses and be a little tougher, but I think we'll surprise a few people down the stretch."

A second victory (82-81) over Davidson and a narrow 72-71 loss to Clemson Tuesday night supports Murdock's claim.

"When Wake Forest defeated Davidson last week for the second time, it gave them a fresh start," said Smith.

Celtic-Like Frosh Seek Title Tie Against Deaclets

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

The Boston Celtics are Larry Brown's kind of team.

That's not particularly astonishing, because the Boston Celtics are just about everybody's kind of team.

But last Sunday the Celts played eight men against Detroit and all eight scored in double figures and that's the way Larry Brown likes his basketball—strictly share-and-share-alike with everybody reaping the dividends.

The common name for this Brown-advocated type of play is teamwork, and basketball coaches will say that there are more intangible ways of measuring it than in statistical measures. But if scoring averages can be used (and they can in this case) as a realistic reflection of a team's togetherness, it is easy to see that Larry Brown has been an unusually happy man during the first half of his first season as a basketball coach.

His big, strong, fast and powerful Carolina frosh club has ripped through its first eight opponents with a spotless record, and in so doing has shown Brown his kind of basketball—five players are averaging in double figures, and a sixth is just 0.4 below.

Bill Bunting, the 6-8 picture-of-consistency forward, edged ahead of middleman Rusty Clark in the scoring race when he jammed the baskets at UVA's University Hall for 27 points in the team's last outing on January 15. Bill's total is 158 points for a 19.75 average, with Rusty just a shade back with 157 points and 19.63.

Dick Grubar, who injured his knee and missed a game-and-a-half just before semester break—and then slightly reinjured it in practice Tuesday—is third with 15.3.

Joe Brown, who leads the team in shooting with 40-of-60 for 66.7, is fourth with 11.9. Gerald Tuttle, after hitting a personal high of 26 against Virginia, checks in at 11.1.

And then there is Jim Bostick, the John Havlicek of the Tar Babies. Just like the Celtics' "sixth man," Jim has leaped from the bench to hypo the frosh attack on numerous occasions. He's averaged 9.6 points for the first eight games, hitting as high as 18 and producing 15 in a starting role at Virginia.

Billy Dodson, the football flanker and place-kicker, has been with the team for five games, and looks good enough to play regularly at most schools. He's averaging only 5.4, but showed what he is capable of up at Charlottesville by scoring 14 points in about 18 minutes.

Paul Camnitz, Don Rindfleisch, Kenny Royall, Bill Adams and Pete Davis (also a gridder) have also made commendable contributions to a top-rate all-round team.

All this "teamness" has made Larry Brown happy, to be sure, and there's another animal called "first place" of which he is extremely fond also. That is where he has his team in the Big Four standings, and a win tonight against Wake Forest's last-place Deaclets would clinch at least a tie for the season crown. If they win it outright, it will be UNC's third straight Big Four frosh title. Game time is 6 o'clock at Carmichael Auditorium.

At present, UNC's 4-0 mark tops the league, with Duke second at 3-2, State third with 2-2, and Wake winless at 0-3. The Babies have beaten Duke twice (89-69, 78-65), and have whipped State (103-83) and Wake (108-49). Counting the clash with WF tonight, UNC meets each Big Four foe once once. In all, eight games remain.

The Deaclets have been paced throughout the season by six foot guard Jerry Montgomery, who leads the Big Four with a 21.1 average. He was held to his lowest total, 13, in the twin cities meeting earlier with UNC.

Wake lost to Davidson (92-81) Tuesday, to extend their losing record to a paltry 1-6. But in the process, they might have uncovered a "sleeper" in 6-4 forward Jimmy Clack. A former football and basketball all-stater from Rocky Mount, Clack participated in his first frosh game Tuesday against Davidson, scoring 14 points and pulling down 12 rebounds. Jimmy was also the Deaclet frosh football center.

Jay Randall, who aided UNC's Paul Camnitz in leading Kinston to the state 3-A cage title last year, is the other double-figures scorer with a 12.3 mark.

UNC pits its 95.4 scoring average against Wake's 92.8 defensive yield, and shows a 66.0 point-letting average to WF's 71.8 offensive mean.

Coach Brown says, "The boys hadn't done anything since January 15 until we practiced Tuesday, and they aren't in top shape. Their feet hurt a little from lack of running, but their attitude is great and I think they'll be ready to play. Wake Forest is a Big Four game, and that alone should be enough incentive to get them ready."

There's something else, too. The scent of a title is in the air, and tonight could be the next-to-last step.

And as Rusty Clark said last fall, "My first goal is to play on an unbeaten freshman team."

It will take a win tonight to make both a possible reality.

Neither sleet nor snow stopped the UNC swimming team last Friday as Coach Pat Earey's lads trounced the University of Florida 54-40, but the going got a little rough on Saturday when Florida State stole the show with a 67-28 win over the Heels.

Coach Earey attributed the impressive win on Friday to a fine team effort and especially Phil Riker who has just recently joined the squad.

Riker won the 200 yard butterfly and help win the 200 yard free style relay which until last Friday the team had been unable to win.

"A boy of his caliber," Coach Earey said, "made a difference in spirit and his versatile effects helped us manipulate our lineup so that we could win this particular event."

Earey gave credit also to Pete Worthen who was clocked 21.6 in the 50 yard free style and Captain Freddy Lipp who did a fine job on the medley relay as well as the butterfly. The UNC coach was also pleased with Jay Scattergood in the sprints and Jim Bernuth in the 500 yard free style.

"In fact," Coach Earey said, "I am very optimistic in the ACC championship meet that Bernuth will give us much assistance.

On Saturday the tables were turned and a Florida State team of unlimited reserve strength invaded Bowman Gray pool with a big splash.

Florida State carried 28 men on the squad, a number not mormally seen in swimming circles.

"Our best people in the relay," Earey commented, "were not quite enough of what we needed. Both Lee Stratin and Phil Riker fell short in the time we anticipated.

"The Florida State squad was especially strong," Earey continued, "as it is year in and out, and this indicated we lacked the basic reserve strength of being a real power."

Carolina, now 8-3, could take second place in the ACC if they beat Maryland next week, but they must get by Virginia and N. C. State as well.

UNC visits Virginia this Friday, entertains N.C. State here next Wednesday and travels to Maryland next Firday to round out the regular season.

"Next week," Coach Earey concluded, "will definitely tell the story."

Tickets Still Left For Wake Game; Parking Lot Is Closed

One piece of bad news and two pieces of good news were issued by the ticket office in Carmichael Auditorium yesterday.

On the good side, there are still one thousand tickets remaining for tonights battle with Wake Forest. If you want to welcome the Tar Heels back to their home court and if you want to start the semester off right you still have time to get seats.

On the bad side, don't expect to park your car in the Carmichael parking lot tonight. It's going to be closed. You'll just have to hoof it.

GM Board Lists Activities

The Graham Memorial Activities Board is going to start off the new semester with a strong line-up of talent for February according to Board president Bill Campbell.

Entertainers include Hal Holbrook presenting "Mark Twain Tonight" on Feb. 9, the Ramsey Lewis Trio on Feb. 19, the New Orleans Symphony, on Feb. 25 and the Spanish guitarist Sabicas on the 27th.

"We feel this has ben one of our best years so far," Campbell says, "because of the addition of Carmichael Auditorium. This addition has allowed us to bring, in the past, such entertainers as Louis Armstrong and the Supremes, and in the future, such shows as Roger Miller and Johnny Mathis.

"These shows are outside our budget, but because of Carmichael's seating capacity they can be self-supporting. Thus, a whole new dimension has been added to our program."

Ticket sales for the February shows will begin on the Feb. 1; Ramsey Lewis Trio, Feb. 10; New Orleans Symphony, Feb. 17 and Sabicas the 21st. Student tickets are 50 cents, and date tickets, $1.00.

The New Orleans Symphony is presented in conjunction with the Chapel Hill Concert series. Student tickets will be sold for seats in the balcony.

In addition to the larger programs the Board will continue regular programming of such events as tournaments and free flicks.

A $58,000,000 building expansion program is under way at the University of North Carolina, to be completed by 1970.

VIGAH Asks For More Tutorial Expansion Funds

Student Government's VIGAH Committee has asked the Finance Committe of Student Legislature for funds to help the Chapel Hill Tutorial Project's reading program.

The tutorial project, run by VIGAH, the Chapel Hill Inter-Church Council, and the YM-YWCA, will use the funds to purchase programmed kits to improve the reading capacity of elementary and secondary school children in the Chapel Hill area.

The kits will enable the students to progress at their own rates of learning.

The bill in the Finance Committee would provide $985 for the re-suable kits. Pat Szittya, VIGAH Chairman, emphasized that many UNC tutors will be needed to help administer the reading program. A short training session will aid the tutors.

At present some 236 Chapel Hill children are being helped by 113 tutors, including many UNC students. The kits would expand the project to include about 100 more children, for which at least 100 tutors would be needed, according to Szittya.

The Chapel Hill Tutorial Project also operates study halls for high school students and tutors them in deficient subjects.

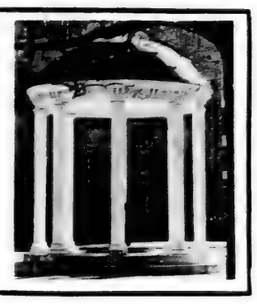
CAROLINA STYLE

with Ed Freakley



It's Called "Trivia"

Our gang from Carolina who took part in the Toronto Exchange and just returned from the cold North are all raving about a game called Trivia which they played on the long journey back to the Hill.

Here are some of their questions. The answers are at the end.

1. What is the name of the vehicle that was used on the Roy Rogers show?
2. What are two expressions made famous by two television Indians?
3. What is the name of the airplane used by Sky King?
4. What is the last line of Gone With The Wind?....
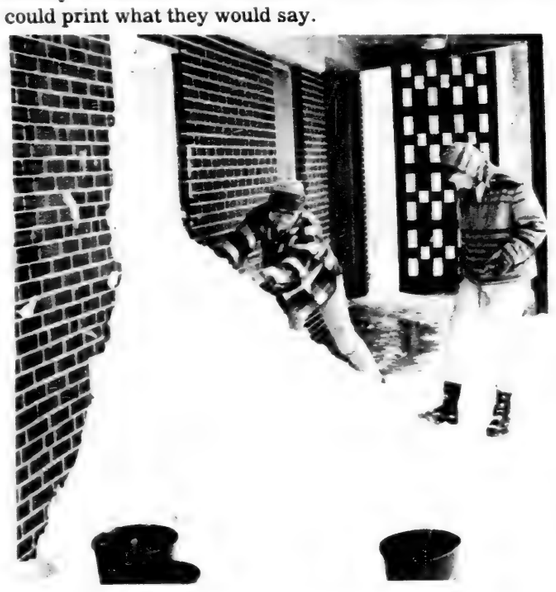
5. What is the name of the Hardy Boy's boat?
6. What is the name of Nancy Drew's car?
7. What is the name of the ranch foreman on "My Friend Flica?"
8. What is the name of Tonto's horse?
9. Who is the head football coach here at UNC?
10. What was the name of the girl operator on the "Richard Diamond" show who only showed her legs?

ANSWERS: 1. Nelly Belle; 2. Chief Thunder Thud of the Howdy Doody show said, "Cowabunga," and Tonto of the Lone Ranger show said, Kemo Sabe; 3. The Song Bird; 4. Tomorrow is another day; 5. The Sleuth; 6. The Red Roadster; 7. Gus; 8. Scout; 9. Whoop, Whoop, Whoopping Crane 10. Sam, who is really Mary Tyler Moore of the current Dick Van Dyke show.

A Real Snow Job

Are you rooms too drafty? These residents of Ehringhaus decided to do something about the situation. They admitted however, that they were trying out their improvement scheme on someone else's suite. The occupants of the rooms affected were not immediately available for comment. And I don't think we could print what they would say.



Old Miss Relents

The DTH business manager, Jack Harrington, revealed yesterday that even he has a sense of humor.

"Dashing Jack," leader of the Air Force ROTC unit, tells us that Old Miss granted their first atheletic scholarship to a Negro a few weeks ago.

He is supposed to be a first-rate javelin catcher.

Soviets Make Space History With Landing

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet space station made history's first soft landing on the moon yesterday. British scientists in England said the unmanned capsule, Luna 9, sent pictures back to earth from the moon's surface.

A Tass announcement said the landing was made at 9:45:30 p.m. Moscow time (1:45:30 p.m. EST) after the ship, launched Jan. 31, had hurtled through space for more than three days.

Sir Bernard Lovell, director of the Radiotelescopic Observatory at Jodrell Bank, England, said the feat "puts the Russians ahead in one phase of the space race."

The first American attempt at a soft landing, a key step in putting a man on the moon, is not expected before May.

A soft landing means bringing an instrument package down on the surface slowly enough so that there is no crash and resultant destruction.

Lovell said the information Luna 9 was radioing back to the Russians makes a manned landing on the moon a possibility within this decade.

From Washington, President Johnson sent a personal message to the Soviet Union on the achievement, saying "all mankind applauds" the landing.

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, chairman of the National Aeronautical and Space Council, said "particularly do I compliment the Soviet authorities and experts on their stamina and persistence in attaining this lunar goal."

Mavericks Hold Hike For Hearts

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

About 30 residents of Craige Residence College (Maverick House) will begin taking turns this afternoon at 2:30 in a relay hike from Burgaw, near Wilmington, to Chapel Hill.

The 140 - mile hike is being made in commemoration of the walk to Chapel Hill made by Hinton James in 1795. James arrived in Chapel Hill on Feb. 12, 1795 after a two - week walk to enroll as the University's first student making him the first State University student in the United States.

The Hinton James Hike for Hearts is being hld by Maverick House in connection with the February Heart Fund Drive. The walkers will relay a torch, symbol of the Heart Fund, during their journey to Chapel Hill.

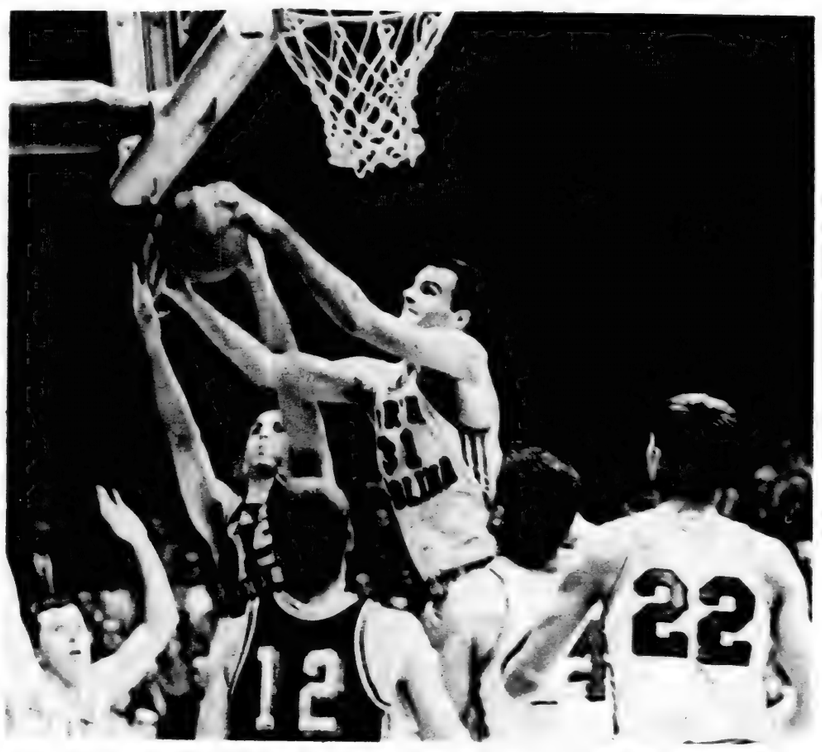
The Hike for Hearts will end about 4 p.m. Sunday and will be climaxed by the groundbreaking ceremony for the Hinton James Dormitory to be held this Sunday afternoon at 4:30.

University officials, North Carolina Heart Association officials, members of the Hinton James family and Maverick House students will participate in the ceremony.

Mrs. Everett (Ann James) Durham, granddaughter of Hinton James will also be present.

The ground-breaking ceremony will be held on the new dorm site on Manning Road across from Chase Cafeteria.

Lewis, Tar Heels Slap WF Deeper Down Cellar 115-87



By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels showed no ill effects from their 19-day exam break as they smothered the Deacons of Wake Forest 115-87 in Carmichael Auditorium last night.

Bobby Lewis, the Atlantic Coast Conference leading scorer, put on his finest offensive display in nine games as he pitched in 37 points to lead a Tar Heel club which completely baffled the Wake Forest defense.

Mark Mirken, who came on in the first half when center Bob Bennett was charged with his third foul, was next in scoring honors with 14 points.

The victory, which gave the Tar Heels a 4-3 ACC mark, moved UNC into a third-place tie in the conference standings with N.C. State. The loss, the Deacons sixth in seven ACC games, dropped Wake Forest deeper into the ACC cellar.

Bobby Lewis gave the Tar Heels their first lead of the game with 19:01 left in the first half as he took a feeder from John Yokley to put the Tar Heels ahead 4-2. They never trailed thereafter.

Then Mr. Lewis took charge of the offensive as he led UNC to a 24-12 advantage with 13:30 to go. Of the 24 points scored in that span, Lewis had 14.

With 10:25 to go, Gauntlett made the score 33-16 in favor of UNC. With five minutes remaining in the half, Lewis was back in the offensive picture scoring a jumper which gave the Tar Heels a 19 point lead, 45-26.

With 3:10 remaining, Mark Mirken made the score 52-30 in favor of UNC. Seconds later, John Yokley's jumper gave the Tar Heels their widest margin of the half—54-30.

The halftime score still showed that 24-point advantage 60-36.

Forward Jim Boshart led a brief Deacon rally in the second half. Three Boshart baskets and a jumper by Leonard cut the Tar Heel lead to 16 at 60-44 with 17:25 to play.

But the Tar Heels were not to be denied. A basket by Miller, a jumper by Lewis, and a three point play by Miller again gave the Tar Heels a 25-point advantage—75-50—with 13:20 left in the game.

The Deacons did manage another futile rally. With 8:30 left, a three-point play by Leonard cut the lead to 84-66.

But Bobby Lewis again took charge—scoring six points in 30 seconds to push the Tar Heels out front 92-68.

With 4:39 remaining, Miller stole a loose pass, dribbled the length of the court and dunked the ball to break the century mark—100-72 in favor of the Tar Heels.

A jumper by Bobby Lewis with 3:24 remaining gave the Tar Heels their biggest margin of the night—106-75.

In the final totals, the Tar Heels commanded a wide margin in field goal accuracy. The Tar Heels hit 48 of 75 attempts for a 64 per cent mark. The Deacons hit 36 of 78 for 46.2 per cent.

UNC made 15 of 29 charity tossess; the Deacons hit 19 of 24. The Tar Heels led in rebounding 46-43.

DTH Poll Favors Aptheker Speech

By ED FREAKLEY
DTH Staff Writer

A campus-wide poll conducted yesterday by the DTH found 187 of 231 students, or 80.9 per cent, were in favor of allowing Communist Herbert Aptheker to speak in Memorial Hall March 9.

Twenty-six students said they were against giving the Communist permission to speak and 19 other said they had no opinion.

Aptheker, director of the American Institute for Marxist Studies in New York City, has been invited to speak in Memorial Hall next month by the Students for Democratic Society.

Gov. Dan Moore has denounced the invitation as a deliberate attempt to create friction. The executive board of the board of trustees meets Monday to decide on the issue.

Jim McCorkel president of SDS said Wednesday that he plans to resign Monday. He said he needs more time to work on his Ph.D.

McCorkel said he was shocked and dismayed by Gov. Moore's opposition to Aptheker. "I consider it an attack on the University and I think Moore displayed a tremendous amount of ignorance," he said.

The General Assembly amended the Speaker Ban late last year returning jurisdiction over speakers to trustees of the University.

Aptheker, a leading Communist theoretician, had his passport revoked by the State Department yesterday for going to North Viet Nam last December on what was described as a fact-finding mission to see how a peace settlement might be achieved.

The State Department bans travel by American citizens to North Viet Nam and some other Communist area except where special permission is granted.

Here are some of the opinions of the students polled:

Katherine Stuart, New Orleans senior, "In the interests of academic freedom, the board of trustees should allow him to speak, as this would be a good opportunity to hear an opposing view."

Billy Beaver, Statesville freshman, "It would be only in the defense of democracy that we should allow him to speak. He should be permitted freedom of speech."

Steve Thomas, Sylva junior, "I don't think there's any excuse for not letting him speak on campus, but SDS is apparently trying to embarrass the State and the University."

Al Ellis, Raleigh junior, "A man has a right to say what he thinks."

Robert Macomson, Shelby junior, "I see nothing that a Communist speaker would have to offer me."

Susan Berson, Durham graduate student, "Any kind of authority that the state wields over a university is atrocious. No speaker should be disallowed no matter what his beliefs."

YAF Awaits Red Visitor

An officer of UNC Young Americans for Freedom said yesterday he is "looking forward" to the appearance of Herbert Aptheker, the Communist director of the American Institute of Marxist studies.

Paul King, who says his group has not yet taken an official stand on Aptehker's speaking at UNC, said, "I am interested in hearing an articulate Red for a change.

"And I'm interested in pointing out to students the great disparity between Communism in theory and Communism in practice.

"I'm quite confident conservatives here will have lots of questions to ask Dr. Aptheker," King continued.

"Most students," he said, "are intellectually able to realize that Communism has nothing to offer.

Book Exchange Must Compete

By STEVE LACKEY
DTH Staff Writer

Prices charged in all campus stores must be competitive with downtown prices, according to University Business Manager J. A. Branch.

This policy stems from a ruling by the Board of Trustees on May 26, 1952.

The ruling states: "The campus stores, vending machines, and other merchandising operations . . . shall be owned by and operated for Educational Trust Funds. Profits from all campus stores, vending machines, and merchandising activities . . . shall be devoted to grants - in - aid to students."

The Trustees decision was prompted by complaints from the merchants associations from Chapel Hill and Raleigh. They said they could not stay in business if they continued to sell at cut - rate prices.

At that time, they were selling times such as clothing and furniture at a low mark - up.

Since 1952 the Book Exchange has stopped selling many of these items and now carries only those supplies which are used for academic purposes.

Trustee Panel To Meet

Former governor Luther H. Hodges has announced that the Commission on the Study of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina will hold a public meeting on March 2.

The meeting will be held at 10 a.m. in the auditorium of the State Legislative Building in Raleigh.

Hodges is chairman of the commission.

The panel was established by the 1965 General Assembly to study and make recommendations to the 1967 legislature on the method of selection and terms of office of University trustees, the size of the board, and the relationship between the board of trustees and the General Assembly and other units of state government.

The purpose of the meeting is to hear ideas and suggestions of individuals or groups concerning the trustees.

Anyone desiring to appear before the committee should contact Naomi Morris, secretary of the commission, First Union National Bank Building, Wilson, or Luther Hodges, Research Triangle Foundation, P. O. Box 1488, Raleigh.

The University Party will meet Sunday evening at 7:30 in Howell Hall to fill three vacancies in the legislature.

Prospective candidates should contact Neil Thomas in writing at Student Government offices or at the Kappa Sigma house.

VIGAH Seeks Tutors

Student Government's VIGAH committee needs student tutors to help with the tutorial program.

Tutors do not need to have had previous experience since training will be provided by the project.

Tutors will be used on the elementary and high school level.

Griffith Gives $500

The North Carolina Glee Club has received a $500 check from entertainer Andy Griffith to help finance their European tour this summer.

Griffith was president of the Glee Club in 1946.

Donations and pledges have totaled $22,000 so far. Approximately $32,000 will be needed.

Persons wishing to contribute the to the Glee Club fund should send checks to the University. Donations are tax deductable.

Dean Of Women

Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, North Carolina Dean of Women, will visit women's residence halls and sororities during February and March to speak with graduating seniors.

While the schedule is tentative, Dean Carmichael is expected to visit the residence halls to meet briefly with the graduating seniors on the following nights at 11: Cobb, Thurs., Feb. 10, the School of Nursing Residence Hall, Mon. Feb. 14, Whitehead, Tues., Feb. 15 McIver, Wed., Feb. 16 Alderman, Thurs., Mar. 17, Spencer, Mon., March 21 Smith, Tues., Mar. 22 Winston, Tues., Mar. 23.

Since her visits to the residence halls will be late, girls are not expected to remain dressed.

The North Carolina Women's Council will assist the dean in the residence halls.

Lee To Speak

Philip R. Lee, assistant secretary for health and scientific affairs in the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare will speak at the second Population Seminar on Feb. 10 in Carrol Hall at 8 p.m.

Lee, an expert on family planning, will speak on "The Development of Federal Policies Related to Population Problems."

Battle Lines

The lines are forming for a repeat of the speaker ban battle, but this time the University is standing alone.

Our most important—if sometimes reluctant—ally very effectively killed any hope of cooperation when he said Tuesday, "I do not think the trustees should permit this request (the speaking invitation to Communist Herbert Aptheker) to be granted."

With this firm, no-doubt-about-it public statement, the chairman of the UNC board of trustees, Dan K. Moore, openly washed his hands of the problem, and the dirty water dripped on the University.

For almost four hours at that meeting of the executive committee of the board of trustees last Friday, the University administration argued in favor of letting Aptheker and First Amendment pleader Frank Wilkinson speak here. All branches of the Consolidated University supported that position.

Moore's reluctance prevented trustee approval at that meeting. Now his firm stand will probably stop it completely when the executive committee meets Monday to officially settle the question.

Moore settled it for all practical purposes when he lashed out with his angry and ill-considered statement that it "should be obvious to everyone that the invitation . . . was made in an effort to create controversy for the sake of controversy and not for any legitimate education purpose."

By taking this stand Moore has painted himself into a corner from which there is no easy retreat. The University is still sitting in the same corner it has occupied all during the speaker ban fight—the corner of academic freedom. It will not retreat. Students—more than 80 per cent of them according to a Daily Tar Heel poll—are in that same corner, and they will not retreat.

The trustees have not picked a corner yet, but they have little choice except to join Moore.

Refusal of allowing Aptheker's appearance can mean:

1. A law suit against the board of trustees.
2. Student and faculty protests.
3. Damaging publicity for the University and state.
4. Loss of academic status, which is as important to a university as a reputation is to a business.
5. Tighter restrictions, including prior censorship, of all speakers who are invited here.
6. Admission by the trustees that they intend to enforce a gag just as the General Assembly would have.

Allowing Aptheker's appearnace can mean:

1. State-wide wrath might fall on Moore and the trustees.
2. Students, faculty and administrators would be satisfied with preservation of the University's freedom.
3. Aptheker would speak, get ripped to verbal shreds by students, move on and be forgotten.

Moore apparently bases his opposition to Aptheker's appearance on the grounds that it would not be educational. He is hardly in a position to make a such prejudgment, because a fairly good argument can be made that a trip to the grocery store can be educational.

The trustees are in a "heads-you-win, tails-I-lose" position. If they let Aptheker speak, they will be hit by public opinion for "giving a Communist a platform on a tax-supported campus."

If they do not let him speak, they are repudiating their arguments against the speaker ban law and admitting they did not really mean what they said, after all.

Moore could make the decision easier by moderating his stand, even if it means swallowing some pride and suffering the consequences of shooting off his mouth when he did not have to.

Let's Keep Two-Year Term For House Of Representatives

If President Johnson has his way, members of the House of Representatives will begin serving four - year terms in 1972. The proposal to double the term for the lower house of Congress has drawn much comment, both favorable and unfavorable, since the President announced it in his State of the Union message last month.

LBJ's proposal, which would require a Constitutional amendment, would make the terms of representatives concurrent with that of the President. In order to still the cries of partisan politics, Johnson called for the new term to take effect with the 1972 election, when he will no longer be eligible to run, assuming he is re - elected in 1968.

The major argument in support of Johnson's proposal is that the representatives will be able to devote more time to their job and be better Congressmen without the ever-present problem of running for re - election. Currently much of the second year of a Congressman's term is spent campaigning. The second session of a Congress tends to be less productive than the first because the Congressmen are afraid to antagonize the voters in an election year.

Congressmen, naturally, support the President's plan. It means more job security and prestige for them. They will not, however, have an easy time securing the longer term.

A Constitutional amendment must have the approval of two-thirds of each house of Congress, and this amendment is sure to run into strong opposition in the Senate. Just as Congressmen have a personal interest in getting longer terms, the Senators have a personal interest in keeping the representatives' terms at two years. Many Senators fear that representatives in the middle of four - year terms will be eager to run for the Senate, since they have nothing to lose.

At first glance, this argument seems like nothing but selfishness on the part of the members of the Senate. But the Senators' point of view has merit, too. They want to avoid the trouble and danger of having to face the opposition of Congressmen, who may be running for the upper house on a "why not?" basis. And, after all, isn't the Senators' problem similar to the Congressmen's?

The only reason representatives are less efficient during election years is that they are campaigning, rather than tending to business. If they ignored the election until August or September, they could do a better job in Congress. They don't ignore the election because they like being in Congress. Senators like being there, too.

But there are more serious arguments against the four - year term than a plea for security for Senators. Changing the proposal in order to require representatives to resign before running for the Senate would appease many Senators, but it would not answer the real objections to the long terms.

The biggest argument against the Johnson proposal, and the one that outweighs all arguments in support of it, is that it makes more remote from the people the one branch of the federal government that has specifically designed to be directly — and frequently—responsible to the people. Such a step is especially dangerous and ill-advised now, when the federal government is becoming more powerful and reaching deeper into all phases of American life.

If Johnson's plan is adopted, Congress will come even more under the President's thumb that it is now. The ideal of a separation of powers will be seriously damaged. Many representatives are swept in on the coattails of a victorious president. These borderline Congressmen are unusually susceptible to presidential pressure, since they realize that they owe their job to the man in the White House.

A longer term would mean that these borderline men will be in for four years and will face re-election at the same time as the President. The strong possiblility of the development of a "President's party," which will merely parrot the President's views, is a good reason to defeat the four-year term.

There are still other reasons, however. The off - year Congressional elections are the only chance the people have to register their opinion of the way the President is handling his office. In 1966, for example, the conduct of the Vietnamese War is certain to be the key issue. If Johnson's plan were now in effect, the people would have no opportunity to voice an opinion on the war until 1968.

The four - year term could have a serious effect on our two - party system. The minority party traditionally gains seats in Congress during the off - year elections. Eliminate these elections, and the opportunity for the recovery of the minority party is eliminated. Moreover, the psychological boost that off - year success gives the minority party for the next presidential year would be gone. If a party suffered two defeats in a row comparable to the Republican disaster of 1964, it might well disintegrate, leaving us with one-party rule.

Ironically, this proposal, coming from the President who is now the darling of the liberals, would reverse the current trend and take the United States in the direction away from democratic government. There is something contradictory in striving to secure the vote for everyone, making sure all people cast votes of equal importance if the polls are only opened occasionally.

President Johnson's plan would make our government more efficient, but efficiency is not everything. Our system of government has areas of friction built in to reduce the efficiency. Because of these areas of friction, including biennial elections, the people are able to keep the government under control. If all the friction is removed, the machine of government will operate more smoothly and powerfully; but it may go out of control and roll over the rights and liberties of the people.

Letters To The Editor

Why National Pride?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

As a foreigner it has struck me that Americans — like people of many other nationalities — feel proud of their nationality. This is being taught in school, symbols like the flag and the national anthem frequently being used to support in establishing sentiments of pride. After such an incident of indoctrination at school one of my boys told me that to him it seemed as though his teacher was surprised because of his lack of pride in being a Swede. This has made me contemplate on the matter.

What does it mean to be proud of one's country? Does it mean that we love her? I guess so but is this all? Doesn't pride also imply that my country seems to be better than other countries? And if so, is this really true? If asked to list merits and demerits of my country, I can certainly if I stay objective enumerate about an equal number of the two, exactly as I can about myself.

And are not all men inheriting both assets and liabilities and is not the character of the country essentially the sum of all its inhabitants' properties, good and bad? And if this is so, by virtue of simple logic there seems to be no objective justification for the feeling of pride because of nationality on the part of the people of any country.

Given, then, that pride is a feeling that connotes some kind of superiority or perhaps even supremacy at the cost of objectivity, couldn't feelings of pride be the perfect breeding ground for nationalism or in extreme cases even chauvinism in times of crisis? And is this not to say that this same sentiment of pride would cloud sound, objective judgment when perhaps such judgment is critical, e.g. in situations of danger like the one now present as to the policies of Viet Nam?

Further, doesn't it follow that since the concept of the national soverign state is in the process of becoming partly outdated as the different parts of the world become closer and more dependent on each other feelings of patriotism are not conducive to the emerging new concept of the world as one entity, made up of more or less closely and related and interdependent parts?

If our sentiments are not to lag behind in the world of change it seems to me as though the time has come to substitute feelings of pride because of nationality for feelings of world solidarity and loyalty and for the kind of broad perspective of mind that will make an international outlook of questions in dispute come naturally

As in my belief this is a vital question for the world community, I hope that the readers concerned about politics or world affairs — in the interest of clarifiaction - will join in a discussion of the subject

Duke Has Liberals

Editor, the Daily Tar Heel:

Now I have heard it said that everyone at Duke is politically reactionary. I have heard it said that everyone here is fascist - minded. That is, as it happens, only a cruel joke. Baby, only most everyone here is fascist - minded.

This letter is to assure friends of the New Left at Carolina that not all of us are Black and Tans and true sons of the bourgeoisie. Indeed, there are those of us who are working for peace in Vietnam and a reunification of that country vis-a-vis the Geneva Accord; there are those of us who would welcome the demise of the professional soldier from the American political and economic scene.

In short, there are liberals at Duke who endorse and are working for most or all of the goals of such organizations as the S.P.U., the M2M and the Du Bois Clubs

Yours sincerely,
Larry L. Sluder

Haus Makes Changes

Fewer Gripes At Lenoir

By ANNE VICK
Special To The DTH

With most people, the weather is always a topic of conversation, but with university students, criticism directed towards university cafeterias is a favorite.

Strange sights and happenings are certainly not peculiar to Lenoir Hall. It is a meeting place for stray canines, peaceniks, chancellors and even those who want a reasonably good meal, providing there are no roaches in the spinach.

Recently, however, the bellow of disgruntled students has somewhat subsided. Instead there has been much talk about the "professor mugs," the "big box" in the east wing and the fact that complaints are not just heard, but, if justified, that something is usually done about them.

Improvement in any business concern is usually brought about by a change in personnel and management. According to George W. Prillaman, director of dining halls, the turnover of employees has decreased about 50 per cent and absenteeism and tardiness reduced considerably. Higher wages plus adequate fringe benefits have made possible the employment of more responsible people, accounting somewhat for the agreeable change.

Working conditions have improved considerably too. "The help usually works a 15-hour day even though they work only three meals, and consequently, they have about two and a half hours off in the afternoon," remarked Prillaman. "This time was usually wasted until recently simply because there are no recreational facilities for the employees." What has brought this change about?

Although the number of students working at Lenoir has decreased because the number of available loans and scholarships has been reduced, Prillaman indicated the quality of work was now excellent. Who is responsible for this change?

Those who frequent Lenoir, have noticed that a great number of professors now break for coffee in the main dining area, not in the Pine Room. Why?

One woman complained to the management about water spilled on her dress. "Apologies were made and since they couldn't have my dress cleaned, I was offered a free meal," she said. "I was amazed—in Lenoir of all places!" Why the concern?

Sandy Brown, an instructor in romance languages, stated that her students have marvelled at the friendliness of the person they presume to be the manager. She said, "I have yet to see him hesitate to help a person who is physically unable to carry his own tray."

In each case, the improvement as a result of these changes can be attributed to the manager, Loren Haus, a welcomed addition since August, 1964.

"Certain people don't care what happens to these people (Lenoir personnel), but I've found that with relaxation and recreation, they're better employees. Since most live in Apex and Creedmore, I installed a television for their off duty time," admitted the good-natured manager. He has also made it a policy to remember the help in some small way on their birthday.

"Certainly we have periodic meetings in which some personnel must be reminded not to chew gum while they are on the serving line or to wear hairnets, but seldom do I have to ask twice for additional help when the hall is crowded and tables have to be cleared. They respect me and I respect them," remarked the former Atlantic Coast Conference baseball umpire.

Why the "professor mugs"? Haus remarked, "I felt people like Chancellor House deserved a second cup of coffee without walking all over the hall to get it." Now there are 62 cups individually lettered by Sharon Harry, a friend of the manager, available for use.

Requests for cups have also been made by professors' wives and assistant professors, but were turned down because of lack of space. "Chancellor Sharp even requested to take his cup with him." Haus added.

The man responsible for these changes is a retired Army officer who has "been in food for years." He served as a baker and club manager while in the service before retiring at Ft. Bragg. While stationed there, he met a "certain young lady" from Durham, and decided to remain in North Carolina. That certain young lady became Mrs. Loren Haus on Labor Day weekend a year ago.

When first employed, this native of Philadelphia worked in the bakery. That lasted for 18 days. He became assistant manager of Ehringhaus and eight months later was manager of Lenoir Hall. According to Haus his job is an interesting one.

"There's always a challenge. Last September when classes first began, the service belt that carries dishes to the basement broke and the maintenance man was in the hospital. I knew John Horner, head dishwasher, had some mechanical ability. Things were back in order shortly and now when we have trouble, we turn to John. It pays to know your employees," he declared.

"There are a lot of improvements I'd like to make, but we will need to expand this facility by 1970 to accommodate a 20,000 enrollment and renovation funds at present are not available," commented Haus.

If these changes are made, students can look forwards to sanitary butter and salad dressing dispensers. Automatic dispensers for meat sauces would be more centrally located than they are now.

Although the funds necessary to finance these improvements may not be available in the near future, it is reassuring to know that the manager of Lenoir Hall is endeavoring to meet the students' needs.

COFFEE ANYONE?—Loren Haus, new manager of Lenoir Hall, holds up some of the special coffee mugs he has had made for UNC professors. The professors' mugs are one of the innovations Haus has made to improve the atmosphere and service in the dining room. Complaints about Lenoir are not so frequent now.—DTH Photo by Ernest Robl.

State Condemns Wanted Grounds

Governor Dan Moore and the Council of State authorized condemnation Wednesday of three adjoining lots in the area of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro to provide access to a projected dormitory.

The lots are at 134, 136 and 206 McIver Street near Carr Street.

The governor's office said negotiations with the owner, J. M. Murphy, for purchase of the property had failed.

Construction on the new dormitory is expected to begin this spring.

The governor and council also approved the lease of a dormitory at Wesley Long Hospital in Greensboro to be used as housing for 106 students attending UNCG.

Institute On Criminal Law Opens Today On Campus

Distinguished attorneys from Yale University, Washington, D. C., and North Carolina open a two-day Institute on Criminal Law and Procedure here today.

Robert G. Sanders of Charlotte will open the first session this morning with a discussion of the lawyer's role as it relates to the rights of an accused in the area of arrest, investigation and police encounter which he says "is but a study of the ever increasing span of influence of the United States Supreme Court in these areas."

The Institute will conclude on Saturday with a two-hour session on the mechanics of scientific evidence. Moderator will be Sam Dash, director of the Institute of Criminal Law and Procedure, Georgetown Law Center, Washington, D. C.

To be conducted at the Institute of Government on the UNC campus, the program is being sponsored by the N. C. Bar Association Foundation, and the law schools of the University of North Carolina, Wake Forest College and Duke University.

Other speakers at the Institute will be James C. Harper, Chapel Hill; James W. Mason, Laurinburg; Kenneth L. Penegar, UNC law school; Michael P. Katz, UNC law school; Dr. Jay Katz, Yale University; Grady B. Scott, Gastonia; William T. Hatch, Raleigh; William L. Spitler, Raleigh; John L. Boyd, James R. Durham and Glen A. Glesne, SBI, Raleigh.

Sanders for the past 17 years has been practicing law in Charlotte and presently is a partner in the firm of Sanders and Walker. He is a former assistant superior court solicitor and is a member of the N. C. State Bar Council.

U.N. To Reopen Hearings On U.S. Role In Viet Nam

WASHINGTON, (AP) — America's role in the Vietnamese war is due for a further airing before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The Committee decided Thursday to resume public hearings on the issue starting at 8:30 a.m. EST today.

Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., who opposed the resumption of bombing in North Viet Nam, told reporters that witnesses both in and out of government will be invited to testify and the hearings will continue "as long as they are fruitful."

Fulbright said he sees no conflict with the United Nations' decision to hold a Security Council debate on Viet Nam. No date has been set for the start of the U. N. discussion, which was requested by the United States

The Senate Committee, barred from conducting hearings while the Senate is in session, decided to meet before and after Senate hours. It schedules its second hearing for 6:30 p.m. Monday, on the theory the Senate will have quit for the day.

Fulbright said that "if it works out" nightly hearings will be held while the Senate is disposing of its current fight over union shop legislation.

There are no immediate plans to call Secretary of State Dean Rusk back to the stand, but Fulbright said he would be "very surprised if the committee feels it is through questioning the secretary of state."

"It depends on the committee," he said, "but at the moment I have no burning questions to ask him."

Rusk was questioned for more than four hours last Friday by committee critics of U.S. policy in Southeast Asia.

Tomorrow's witness will be Foreign Aid Administrator David E. Bell. He will be questioned about President Johnson's request for $415 million in the supplemental foreign aid funds, largely for Viet Nam, which is the formal business before the committee.

Witnesses for the Monday night session are to be announced later, Fulbright said the Committee intends to call on those whose background and views have a bearing "on our policy in Southeast Asia."

"Witnesses will testify by invitation only," he said. "We are not trying to put on a circus."

Some members including Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., want to call retired Gens. Matthew Ridgway, former Army Chief of Staff, and James M. Gavin, who have been critical of some phases of U. S. military operations in Asia.

"And I think we should call in generals like Curtis Lemay and Maxwell D. Taylor, who are on the side of the bombing resumption, McCarthy said.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., noted that Johnson asked Congress for authority to act in Viet Nam when he sought passage of the Gulf of Tonkin resolution in 1964. This is the resolution Johnson has cited as a basis for his present actions.

But Javits told the Senate "there is a new ball game" now and the President should come back to Congress so that his authority cannot be challenged.

The New Yorker, who supports Johnson's Viet Nam actions, said there is "a gathering storm over the feeling of the President that Congress should not have the opportunity to debate the issue."

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, the ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee, said the authority Johnson asked to spend more money this year for the Viet Nam war will reach the floor in two or three weeks.

That, he said, should give the opportunity for a full debate on the issue.

But Javits disagreed, saying the issue of additional funds for the war becomes the issue "of supporting the men in the field." No one, he added, wants to challenge that support.

The Governor's Commission on the Speaker Ban, after conducting extensive hearings, had this to say in giving the University of North Carolina a clean bill of health: "The evidence before us rails to justify charges of irresponsible radicalism at Chapel Hill. . . UNC is a great institution that has served the state well."

North Carolina News Roundup

Grand Dragon Will Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — "We're going to fight 'em every step of the way," a North Carolina klansman said Thursday of his contempt of congress citation.

J. Robert Jones of Granite Quarry, N. C., state grand dragon of the United Klans of America, was among seven klansmen indicted by the House Wednesday.

"It's going to be a long, hot winter in spite of the blizzard of 1966," Jones told a reporter.

Asked what he thought about some liberal members of congress who voted against the citations, Jones replied: "When you've got so many enemies you need all the friends you can get; you can't afford not to have friends."

Rep Alton A. Lennon, D-N.C., who voted against the citations is not considered liberal, but he told reporters he voted as he did because he thought the klan investigation was made by the wrong committee on a wrong basis.

Redistricting Judged Today

GREENSBORO (AP) — The State of North Carolina will argue Friday that the General Assembly "acted in good faith" and attempted to meet the U. S. Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" mandate in drafting a congressional redistricting plan.

Assistant Atty. Gen. James Bullock will present the state's case before a three-judge federal court and ask the panel to approve House and Senate reapportionment plans and the congressional realignment scheme.

Renn Drum, the young Winston-Salem attorney who caused the realignment, has challenged the congressional plan, but not the House and Senate reapportionment.

Bullock said in Raleigh he would present arguments for all three plans, although just the congressional has been challenged.

"You can't assume the court is not interested in the House and Senate," he said.

"We will simply give a mathematical analysis of the plan," he said, "and show the good faith of the General Assembly in enacting it."

The fact the legislature accomplished the thony job in five days, he said, "has a bearing on the total picture."

Snow Costs State Millions

RALEIGH (AP) North Carolina National Guardsmen were alerted Thursday to move into snowbound northwestern counties where the state estimates snow removal and road repairs will cost up to $4 million.

The guardsmen will be called only if there is more snow, said Charles Dunn, administrative assistant to Gov. Dan Moore. And then only four-wheel drive vehicles and drivers will be needed.

Dunn said Gov. Moore, vacationing in Florida, has kept abreast of conditions in the northwestern region where there is up to 30 inches of snow and drifts up to eight feet.

Primary roads were open, some only one-way, and up to 90 per cent of the secondary roads were open.

Keith Hundley, Highway Commission information officer, said 175-200 men were working around the clock to clear roads in Avery, Ashe, Watauga, Alleghany, Surry and Yadkin counties.

New Highway In Piedmont

I-77 will connect Charlotte with Cleveland, Ohio, a distance of 496 miles.

A public hearing will be held in Charlotte next Thursday on the 15.2-mile section from Charlotte to Cornelius. The State Highway Department will open bids Feb. 22 on construction of the 8.5 miles from Cornelius to Mooresville.

The present U.S. 21 will be used as the northbound lane from Cornelius, in Mecklenburg County, to Mount Mourne in Iredell County.

The target date for the completion of the Cornelius-Mount Mourne section is 1967, but the section from Mount Mourne to Mooresville, which will include a causeway across an arm of Lake Norman, will not be ready for use until 1968.

LBJ Pleased With Results Of U.N. Plan

UNITED NATIONS, (AP) — After two days of public debate on Viet Nam, U.N. diplomats today began a round of intensive private talks which the United States regards as part of a new peace offensive.

The public debate may be resumed later, but informed quarters said President Johnson's primary objective in bringing the Viet Nam problem before the U. N. Security Council was to help stimulate further peace moves. The informants said this has been achieved.

The President was understood to have acted on a recommendation by Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg and Secretary of State Dean Rusk after the administration had concluded last weekend that North Viet Nam's Ho Chi Minh had slammed the door on the December - January peace offensive.

There are indications that the United States may be content to keep the U.N. negotiations on a private basis — at least for the present. Future public debate in the Security Council, however, has not been ruled out. If agreement can be reached, for example, Council members might decide it was desirable to formalize the accord.

Goldberg himself is participating in a round of consultations with members of the 15-nation Council. He expects to talk with each member, including Soviet Ambassador Nikolia T. Fedorenko.

Informed quarters said he takes it for granted that the talks certainly will lead to contacts with North Viet Nam and Red China.

A U.N. spokesman said Secretary - General Thant also is engaged in private discussions. The spokesman said Thant "still feels that the nonaligned countries could contribute significantly toward a peaceful settlement."

GI Bill Lacks LBJ's Approval

WASHINGTON (AP) — Permanent education and loan benefits for men and women who serve in the armed forces would be provided under a bill approved Thursday by the House Veterans Committee.

The Johnson administration has proposed that such benefits be limited to veterans who served in dangerous areas. It objects to the cost of the House Committee bill, estimated at $335 million during the first year of operation.

About 3 1-2 million veterans would be affected immediately, since it would cover servicemen who were in uniform since early in 1955, when the Korean War GI benefits program ended.

The Senate last year passed an even more costly version, estimated at $400 million in its first year.

Speaker of the House John W. McCormack, D-Mass., announced that the House version will be called up Monday under a suspension-of-the-rules procedure that requires a two-thirds majority for passage and prevents amendments.

The aim is to prevent Republican from offering amendments that would increase the benefits and the cost. Chairman Olin E. Teague, D-Tex., said Republicans on the Veterans Committee made numerous attempts to increase the benefits while the bill was being drafted but that all were defeated.

Teague said Committee approval was by unanimous vote.

The bill's major provisions:

— All servicemen who were on duty for at least 180 days after Jan. 31, 1955, would be entitled to one month of education or training for each month spent in uniform, with a maximum of 36 months. Payments for full-time students would be $100 monthly for men without dependents, $125 a month for those with one dependent, and $150 for those with more than one. The scale in the Senate bill is $10 a month higher in each category. Unlike the program in effect in World War II, tuition would not be paid.

The education benefits would become effective on June 1 and would have to be completed within eight years of the date of discharge. In the case of men already discharged, the time limit would be eight years from June 1

— The Veterans Administration would guarantee private home and farm purchase loans up to a maximum guarantee of $7,500 and could make direct loans up to $17,500 if private financing is not available.

But, Judge, I . . .

SPRINGFIELD, MASS (AP) — A Westfield man was sentenced Thursday to serve 8-10 years in state prison for assault with a lighted cigarette.

Robert Arkoette, 32, pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon.

Judge Edward J. Desaulnier Jr. imposed the sentence in Superior Court when he was told Arkoette had jammed a lighted cigarette into the cheek of a Westfield woman.

Sgt. Snow Flecker

The 47-year-old Rauser flicks and brushes snow and ice off city parking peters.

Top priority of his job is to make sure the channel over which coins travel is kept clear.

Rauser said he's been snow flecking for eight years, and he's proud that there has been no snow "unflecked" in his area.

Nude Nabbers Strike Again

ROME (AP)—Enemies of the nude and alledgedly lewd struck in Italy again today. Without warning police stripped from the walls of a sedate Rome art gallery 11 paintings and drawings of unclothed ladies by two modern masters.

Seizure of the works, by the late Austrian painters Egon Schiele and Gustav Klimt, left the directors of the Marlborough Art Gallery gasping in astonishment.

But after what happened in Tarquinia, north of Rome, two days ago no one should have been surprised. Police in that community made the rounds of the newstands and bookshops, impounding 5,000 postcards on the ground they were obscene.

The postcards were reproductions of 6th Century B. C. paintings of thet remarkably uninhibited high jinx of Etruscan men and women, and scenes from Etruscan mythology. They have been on sale for 50 years, and anyone who wants to see the originals in larger size can do so by visiting the Tarquinia public museum and Etruscan tombs.

The drawings and water colors seized in Rome depicted no gamboling or classical fun and games. They were paintings of nudes, no more shocking to the seasoned eye than the countless thousands of unclad ladies, ancient and modern, adorning other galleries, museums of palaces in culture-rich Italy.

WHAT THE WESLEY FOUNDATION IS DOING

(For one thing, trying to live together like a Church ought to) (and then giving our life away).

That Means:

WORSHIPPING: At eleven o'clock on Sunday mornings, with sermons delivered by Chaplains Robert L. Johnson and Banks O. Godfrey, Jr. We think there should be at least one service especially for people in the university.

JABBING PEOPLE'S CONSCIENCES: in lots of times and places, but definitely at The Sunday Afternoon Symposium at four o'clock.

THE AMERICAN CONSCIENCE ABOUT WAR

Feb. 6: Two interpretations of the Place of War in the American Conscience: by John Wayne Lasley and Raymond H. Dawson, with responses from Paul Dickson, Bob Pitts, and Eric van Loon.

Feb. 13 War in the Rise of American Civilization: a film, The Orozco Murals, with commentary by Prof. William Geer and The Rev. Tom Davis.

Feb. 20: Bertold Brecht's The Private Lives of the Master Race, a play directed by Terry Gregory.

After that, four weeks will be devoted to "The Quality of Life in the University at Chapel Hill."

STUDYING: in The Collegium, a modest curriculum which is an occasion for discovering the foundations of the Christian Faith. The real ones. It lasts for two semesters: the first one has Soren Kierkegaard showing us who and what makes sense out of human life; the second one has Reinhold Niebuhr laying bare the unique freedom of men before God and in the world. We'll start listening to these guys the week of February 14.

For freshmen there is a study group and an organized bull session. For faculty and grad students, "The Poetry of W. H. Auden." For anybody, "The Theology of Paul Tillich."

LOOKING AT PAINTINGS AND DRINKING COFFEE: all kinds of paintings (Chagall, Dix, Swift, Rouault this month) and all kinds of coffee, in The Gallery, open every evening, except Monday and Tuesday, from eight until one. Entertainment occasionally, too (Leon Rooke read stories one night).

We live at 214 Pittsboro Street, just to the right of the Carolina Inn, in that sunken beauty of a building designed by Albert Cameron. But he's not the only Architect we believe in.

The 'Kid' And The 'Giants'

Greensboro Audience Sees 'Billy' In Action

By GENE RECTOR
DTH Sports Editor

The National Basketball Association is a world of giants—of 6-4 guards, 6-8 forwards and seven foot centers.

A pale, 6-5 forward from the University of North Carolina has joined this world.

Wednesday evening in Greensboro's Memorial Coliseum, Billy Cunningham came with his Philadelphia teammates to battle the St. Louis Hawks.

Billy, who had thrilled Tar Heel audiences for three seasons as an all-America performer for Coach Dean Smith at UNC, was greeted by a sell-out crowd of more than 8,000. Several hundred more were turned away at the gate.

But the opening seconds of action proved to be a new and different experience for these Tar Heel fans. Billy was on the bench.

Of course the "Kid" — as he is affectionately known to Tar Heel fans—has quite respectable competition on this Philadelphia club.

Hal Greer and Wally Jones, the former an NBA all-star at his position and the latter an all-America at Villanova, hold down the guard positions.

At center is the most prolific scorer in the history of professional basketball — 7-1 Wilt Chamberlain.

The game started slowly for both clubs. The two teams swapped baskets for the first few minutes of the opening quarter. Then the Hawks began to find the range—forging a four point advantage at 17-13 with 3:03 remaining.

Seconds later Cunningham got his chance. Substitution for Lucius Jackson at forward, he stole a pass from St. Louis guard Richie Guerin, dribbled the length of the court and layed it in. The "coliseum roared."

But even Billy could not promote a Philadelphia come-back. A cool, cool shooting hand (28.6) left the '76ers behind 46-33 at the half.

Cunningham had done his bit, however. His halftime total of six points placed second only to Chamberlain's seven.

But Philadelphia began to find the range in the second half. Cunningham did get the opening shot this time.

With 8:17 to go in the third quarter the score was tied at 51-all and with 4:44 remaining, a Chamberlain foul shot gave the '76ers a 56-55 lead.

Of course the opening minutes of action—which saw the Hawks stealing the show—proved to be more representative of the final decision.

Philadelphia carried a 70-67 lead into the fourth quarter, but it proved to be insufficient.

With five minutes remaining in the game, St. Louis forward Cliff Hagan hit a long, arching hook shot for an 83-81 St. Louis lead and Philadelphia never recovered. The Hawks finally took the decision 96-89.

But "Billy Cunningham fans" were not entirely disappointed. The former Tar Heel performer finished with 16 points although he could hit only five of 16 shots from the floor and six of 13 from the free throw line.

"I just wasn't hitting at all," Billy explained after the game. "I'm having to shoot from outside most of the time with the pros and I'm not getting the chance to drive as much as I did in college. It takes a while to adjust."

The real Cunningham crowd-pleaser came midway in the third quarter—in a defensive role, of all things. Cunningham found himself in the minority on a two-on-one situation. St. Louis player-coach Richie Guerin took the pass from Len Wilkins and lofted the shot toward the basket. Instantly Cunningham was in the air, slapped the shot, and shoved it out-of-bounds. The fans loved it.

Clark's Play Leads Frosh Win

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Big Rusty Clark turned on the steam in the second half last night to shake his unbeaten Tar Baby club from the lethargic shackles which bound them in the early going. Rusty's all-around fine play in the period, in which he scored 12 of his game-high 21 total, gave the frosh the push they needed to roll to an 80-54 rout of Wake Forest, assuring them of at least a tie for first place in the Big Four final standings.

But don't ever let anyone tell you that long layoffs make no difference in the play of a really good team. Because they do, and the 19-day exam break which the frosh broke last night was a perfect case-in-point.

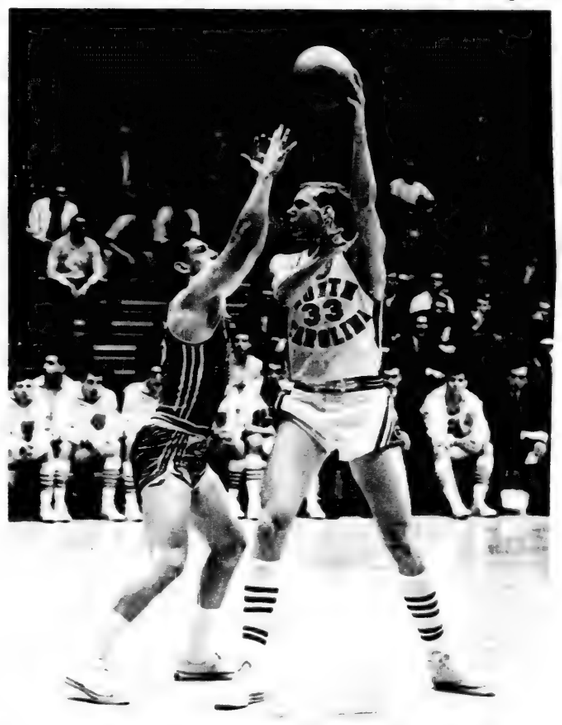
"Yes, I'd say that the layoff was pretty evident," quoth Coach Larry Brown after his boys had left the court with their ninth straight win. "Although we had what I thought was a good second half, we were kind of sluggish. The boys gave us a great job defensively, especially in that second half, and of course it was their usual good team effort."

On a night when the team's overall play never quite jelled, the big man from Fayetteville was the difference. Rusty came down with a rebound 14 times—he was the only player near the teens in that department—and worked the pivot beautifully to hit 10-of 14 shots.

"Rusty had an exceptional second half," Brown said, and the statistics bear him out in explaining the UNC pickup from a mere eight-point midway lead.

SCORING: UNC — Clark 21, Brown 11, Bunting 11, Grubar 11, Tuttle 8, Bostick 9, Adams 4, Camnitz 2, Dodson 2, Royall 1, Davis, Rindfleisch, Harrison.

WF — Montgomery 16, Randall 12, White 9, Bertram 9, Berwind 4, Heiberger 2, Clack 1, Chapman 1, Brannan, Moore.



YOU CAN'T HAVE IT—Seven-foot Rusty Clark plays keep-away with an unidentified Deaclet during the first half of last night's freshmen encounter between Carolina and Wake Forest.

Mugs Slug Mites In Mural Action

By BILL HASS
DTH Sports Writer

The Mangum Mugs slugged their residence hall teammates, the Mangum Mites, 93-52, in intramural basketball action on Wednesday. Tom Kirkman was the leading Mug scorer with 29 points while Joe Dunn added 17 and Frank Harrison 16. Keith Drum paced the Mites with 22 points.

The Med Mooses I shaded Law III White in overtime, 52-51. McNaughton's 24 points and Newsome's 14 points led the Mooses. Browning had 18, Katz 13 and Tomlinson 13 in a losing effort for the Lawmen.

Dental SCHOOL A routed the Baptist Student Union, 90-33. Pleasants scored 32 points for the Dentists and was helped by Hedgecoe's 21 points and Finger's 20 points.

Other scores: Stacy Studs 69, Graham B. Balls 36; Graham Bells 55, Everett Trojans 22; Ruffin Rebels 41, Manly Riverrats 28; Geology Coprolites 47, Blooming Idiots 45; Teague Trojans 89, Parker Patrol 49.

FCA 61, Law II Blue 52; Law III Blue 33, Med School White 31; The Falcons 54, Law I White 46; Law School I Blue 62, Town Men Flashes 54; Stat Grads 48, MBA's 30; Peacocks 82, Biochemistry Grads 25.

In volleyball action, the Teague Trojans won the residence hall championship by defeating the Alexander Mooses, 9-7, 9-11, 11-7. The members of the team are Mike McLaughlin, Jim Sanford, Tom Taylor, Dave Adeimy, Jerry Break and John Dickson.

The Pi Kap Phi Baena took a fraternity semifinal match from Sigma Nu A, 14-3, 12-2. Lou Bunte, Bob White, John Wainie, John Falconer, Bill Early, Buddy Sensenbach, Tim Carr and Richard Watson compose the team.

Phi Delt Blue won a quarterfinal match from Pi Lamb II, 9-5, 15-3.

The graduate division matches are in the semifinal round.

Cartwright Carmichael was Carolina's first All-American in basketball. He was picked for the 1923 and 1924 teams.

Students will also be able to purchase tickets starting Tuesday February 8 to the North-South Doubleheader, in Charlotte February 18 and 19 between N.C. State, Clemson, South Carolina, and UNC.

Daily Tar Heel SPORTS

'Musical Chairs' Is New Heel Defense

The action on the court sometimes resembles five men chasing a greased pig. Basketball scouts call it a "pressure defense." Coach Dean Smith of North Carolina calls it "musical chairs."

"We really aren't doing anything new in basketball," Smith repeats over end over to fans who have suddenly discovered the Tar Heels and their antics. "I call it 'musical chairs because at a given signal our defensive men switch. When we switch is our secret.

"We pick up the opposition in the back court. We press them and harass them as best we can. Our aim is to destroy organization. We encourage the bad pass, the turnover, the double dribble. We seek to destroy poise."

The great UCLA teams of recent years have given fame to pressure tactics. Coach Smith was playing the same kind of defenses almost 15 years ago.

"My coaches at Kansas (Dr. Phog Allen, Dick Harp) first installed the press," said Smith. "That was back in 1952 and 1953. We won a national championship and were runner - up the next year. Since then, a lot of folks have done it. We're doing basically the same this year. It may look new, but it isn't."

Smith feels the pressure defenses of the Tar Heels have upped the squad's shooting percentage, which is at an all-time high of 54 per cent for the first 15 games of the season. Says he: "We are intercepting the ball quite often and getting lay - ups. This pads our shooting accuracy considerably."

The Tar Heels, who have won 10, lost 5 going into the Wake game have found a rugged defense necessary. They aren't big by basketball standards and keeping the foe off balance is a must.

"Actually, our rebounding is a pleasant surprise," admits Smith. "I really had misgivings before the season began. We pretty much have held our own. One reason is Larry Miller, our fine sophomore. He has more than done his part, although he's only 6-3".

The press comes into being partly because of Carolina's modest size. Smith hopes his boys can make foes give up the ball before they get their first shot on offense. Or make them take the off-balance shot.

"We have given up an average of about 76 points per game," evaluates Smith "and there are some who may say that is not good defense. I counter by saying we are playing very good defense. The speed of the game means that points are going to be scored. We're averaging about 85 ourselves.

"Going at our rapid pace, we'll never set a defensive mark for the NCAA record book. But look at the teams which lead in defensive points-per-game. Most of them play deliberate or slow-down basketball. If we hid the ball on offense, maybe we could hold our foes to 50 and 60 points per game. But that isn't our style."

Carolina's present speed kings are a delight for fans. They move and scrap and show something different every outing. They have been in the thick of every game they've played until the final moments. They have a never - say - die attitude.

Bob Lewis is the scoring leader with a 29 - point average. Miller, the do - it - all soph, averages 23. Tom Gauntlett, Johnny Yokley and Bob Bennett are the other starters. Jimmy Smithwick, Donnie Moe and Mark Mirken have contributed much by coming off the bench with good performances.

"I'm pleased with this group," smiles Smith. "We've played some of the nation's best and we've won twice as often as we have lost. With a softer schedule, we might be showing a great record at this time. But I don't want soft touches. And neither do the players. We're determined to give even a better and more spirited performance the second half of the season."

Football Leaves Memories

By SANDY TREADWELL
DTH Sports Writer

The football season is over. The hours in the stands and the weekends spent hypnotically gazing at the tube have passed. Most of us have seen so many teams and so many stadiums this fall that it's hard to remember who played who, and who won what. But some memory always sticks. Here's mine:

I watched the dark grimy walls speed by and held on to a hand strap as the subway car buckled and swayed. Finally the tunnel ended, the train screamed to a stop, and the doors slid open.

I was pushed, almost thrown, out onto the platform by an anxious mob of fans. My eyes swept across the huge tan walls of one of my favorite buildings on earth. Ah, I thought, Yankee Stadium — heaven on earth. Boy this is going to be a fantastic afternoon.

I hurried down iron steps and then ran across the street towards gate B. Bubbles and Piggy walked casually behind.

"Tickets say gate B don't they Piggy," I asked.

"Yeah. Relax. My father got them. Says they're as good as they come."

I walked by young boys and old men hawking buttons and yearbooks. I weaved passed excited kids, suspicious policemen, and groups of men carrying binoculars and bottles.

Then I saw a door in the cement wall with the words PLAYERS ONLY block lettered in black above it. I stopped and smiled. I imagined myself leaping from a long sleek limosine. Two beautiful blonds dangled from the thickness of my forearms and my faithful butler followed bearing all my polished trophies. I held a football because, like all great quarterbacks, it had become merely an extension of my right arm.

A group of boys pleaded for my autograph. I took time out to sign because not only was I the world's greatest athlete but a prince of a guy to boot.

I watched my ticket get torn in half and then plowed through a turnstile. I heard a roar from the inside of the stadium. Please fans don't, I begged, it's really not necessary.

As the name Tucker Frederickson emerged from the microphones the roar was repeated. I looked down at the green grass and the white goalposts and saw men in blue jerseys run onto the field.

An usher jingled the change in his pockets. "This way," he ordered and lead Bubbles, Piggy, and myself past rows of people. No. Not there. Not behind that post. Anything but that. PLEASE.

From my seat I could see ten yards, an end zone and, of course, the damn post.

"Great seats Piggy," I muttered. "The best in the house."

Soon after the game, a big man sitting behind us started a fight. He spilled his beer as he threw a punch and I felt it ooze down the back of my neck.

And all at once I knew that I was going to cry.

Dorm Building Continues

The second phase of development in University Square in down town Chapel Hill is now well underway.

The current project includes a multi - story residence tower for 522 students and be a commons building connecting the new tower with Granville Hall, which was completed in September, 1965.

The commons building will contain dining facilities for the total 1,014 students expected to occupy the complex.

All buildings will be completely fireproof and will have an exterior of brick veneer. The grounds will be landscaped and will include ample parking space for residents and guests.

The new residence tower and the dining hall will be available for occupancy the 1966 fall semester.

Basic student suites will consist of two large connecting rooms. Although two students will share a room, each student will have his or her own study and living area in the room.

All suites contain a connecting private bath which includes tub and shower facilities.

Other features of the rooms include wall to wall carpeting, individual closets, and a large desk - dresser with ample study space and nine storage drawers. Beds will have box springs and mattresses and all student rooms will be serviced with private telephones.

The buildings will be centrally heated and air conditioned with temperature controls in each suite.

Spacious "group association" rooms will be located throughout both towers, including individual lounges with television on each floor and well equipped recreation rooms.

Each tower will also have a complete laundry room with washers, dryers, and ironing boards. Other facilities will include vending machine service, pick - up and delivery service for laundry and dry cleaning and trunk storage rooms

SG, Tar Heel Invite Aptheker

STUDENT LEADERS (l-r) George Nicholson, Paul Dickson and Ernie McCrary announce their invitation to Communist Herbert Aptheker at a press conference in the Carolina Inn yesterday afternoon.

Paul Dickson To Address Special Trustees Meeting

Student Government and The Daily Tar Heel announced yesterday afternoon that they extended an invitation and received acceptance from Communist Herbert Aptheker to speak here March 9, on the Carolina Forum.

Student Body President Paul Dickson III, DTH Editor Ernie McCrary and George Nicholson, chairman of the Carolina Forum said they were expanding the invitation of the Students for a Democratic Society who originally invited Aptheker to speak here.

McCrary said they extended the invitation because "the basic question of whether Dr. Aptheker should be allowed to speak has been confused and clouded by the association of the invitation with a group identified, justifiably or not, as leftist radicals.

McCrary said the group hoped that by extending the invitation this complicating factor facing the board of trustees, who must decided under the amended spaker ban law whether Aptheker can speak, will be based on academic freedom and not on emotional opposition to the inviting organization.

"We are united in our opposition to Dr. Aptheker's views and actions, but we are also united in our belief that he has the right to speak," McCrary said.

At the 3 p.m. press conference in the Carolina Inn Dickson said, "It is our feeling that the best defense against communism is a thorough understanding of it.

"We must know the various shapes and attitudes this philosophy can take to defeat it and the best way to learn is to see it and meet it face-to-face," Dickson said.

Dickson also announced that Robert Welch, founder of the John Birch Society and graduate of UNC, will speak here Feb. 13.

Speaking on behalf of the Carolina Forum Nicholson said their invitation in no way is an indication of any support for SDS.

"We still feel that any student organization has the right to invite and sponsor individuals without the curtailment of their right of free speech," Nicholson said.

Dickson told the press gathering that he had received permission from University officials to speak to the executive committee of the board of trustees Monday.

The committee will make their decision at that time as to whether Aptheker can speak on campus.

"I will state that it is the feeling of the overwhelming majority of this student body that Aptheker should be allowed to speak," Dickson said.

He said he did not know at this time what further action might be taken, legal or other-

Dickson's Proposal

The following is a proposal by Student Body President Paul Dickson III regarding visiting speakers:

1. The officers of the recognized organization, desiring to use University facilities for their speaker, will inform their faculty advisor of their invitation.
2. The student head of the organization will submit the following information to the Chancellor at least a week prior to the speaker's arrival:
   (a) Name of the sponsoring organization and topic.
   (b) Name and brief biographical data of the invited speaker.
   (c) The date and place of the speaker's presentation.
   (d) The topic to be covered by the speaker.
3. Upon receipt of the above, the Chancellor may at his discretion require anyone of, or all three of the following:
   a) That a senior faculty member preside over the meeting.
   (b) That the speaker answer any and all questions about his topic at the meeting.
   (c) That an opposing viewpoint be presented at the same meeting.

Mavericks Begin 2 Day Heart Hike

Residents of Maverick House began their 140-mile Hinton James Hike for Hearts yesterday afternoon with a big send-off from over 200 residents of Burgaw, N. C.

The hike is being made in commemoration of the 171st anniversary of the walk Hinton James made in 1795 from Burgaw to Chapel Hil to become the first student at UNC.

Heart Fund officials and Burgaw Mayor M. Baker made speeches at the Burgaw Court House before the first three representatives of Maverick House began their part of the relay hike.

School was let out early in Burgaw so that the children could witness the beginning of the hike.

The students of Maverick House, wearing their familiar blue cowboy hats, were given an official escort out of Burgaw by the State Highway Patrol and the Burgaw Sheriff's Department. The streets were lined with arrows saying "Help your Heart Fund."

Mrs. Everett (Ann James) Durham, great granddaughter of Hinton James placed a kiss on the cheek of one of the hikers as they began their walk to Chapel Hill.

The students were joined in the first part of their hike by State Representative Roy Rowe, Mayor Baker, President of the Pender County Heart Association Dr. Harold Peedin and representatives of several newspapers and TV stations.

Dr. Peedin said: "During the 50-hour trip of 140 miles one resident of North Carolina will die of heart disease for every mile that is covered."

A telegram received from Dr. Paul W. White, founder of the American Heart Association in 1924 and heart specialist to Eisenhower said, "Hearty congratulations and appreciation" to the residents of Maverick House for their outstanding promotion of the Heart Fund in the Hinton James Hike for Hearts.

The hikers are expected to arrive in Chapel Hill Sunday afternoon in time for the ground breaking ceremony for the Hinton James Dormitory to be held at 4:30.

Man-to-man switch: Liz Taylor in action.

Traveling: Draftee headed for Viet Nam.

A Mere $200,000

The Daily Tar Heel received a check in payment for an advertisement yesterday from The Man Store in Asheville.

The bill was for $7. The check said to pay to the order of the DTH $200,007. Now we could all retire for the rest of the semester and live very happily.

However, there are those among us who are honest, so we sent the check back indicating the $200,000.

Oh well, maybe the address was wrong and it will come back to us, and we can test our strength once again.

The Crumbling Kingdom

Chancellor Sharp has called this place "the kingdom of the mind."

Perhaps that is what we have here. There are over 12,000 students, millions of books and numerous faculty members. We also have many buildings and hundreds of secretaries.

Yes this is a real mind factory and it is constantly working.

But lately, considering the Aptheker controversy and other rows, this kingdom of the mind" has developed a fierce headache.

LBJ Flies To Honolulu Today; Viet Nam Talks

WASHINGTON (AP) —President Johnson announced Friday he will fly to Hawaii today for three days of talks with the South Vietnamese chief of state and with top American officials from Saigon.

Johnson, holding an unannounced news conference in his oval office, said he will leave for Honolulu this afternoon and will meet there with the Nguyen Kao Ky, and with Chief of State Nguyen Van Thieu.

He said he wanted to "review our complete program" in Viet Nam and with the Vietnamese officials and with such Americans as Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of American forces there.

Four members of Johnson's cabinet will go along.

Lodge and Westmoreland will meet Johnson in Honolulu. Members of their staff will be with them.

Ky and Thieu have accepted invitations tc join the chief executive in Hawaii and will arrive Sunday.

The conferences presumably will be held at the giant Pearl Harbor Navy Base, although Johnson told reporters details still were being worked out.

The President said he will leave Honolulu late Tuesday night and return to the White House Wednesday.

Cabinet officers who will accompany Johnson are Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman and Secretary of Welfare John W. Gardner.

Johnson said the presence of Freeman and Gardner in what he termed "the very limited White House working group" reflects his own desire to follow through on recent statements by Ky urging progress in the fields of education, health and agriculture in South Viet Nam.

Johnson said he has been wanting for some time to meet with Lodge and Westmoreland and had last week explored the possibility of their coming here. He said he learned Westmoreland will be in Hawaii this weekend and therefore set up the broad scale meetings there.

He said he will attend briefing sessions covering both military and non-military affairs.

Asked whether the meetings will be the prelude to any major shift in American policy, Johnson said:

"That is not anticipated at all. I wouldn't anticipate changes one way or the other."

However, he added "we might learn something" that would lead to improvement or strengthening of the anti-Communist effort in South Viet Nam.

One reporter asked if Johnson will report to the American people on his return.

"I'm reporting to them right now," the President said. He added that newsmen accompanying him will be filled in to the maximum extent possible on the progress of the Honolulu talks and the press will relay the information to the public.

Speaking of his meetings with key figures in the Vietnamese situation, Johnson said at one point:

"I would like to know them a little better and I would like them to know me better."

The President was asked about his assessment of public reaction to his action last weekend resuming bombings of North Viet Nam.

Johnson said polls indicate some 70 per cent of the American people approved" resumption of the bombings.

He said he became convinced all possiblities of bringing Hanoi to the conference table through his "peace offensive" had been exhausted and that he determined to "pursue other avenues," mentioning specifically the United Nations.

UNC Gets $90,000

The U. S. Public Health Service has given almost $90,000 in grants to the North Carolina Schools of Dentistry and Public Health.

The money is to be used for general research and research training.

The dental school will receive $31,700 and the public health school will get $57,714.

Students Circulate Aptheker Petition

By JOHN GREENBACKER
DTH Staff Writer

An independent student group will circulate a petition in all campus living units today which protests opposition to Dr. Herbert Aptheker's scheduled March ninth speech here.

The same organization has tenative plans to form a motorcade which will travel to Raleigh Monday to express student views on the issue to University trustees.

The student group sponsoring the petition is being led by Sandra Burden, Nancy Barret and Charles Evans.

Miss Burden, a former Student Legislator who has been active in Student Government, said 100 copies of the petition would be distributed throughout the campus.

Aptheker is a leading American communist theoretician who recently defied a State Department travel ban by visiting North Viet Nam.

His appearance on campus is being opposed by supporters of the 1963 North Carolina Speaker Ban Law, which prohibited known communists and subversive Fifth Amendment pleaders from speaking at state supported colleges and universities.

The law was modified last November by a special session of the General Assembly, and the power to regulate speakers was given to University trustees.

Governor Dan K. Moore, chairman of the Board of Trustees, has publicly announced his opposition to Aptheker's appearance.

Here is the text of the petition:

"We, the undersigned students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, because of our belief in and commitment to democratic principles in general and the United States Constitution with its Bill of Rights in particular, feel it is our duty and responsibility to affirm our dedication to free speech and academic freedom.

We fear that the denial of Dr. Aptheker to speak on our campus at this time would set a dangerous precedent at our great state university.

We would also like to firmly state our total and complete opposition to the Communist Party and all that it embodies."

"We are so upset about this thing that we feel we must do something," Miss Burden said yesterday.

"I am a conservative," she said, "but I hate the narrow-mindedness that some conservatives show.

"Our troops are fighting in Viet Nam to preserve democratic freedoms, but yet we are being denied the freedoms of democratic principls at home."

Miss Burden said she felt state anti-communists are "biting off their nose to spite their face."

The three student leaders of the group decided to circulate their petition yesterday after a political science professor told their class that students should take a stand on the issue.

The professor, Dr. William Fleming, accused Gov. Moore yesterday of "unwarranted political interference in the academic affairs of a free university.

"This is clearly an infringement on freedom of speech," he said. "I have full confidence in the students of UNC to ferret out for themselves that which is the truth.

Fleming said he was neither a socialist nor a Communist, but was a registered member of the Republican Party in California.

He said he knew of many faculty members who had plans to travel to Raleigh Monday for the meeting of the University Trustees.

"These are not just the junior faculty members, either," he said.

McCorkel Not Divulging SDS Membership Roster

James McCorkle the outgoing chairman of the Students for a Democratic Society declined today to divulge the names of members of the S.D.S., the organization that invited Herbert Aptheker to speak on the University campus March 9.

To identify the names of all of the members would subject them to "harassment," as well as hostile phone calls and other pressure that would be "intolerable," said McCorkle.

McCorkle resigned as head of the S.D.S. at the height of the controversy this week over an invitation to Aptheker, said to be a theoretician of the McCorkle said he wanted to devote more time to his studies. However, there were other indications of dissession in the membership of the S.D.S., according to Prof. C. O. Cathey, Dean of Student Affairs.

McCorkle said there have been instances, on other campuses, such as University of California at Berkeley, in which S.D.S. members were subjected to unpleasant incidents after it was made public who the members were.

McCorkle previously estimated the membership of the S.D.S. at UNC at between 20 and 25. Other estimates taken by those who have observed demonstrations and congregations of the organization figure the membership at from eight to 20, including graduate students, undergraduates and faculty.

Poli Sci Prof To Speak

Dr. William Fleming of the North Carolina Department of Political Science will speak in Morrison Residence College tomorrow at 8 p.m., on the role of the student in the university.

Fleming's speech is in conjunction with the present controversy over freedom of speech and the relations between the students, faculty and adminitration in the University itself. He will also speak on the board of trustees and the North Carolina General Assembly.

The meeting will be held in the Morrison lounge and the public is invited.

Academic Freedom

Senator Robert Morgan of Harnett County will speak here Feb. 21 under the auspices of the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors AAUP). He will discuss academic freedom.

Morgan's address will be at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall and will be opened to the public.

"We're very pleased to have him come here to speak," Dr. Joseph Straley, president of the UNC-AAUP chapter. "We want to explore the meaning of academic freedom to someone not directly associated with the academic process."

Morgan, chairman of the East Carolina board of trustees, vigorously opposed amendment to the speaker ban law. It will be Morgan's second speech on the campus this year.

Class Ring Sale

North Carolina class rings will be on sale in Y-Court from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Feb. 8, 9 and 10. The sale is open to juniors, seniors, graduate students, and alumni.

Both men's and women's rings will be sold. Delivery on orders made at the sale will be made in approximately eight weeks.
